In fact, on second thought, we see that expressions of this sort are not really as foreign even to us as we might claim. How often does a week pass which does not find us, mentally at least, consigning someone or something to another sphere? It is a common habit, admittedly unwholesome, for people to burst out with a "Damn!" at the most trivial provocation, yet these would-be moralists and aesthetes take to task author, director and cast for permitting characters in the play to say more than "Gracious!" at happenings which may influence their entire lives. The use of swear words and curses on the stage is indubitably out-of-place and unnecessary in certain cases. We all have seen the supposedly funny comedian who lets "God damn" and "Hell" fly right and left, under the impression that he is being extremely humorous. There is a certain class of people who doubtless find this amusing and highly entertaining, but most of us are slightly nauseated by these revolting exhibitions of foul language.

On the other hand, however, there are times when the judicial use of swearing—which is, after all, but a form of slang—helps to create a true, living picture of the people and situations which the playwright has endeavoured to portray. At one point in this play, for instance, the female member of the vaudeville trio learns that the talking picture upon which her whole future depends has been ruined because the director was cracking nuts during the sequences. Throwing up her arms in disgust she exclaims, "That was George eating his goddam Indian nuts!" Some of us, at least, certainly would be tempted to say more than that!

And after all, it is not the actual speaking of the words to which moralists should object, rather it is the thought behind them. Yet an attempt to censor thinking would be clearly hopeless. The underpaid actor who bursts forth with a "Damn!" on losing a racing bet is no more to be censured than the clergyman golf enthusiast, of whom we have all heard, who, on being asked how he refrained from cursing his bad shots, which were many, replied that he simply spat upon the turf, "and where I spit the grass never grows again!"

Physical Training or Physical Education

The death of Mr. Donald Barton, chief gymnasium instructor for the past sixteen years, leaves a vacancy in the University Physical Training staff which will be indeed hard to fill. Mr. Barton was one of the pioneers in the work around the University and his valuable experience was of untold value to the students with whom he came in contact.

However, since some sort of reorganization will be necessary, it would not seem amiss to reorganize along a slightly different line. In the past we have regarded physical training as a period in which we were exposed to exercise of a more or less violent nature. While this, perhaps, is a very beneficial manner of spending an hour, we believe that the benefits would be increased if, instead of devoting the entire hour to physical training, part at least of the period should be devoted to physical education.

While we admit the necessity of keeping the undergraduates in perfect physical condition, we believe it to be just as important that they be taught the theory of keeping in condition. An education in the care of one's body may be of some practical use to the person who has freed himself from the necessity of doing his compulsory P.T., but the actual experience gained under the present system is of value only in keeping in more or less normal physical condition during the short time which the student happens to be taking the course. In fact, it is not even a course, it is only a period of exercise.

We would suggest that all undergraduates be given a training, (sketchy though it would necessarily be), in the fundamental necessities for the care of the body. First aid would also be of benefit. This we believe would be far more beneficial to the students, and would contribute in no small way to his education. It would give them something which would be far more beneficial to them later in life, when they could apply their knowledge, than the thirty-six hours of exercise which they take during two years of their undergraduate days. The one has a temporary value, the other permanent.

S.C.M. Campaign

The Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir:

We should like to draw the attention of your readers to the fact that the Student Christian Movement is holding this week its financial campaign in the University. The movement is dependent wholly on subscriptions from men and women who are interested in its work. It is scarcely possible that any student is unaware of the movement's endeavour to help students think through religious and social problems themselves, but we may call attention to some visitors who have spoken under the auspices of the S.C.M. this fall (among others): Dr. Wilson Cash, Dr. Wilhelm Pauck, Dr. J. H. Oldham, Rev. Geoffrey Allen and Dr. T. Z. Koo. It is unnecessary for us to detail here the study groups, lectures, worship services and social activities. The S.C.M. has three general secretaries on the campus, Miss Dorothy Fleming, Miss Fredda Peden, and Rev. W. C. Lockhart. It sends a contribution annually to the Student Christian Movement of Canada.

Naturally, the movement requires fairly extensive finances to carry on its work. May we ask the students of the University to contribute in proportion to the value which they see in the S.C.M., as freely as their pocket-books allow? Contributions will be received at either the S.C.M. office in Hart House, or that in the Household Science Building.

Thanking you for your co-operation in making this known among the student body, we are,

Yours very truly,

Harriet Christie, President Women's Council.
J. A. Romeyn, President, Men's Cabinet.

One of the best college stories of the week was told to us by a friend.

From Pacific Union College came the report of a professor who died at the age of 82, leaving a fortune of $500,000—due entirely to strict attention to his duties, endless patience in trying circumstances, a never-failing desire to oblige his students, a readiness to work early or late—

And a $550,000 bequest from an aunt in Australia.—Oklahoma Daily.

PLEASE, NO FOUR HORSEPLAY!

To Coulter, Connelly, Marks, and Gray,
Come let us now warble an ancient lay,
Of lateral passes and forwards and such—

And a prayer that the boys do not fumble too much.

While Coulter gets credit for passing the pill
And catching and running for yardage at will,
Let's eagerly praise his astonishing brain
For calling the plays that will victory gain.

Confounding all linesmen and tacklers galore
Mr. Connelly spears 'em to pile up the score.
He pops up from nowhere to pick off a pass
And crosses the line to be tackled en masse.

We'll shout and we'll gurgle and chortle for fair
To see Mr. Marks spin that ball through the air.
Remind us to question the boys at St. Mike's,
We've a hunch they ran after his passes on bikes.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

St. Thomas Church

The Most Rev. Derwyn Trevor Owen, Archbishop of Toronto and Primate of all Canada, will visit St. Thomas' Church on Sunday, and will preach at the 11 o'clock Choral Eucharist. Dr. Charles Wood's unaccompanied service, mostly in the Phrygian mode, will be sung. The 15th century composer, Vittoria's motet "Jesu dulcis memoria", will be heard. At the 7 p.m. choral evening, the Rev. J. R. Davies, B.A., will preach and Dr. Charles Wood's magnificent anthem "O Thou the central orb" will be sung.

Any play dealing with supernatural events in an old country house, ghostly visitations, and sudden screams in the dark always runs the risk of a precipitous descent from sustained suspense to complete absurdity. Unless a gradual feeling of the terror and mystery of the situation is built up, the play is apt to arouse laughter rather than shudders in its audience. This unfortunately was the case in "Dwellers in the Darkness", the first of two one-act plays presented by the Music and Drama committees of the Ontario College of Education last night.

The actors were extremely capable—the performance of John Russell as the cynical disbeliever who scoffs at the

Mr. Editor:

Your pitiful tale of woe in yesterday's Champus Cat has deeply touched our hearts so that we feel ourselves obligated to shed what light we can upon the affair, that the maiden's heart might perchance be mended.

How well we can visualize the tears which that night must have dampened the fair reporter's pillow. Her anguish of heart and her bitterness of disappointment must have been great, when she failed to see "her loved, her longed for".

Feeling as keenly as we do on the matter, it behoves us to give her com-

VICTORIA SENIORS
DOWN U.C. FRESHIES
WITH SCORE 34-20

Last night in O.C.E. gym the U.C. Freshies went down to defeat at the hands of the sturdy Vic senior team by a score of 34-20. In the first half of the game the Freshies seemed a little bewildered but as the period progressed they settled down and did some really fine work. Erna Laing, on the Vic team, sank some lovely shots, while Alice Elshout on the losing squad was outstanding. The Freshie aggregation, during most of the tussle, kept the tally pretty close, but in the last few minutes of play, the Scarlet and Gold team went on a scoring streak, which clinched the game for them.

Vic Srs.: Maisie Cowan 12, Louise Pryor, Myrtle Robb 2, Marge Leslie 6, Ruby Barrett, Erna Laing 14, Betty Jenkinson, Ruth Leavens, Sheila Brown, Doris Wagstaff.

U.C. Freshies: Margaret Glass 8, Alice Elshout 10, Buntie Lang, Jocelyn Rea, Kitty Guest, Jean MacKenzie, Johnny Marshall 2, Kay Robertson and Dorelle Macellar.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By M. D. S.

The U.C. Freshies put up a good fight last night when they met Victoria Seniors in a first basketball game at the O.C.E. gym. Although the Freshies did great work at the beginning and managed to hold their own well into the second half by keeping the score down to 15-14, the more experienced seniors heaped up the points at the end of the game to win by 34-20. The game showed that the Freshies have good material and promise to make a first-rate team with more practice. So far they have not had much chance against the teams in their group. Margaret Glass and Alice Elshout played well for U.C. while Erna Laing and Maisie Cowan starred for the winners.

U.C. are playing badminton at the Women's Union on Mondays and Wednesdays in the afternoon, and Saturday mornings, and at the Yacht Club on Tuesday and Friday afternoons. The tournament will probably be held at the Yacht Club, as usual, some time after Christmas.

After Christmas will also see the intercollegiate basketball team getting out to practice as soon as the interfaculty games are over. The McGill team are beginning their practices fairly soon and seem pretty confident of having a good team.

Down at McGill they are starting their hockey practices next week. It has not yet been decided when they will start here, but the Athletic Directorate are holding a meeting at the beginning of next week to arrange the date and to discuss the possibilities of an intercollegiate hockey team.

Lengthen Their String of Victories

Jr. Meds and Jr. U.C. volleyballers lengthened their respective string of victories as each chalked up a decisive win in yesterday's double-header played in the upper gym at Hart House. In the first tilt Jr. U.C. downed Trinity 15-4 and 15-12 while in the second contest the Jr. Meds squashed their way to a 15-1, 15-3 victory.

The first game did not exhibit anything in the way of good volleyball, as the Jr. U.C. squad was furnished with very little opposition. The Jr. Medical team was just too good for the Jr. Schoolmen and won as they pleased.

Trinity: Beverley, Wykoff, Dilworth, Howie, Greenfield, Sommerville, DeLaney, Hodgins, Baldwin, Leamen and Nork.

Jr. U.C.: Olch, Holt, Lokash, Yan-koo, Spring, Tepperman, Rose, Saylow, Hershorn, Soren.

Jr. S.P.S.: Margesson, Coy, Leggett, Woodridge, Nesbitt, Lewis, Hewson.

Jr. Meds: Cash, Gates, Crockower, Laski, Wise, Metzler, Kyle, Floren, Prothert.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crockower

Warren Stevens pulled a good one yesterday. He claims that tomorrow's combat is a charity affair—for Queen's, McGill and Western. At any rate the Blues are all set for the championship struggle. Every member of the squad is in perfect condition and unless we miss our guess Steve's lads will dish up some rugby that will bring back Ted Reeve's rheumatism or misery as he calls it. It seemed to us that the Blues were trying too hard in the last Queen's-Varsity tilt and that they can loosen up tomorrow they should win quite handsily. After last week's test Bob Ishister's knee has shown that it can stand up under heavy punishment and with the big Hamilton lad helping Cam Gray in the kicking department those long runs of the Coulter-Connelly combination will not be nullified after an exchange of kicks. We do hope that Coulter will give Marks an opportunity of throwing more forwards. Up to the present Hughie's near-perfect tosses have been used only when necessary. A few more of those Marks to Connelly or Marks to Holden passes would tend to make tomorrow's tilt win more spectacular than the last one.

While things roll merrily along in the Blue camp discouraging reports are drifting up from Kingston. However, all the talk of injuries from the Tricolour quarter just causes us fits of laughter. We venture to say that Reeve will have every one of his "cripples" out tomorrow afternoon. Johnny Munro, who incidentally was an interested spectator at yesterday's High School finals, will be in the game. Despite the fact that his ankle is not in perfect functioning condition it isn't by any means entirely out of order. It will probably be strapped up well enough to allow Johnny to assume his kicking and running duties. The absence of Munro would be a serious blow to the Recevemen as he is a key man in their offensive.

While the seniors are eavoring around at the Stadium Varsity's juniors will be out to take the city junior title up at Rosedale field. The young Blues were full of pep last night and quite confident of victory. Westsides have lost two of their star players for tomorrow's important tussle and this is to be regretted as we believe that the Blues could take the Westside aggregation even with the two lads present. The Varsity Thirds were away below form last week.

Ace Bailey's Blue hockeyists held the starry Toronto Dukes to a 3-1 decision last night up at the Arena. The game proved to be a very beneficial work-out for both squads. With a little more polish inside the Dukes' blue line, the Blues might have made it closer. The Dukes have been practising for some time now and the showing of Bailey's lads was very creditable considering the fact that another week of hard practices would not do them any harm. Tonight the Blues play in Oshawa and Tuesday night they start their O.H.A. campaign. Signs of renewed hockey interest around the campus were clearly evident yesterday as a good many students were present to get a glimpse at the Blue machine.

Speaking of hockey, pardon us while we take time out for a hearty laugh at the expense of hockey officialdom in Canada. Latest reports have it that Canada will not be represented in hockey at the next Olympic Games. What a situation! Canada, the home of hockey—and not to be represented. A situation like the present one was seen to arise with the officials allowing all the flitting about of hockey stars. A firm hand at the helm would have prevented this year's fiasco. There probably aren't five really amateur hockey squads from one end of the Dominion to the other—and all just because those in charge wink at questionable simon-pure actions of most of Canada's hockey clubs.

Basketball news, although coming along slowly, is proving to be very interesting. We ran across Cleary Palmer of McMaster on the back campus and during a short discussion he pointed out why the Hamilton college dropped out of the Big Six. It seems that the McMaster squad are set for a United States tour and couldn't afford the time needed for travelling to take part in Big Six contests. It is interesting to note that the University of Buffalo squad, which the Blues defeated last year, have taken Varsity off their list of visitors and substituted McMaster. It seems that last year's defeat was too much to take.

Before we sign off let us caution you against giving Queen's supporters five to one as they demanded and received two weeks ago. Two to one should be your limit and take all you can get.

There were some fine-looking prospects on display during yesterday's T.S.S.A.A. finals up at Varsity Stadium. Lads like Al Smith, Russel, West, Moon, Hatfield and a few others would look well in a Blue uniform.

Knox College Yields to U.C.

In Hard Fought Struggle

In the scheduled soccer match on the front campus yesterday, University College defeated Knox 3-0. Although this game meant nothing in group standing it was a hard fought battle.

Brydon, Errington and Custens scored the goals. Mackay played his usual strong game on the U.C. defence. Blanchard kept the U.C. goal well in hand. Johnson, Knox centre, led in the play for his side.

S.P.S. TRIUMPHS IN SOCCER COMBAT AGAINST WYCLIFFE

The interfaculty soccer game on the front campus yesterday evening resulted in a win for S.P.S. over Wycliffe, the score being 1-0.

This game gave S.P.S. the championship of Group C and the right to continue in the finals with the two other group leaders. Vic has been declared winner of A group and the leadership of B group will be decided this evening, for which Dents and Meds are tied.

Both teams played good soccer, making it a tough grind right to the end and for the first time there was plenty of whole-hearted support on both sides.

Dick Ruche, in the Wycliffe goal, played brilliant soccer, saving his team from greater defeat.

SKI CLUB

Bigger and better things are promised for the skiers this year as will be evidenced at the first open meeting to be held in the Debates Room of Hart House at 5 o'clock. All skiers are invited.

Victoria Wins Her Fourth Straight Victory of the Season

Playing nice combination to score eight goals in the fourth quarter, Victoria's smart lacrosse team won their fourth straight victory of the season with a 14-6 win over St. Mike's.

Due mainly to the fine work of Foristal in goal, St. Mike's held the Scarlet and Gold squad to 6-6 for three quarters but in the last canto the Vics flashed a championship form which may well carry them to the interfaculty title.

Cassidy and Burgess starred for Vic with no less than five goals each; Thompson nicked a couple and Holman one. Finan connected with the Vic net three times, and McGlynn twice. Marling also tallied for St. Mike's.

Victoria: Brown, Dyke, Bentley, Burgess, Thompson, Holman, Wilkinson, Cummings, Cassidy.

St. Mike's: Finan, McGlynn, Read, Marling, Burns, Foristal, Dolan.

other days, there promises to be some startling innovations in costumes. One lad intends to be Tarzan, it is rumoured. Wonder who he'll go with. Probably some prim mid-Victorian lass, complete with bustle and hoop-skirt. Another is dressing himself after the current stage, screen and song hit. He is to wear short pants, Buster Brown hat, etc., and go as "Accent on Youth". Still another will probably be a Dracula, with no other disguise than one of the great black cloaks, worn by some of the priests at St. Mike's. As for this reporter, he is spending most of his time wondering just what it was about that hideous gypsy outfit, that made him rent it. Anyway, it'll be a great dance and probably the gala-est of all the University's revels of the year.

who was injured in last week's game. Whichever way the decision may go it will be the last game of the season for the Blues as they definitely have decided to default in the Ontario playoffs. Nevertheless they would like at least to win the Toronto title. They have several players of proven ability who have a bright future ahead of them in grid circles. Mumford, plunging former Oakwood Collegiate star, has turned in consistently fine performances all season. Owen, another good half, will be barred from further junior competition as he has played in more than one intermediate game. GERMAN PREJUDICE APPARENT IN SPORTS

"Canada Should Not Enter Olympic Games Held in Germany"

That Canada should not participate in the Olympic games if held in Germany, but that a change in venue should be urged, was the motion passed by an open forum of young people held under the auspices of the Canadian Youth Council held last night. The meeting further moved that the Canadian Olympic Committee should fully and publicly investigate all circumstances surrounding the Olympic games in the light of religious, racial and political prejudice apparent in German sports in violation of the Olympic code. It was also urged that the question of Canadian participation should be regarded as a purely moral issue affecting all creeds.

This resolution was passed following an open discussion in which the principle speakers were Mr. Merrick, a member of the International Olympic Committee, who gave a brief account of the origin and present composition of the Olympic Games Committee; Dr. R. J. Irwin, representing the Protestant churches in Toronto, and Rabbi Eisen-drath, representing the Jewish faith.

—The Muddy Yorker.

The Champus Cat was the recipient of some fan mail, which we publish below.

Dear Mr. Yorker: The "tale of woe", recorded in your column of yesterday with such fluency of language and depth of feeling, has touched me to the quick. Line by line I followed your fair reporter's quest for romance in the midst of such a glamorous setting as a "gathering of young intelligent men culled from the best that Knox, Wycliffe, and Emmanuel could offer." Sobs shook my frame as I reached the climax, and witnessed the fond hopes of the heroine crash to the ground. But it was with indescribable anguish that the truth was borne in upon my soul—the villain was none other than myself.

May I be allowed a word in my own defence, ere I be sentenced to the fate which awaits all those who venture to trifle with The Varsity or its representatives? It was my full intention to attend the meeting so eagerly awaited by the fair maiden. It was my earnest hope that the "annual event" might be repeated once again. But Fate intervened. In an encounter with my dentist that very afternoon, I was thrown for a distinct loss (viz., two molars), which necessitated my absence from the activities of the evening.

With great delight, the news was brought to me that a certain dark-haired compatriot had filled the breach, I had hoped acceptably. But the plea with which your letter closed leads me to believe that none other than my unworthy self can mend the broken heart.

As to "the purpose desired by the writer", I am still in the dark, and shall remain so until the next meeting. Till then, I am,

Your obedient servant,

ghost and is killed by it, was especially good—but they failed to create the necessary atmosphere of tension; the tempo was too slow, and the scene in the semi-darkness dragged interminably. The rappings of the ghost resembled offstage carpentry, the struggle between the cynic and his invisible adversary suggested an attack of delirium tremens. Only at the end when the young girl screams at the sight of the mutilated face of the dead man did the performance achieve a moment of pure horror.

"Joint Owners in Spain", the second play, was a very slight but amusing sketch dealing with the quarrels and final agreement between two inmates of an Old Ladies' Home. The character contrast between Miss Dyer (Agnes Little), a withered and querulous old maid and Mrs. Blair, her sharp-tongued, hymn-singing room-mate, (Marion Thomson), was drawn with deftness and precision. Here the action moved quickly; both in timing and in acting this play was an improvement upon its predecessor.

In the first play, one felt that desire outran performance; in the second that the actors deserved a better play. Perhaps this group might have devoted their efforts more successfully to the production of a three-act play of not too ambitious a nature. Certainly the general level of talent shown yesterday evening leads one to believe such an undertaking would not be beyond their capacities.

Big Bob Isbister will be available for this important engagement and with Munro a doubtful starter and unable to kick in any case, Varsity will likely get the best of the kicking exchanges, which will help the Blue and White cause a good deal. Coulter, Connelly, Marks and Gray provide Varsity with perhaps the best half-line in Canada. Coulter and Connelly have been called the best ball carriers north of the U.S. where different rules re interference prevent a comparison. And Hughie Marks is a forward passer without peer. Additional interest in tomorrow's match ensues from the battle of wits between the rival strategists, Queen's Ted Reeve and our own Warren Stevens. Wit htwo teams so evenly matched, the issue may easily be decided by a new fizzle play, concocted by one of these two master minds of football.

Professor Shapley Accents Fact There Are New Discoveries

LARGE ATTENDANCE

"New discoveries are constantly being made even in the ancient science of astronomy," said Professor Harlow C. Shapley, in introducing his fascinating lecture "Surveying the Outer Universe." A large audience in Convocation Hall Saturday evening listened with interest as Professor Shapley, the director of Harvard College Observatory, outlined some of the most recent discoveries. Among these he mentioned the demonstration of the sun as a magnet, the appearance of a new star, and the calculation of a new rate of expansion of the universe.

Lantern slides were shown throughout the lecture, many of them illustrating the extensive work carried on by the Harvard College Observatory. Not only has the observatory very fine apparatus in the United States but it also has placed observatory outposts for special work in other parts of the world—one of the most important being situated in South Africa.

THE NEARER EAST UNDER DISCUSSION

Egypt, Babylon, Palestine, Ethiopia, Surveyed by Dr. Mercer

SPECULATES ON FUTURE

"Our changing world in the Nearer East," was the subject of the lecture given on Saturday, November 16th in Trinity College by Rev. S. A. B. Mercer, D.D., Ph.D., F.R.G.S. Dr. Mercer chose Egypt, Mesopotamia, Palestine, and Ethiopia for special consideration. Each of these countries underwent a profound physical change several hundred centuries before Christ. At first verdant countries, they became arid deserts. About 35000 B.C. Doctor Mercer said the world changed considerably and it was after this time that there began in each of these countries a struggle between desiccation and civilization. In point of culture the civilization which had grown up during the time of favourable physical conditions was equal to and even superior to that of the present day; but it waged a losing battle with the encroaching deserts until Great Britain began in our own generation to take up its cause in these countries.

The Great War was one of the great turning points of civilization Dr. Mercer believes and from it there arose two opposing conceptions, both the visions of the mind of a great man, Woodrow Wilson. The first of these was the League of Nations, the second

NEW FRENCH PROFESSOR TO SPEAK ON MOTOR TRIP

Motor "From Metz to Lyon" with Professor Houpert at French Club!

Members of the French Club are promised an interesting time at tomorrow night's meeting. Professor Houpert, new member of the French staff, is to give an account of "A Motor Trip from Metz to Lyon." The presentation of Courteline's sophisticated modern comedy "La Voiture Versee", under the direction of Fergus Tobin, is the highlight of the program. An excellent cast has been chosen for this play, among them being Miss L. J. Grabbell and Mr. Arthur Bernstein.

French songs, including such hits as "The Hot cha cha" and "The Wine Song" from the recent French film "Caravane", and a conversational half hour will complete the program. All U.C. students interested in French are cordially invited.

U.C. JUNIOR WOMEN OVERWHELM MEDS

On Friday night at the O.C.E. gym the scheduled game between Meds and U.C. Juniors was played, the latter being on the right side of the scoring, which ended at 21-5. Nothing sensational was produced, Joyce Tenenbaum playing her usual good shooting game and Isabel Wright putting forth most of the effort for Meds, both defensively and offensively. The U.C. forwards found, so they thought, a stone wall in the Meds' defence and it was only after much manoeuvring that they were able to score.

ARTIST REVIEWS ITALIAN PAINTING

Contrasts Medieval and Modern —Titian vs. the 14th Century

In reviewing Italian painting from the 14th to the 18th centuries on Friday afternoon at the Grange, Mr. Arthur Lismer said he wished to consider it not from a cultural or romantic standpoint but from the artist's view which everyone possesses. Mr. Lismer first considered an obscure Florentine artist of the 14th century and then compared him with Titian of the 16th century. During the 14th century a religious fervour tinted all the activities of men; this becomes apparent in the work of the Florentine artist who chose as his subject an adoring angel. It was a picture of abstract symbolism for those people of that age who could not be instructed any other way. It is two dimensional, possessing no feeling of light or inner depth which must be drawn from the observer. It is nevertheless not immature; anything touched with divine fire cannot be the same as realism and this picture was the perfect expression of the 14th century. Compared with this picture was the

Prejudice And the United States

For over a hundred years, peace has reigned between Canada and the United States. Economically, the interests of the two countries are even more closely identified. Socially, Canada absorbs her ideas, her customs and her mode of living from the United States rather than from England. The life and habits of the Canadian resemble those of the American more than those of the Englishman. Yet in spite of the intimate association between the two countries there are a great many Canadians, not only of the older generation but of the younger, who entertain a definite prejudice against Americans, not so much against the individuals whom they have met, but against the nation in general.

Some of the objections to, and criticisms of, Americans, which are most frequently raised, are: Americans are so materialistic, so fond of "getting rich quick", so concerned about the "Almighty Dollar"; they are a boastful race of people who regard themselves as the "greatest people on earth" and refer to the United States as "God's country"; that they are completely lacking in taste and their chief products are chewing gum, tabloids, gangsters and Aimee Semple MacPherson; not to mention several political grievances which will not be discussed here.

One of the most misleading tendencies in modern thought is that towards generalization in dealing with nations. Obviously it is impossible to enunciate a positive dictum concerning the characteristics of any nation which is in itself made up of many individual and distinct units. It is equally unfair to declare "Americans are materialistic", "The French are immoral", "English are stodgy".

Generalizations are especially misleading in the case of a nation such as the United States, with its vast intermingling of races and its diversity of climates and environments.

When we condemn Americans for materialism, are we not adopting a "holier than thou" attitude in this respect? Materialism is not confined to the United States alone; it is a world-wide characteristic of our age. Even the most altruistic and unworldly Canadian is not entirely free from the itch for the "Almighty Dollar."

Nor can national pride and insularity be regarded as peculiarly American traits. The Frenchman who thinks of Paris as the centre of the world and of all foreigners as barbarians; the German who believes in the superiority and ultimate lordship of the Teutonic nation; the Briton who considers that Englishmen are the only fit and proper holders of colonial possessions; all are equally guilty of the same type of narrow nationalism. Perhaps the Americans are a little noisier in their pride, but they are not alone in their conviction of national superiority.

Moreover, Americans are their own severest critics. Such a book as "Main Street" is a witness that American authors entertain no illusions about their country and its inhabitants. Many of the novels written today in the United States contain far more damning indictments against the American than any English or Canadian book.

The sooner this tendency to misjudge our neighbors and this applies to the American version of Canada as well as the Canadian version of Americans, can be corrected, the sooner can we regard ourselves as the thinking people we hope we are.

Are You Going To the Royal?

This week the Royal Winter Fair will be foremost among attractions in Toronto. College students are unlikely to appreciate the attitude of a distinguished Canadian editor when he said,—"I grasp every opportunity to attend a great fair because it is the most enjoyable means of improving my education." We will agree that such a show as the Royal is both educational and interesting.

There will be new interests and special attractions, in addition to the exhibits of agricultural products. But it is to the latter that the writer would call attention. The exhibits are always particularly choice and without speaking disparagingly in any way, it can be said that they are particularly apt to give a false impression. Many people base their ideas of Canada's primary industry upon what they see at such shows as the Royal. Unfortunately, such ideas cannot be sound. It must be remembered that the fair doesn't give a bird's-eye view of Canadian agriculture as it exists. Rather it represents the possibilities of the industry. If this is kept in mind the show will have much greater educational value.

The majority of exhibitors are men who specialize in showing. You can find a comparatively small number of large exhibitors owning most of the animals. These animals are moved from show to show and most of the ones to be seen at the Royal, in Toronto, will be found at other Winter Fairs throughout the country. Showing has developed into a business. The show doesn't actually represent the industry at all. Nevertheless, it has unquestionable value if seen in its true light.

Thinking in Education

"Go to college and learn how to live, not just to obtain the skills for earning a living," students are constantly told by their professors and advisers.

But how? The student of no great talents often discovers that routine college courses deaden his first sharp eagerness for knowledge and scatter his thoughts. A college senior many times has less originality and fewer enthusiasms than the high school senior.

He knows facts, but he is not a thinker, and he hasn't built up his inner resources.

Some colleges in the East, however, have a remedy for the uninspired student. They are cutting down the number of studies a year and bringing in a less formal plan of teaching.

Vassar College this year requires only four courses instead of five. The help of tutors is provided first in the sophomore year and increases in the senior year in preparation for a final examination over the field of major study.

Swarthmore has further reduced the number of studies to give the student more freedom to follow up questions that arise in his mind and to read more books that he wants to read. Swarthmore professors believe that their students should have more leisure time for music and art, for creative writing and for handicrafts and hobbies.

For ten years, Princeton has had a four-course plan for upperclassmen. Last year it was changed to give the best students of the senior class a "three-course" schedule for the first semester and a "no-course" program for their final semester. These honour men must do only three things in their last term—make a weekly report to advisers, write a departmental thesis and take a general examination. How they study and investigate is their own concern.

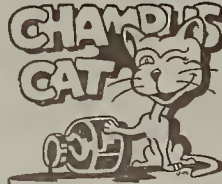

Some of the other colleges and universities using similar plans are the University of Chicago, University of Buffalo, Goucher, Colgate, Bennington, Sarah Lawrence and Rollins.

Fenns College, a Y.M.C.A. school in Cleveland, last year tried a "blended curriculum" in which student groups and advisers worked together on a broad problem such as "How can we improve Cleveland?" They tackled the question through their study of sociology, economics, fine arts and expression.

All these plans are experimental. But under such programs, with good men to advise them, students will have more freedom to be themselves.

Education should not be a knowledge of little tricks for getting by in the world. It is a study of basic principles, of fundamental methods, and experience in intellectual curiosity, an intellectual discipline, an adventure in intelligent living.

It does, indeed, need more quality, more discrimination, more creative experience, less quantity, fewer tricks of trade, less mediocrity, fewer shortcuts and formulae.—Columbia Missourian.

And then there was the coed taking third year history who, after attending Mr. Brown's opening lecture last Thursday, decided that she really would do a little reading. So she went home disgusted . . . because she couldn't raise a Beard.

We were extremely pleased at the full house indicated by the reaction to the Eagle Brand Baby's sad story, published in this department last week. In addition to the reply of the Heart Breaker himself, and his pal or pals, the Oracles of Cupid, we also found posted on the office board a brief scribbled note containing the same explanation of the tragedy, and bearing the initials of an ancient and theologically inclined Varsity editor. The Heart Breaker certainly doesn't keep his love affairs to himself, at any rate.

So all in all you can't blame us for the smug expression we've been wearing this week-end. We now have four readers, including our mother.

After Saturday's game as the disgusted thousands wearily scrambled down out of the stands, one still zealous Varsity fan in the student section suddenly pointed with great excitement to the north end of the field.

"Look!" he cried. "Queen's are after the goal posts!"

The retort came swiftly but almost disinterestedly from some other unknown.

"Let 'em have them. It was robbery anyway."

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Eaton Auditorium

An appreciative audience greeted the efforts of the two-piano team, Etta Coles and Naomi Yanova at Eaton Auditorium Saturday evening. Two-piano teams have been accredited great response in Toronto recently, but this team is in no sense situated on the wave of mere public whim. It is a genuine artistic unit.

The program selected for Saturday evening showed extreme good sense in judging the natural capabilities of the pianists.

Delicate music in suitable arrangements formed the greater part of the program and although the artists were characteristically at their best in such numbers, they were well able to meet the demands of Bach in the "Concerto in C Minor" which was arranged by Harold Bauer.

The quite difficult arrangement of Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" was also handled with finished technique.

One of the most interesting pieces of the evening was an arrangement of Mozart's "Overture to the Magic Flute". Known to everyone in its orchestral setting, this number gave to the pianos every delight to be found in Mozart's original setting.

A group of two numbers proved to be especially fine when adapted to two pianos. No small amount of this was perhaps due to Abram Chasins, the well-known Buffalo pianist, who arranged them. They were Cesar Franck's "Prelude, Fugue and Variation" and the "Artist's Life Waltz" of Strauss, the latter of which evoked an encore.

Several modern numbers also were received well including effective compositions of Borodine, Liadov and Rachmaninoff.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

U.C. Juniors won their first game Friday night when they defeated the Meds 21-5. Up till that time they had lost all their encounters, with Victoria Juniors and St. Hilda's Seniors. However, they will meet Meds again this Wednesday and will have a second try for victory, though Meds will probably be out for revenge. The game was not very spectacular, and there were few spectators. To be absolutely truthful, there have been very small galleries at all the games, and some of the teams might do much better with some encouragement.

We hope you all saw the write-up about Phyl Griffiths in the Stadium Magazine on Saturday. It expressed the sentiments held by most of the girls around Varsity who know Phyl. She is a very good referee, and the interfaculty basketball games would not be the same without her. Incidentally she remarked to one of the coaches Friday night that her feet had been stepped on five times, and she was still wondering where her toes were. There seems to be an epidemic of casualties on right now. Mary Becker of St. Hilda's sprained her ankle in the first two minutes of her last game, but said nothing about it, and played for the rest of the time. Her ankle swelled up to a huge size, and she will not be able to play any more this season. Hard luck, Mary!

St. Mike's swamped the Nurses in the other game played Friday. Half the Nurses' team weren't out, and they were minus Mary Parsons, their crack forward. Mary's ribs are recovering, but the Nurses certainly do miss her. However, we don't want to take away credit from the St. Mike's girls. They played a nice game, but could do with some more shooting practice.

BLUE HOCKEY SET SHOWS REAL FORM IN ADVANCE TILT

Oshawa and Varsity in Keen
3-3 Tie

VETERANS STAR

Valiquette, Sissons and Mc-Ilquham Score for Varsity

By Frank Lamberli

In a sparkling exhibition of hockey, featuring close checking tactics, the Big Blue team held the Oshawa "Chevies" to a 3-3 draw at Oshawa in a pre-season hockey tilt. Throughout the contest the Blue team showed an apt ability in using a sweep check which continually broke up the Oshawa forays on the Varsity nets, and at times they were able to maintain a terrific pace which wilted the starchy aggregation representing Oshawa. While rather disorganized in the first period as plays failed to attain any scoring the University of Toronto sextet came back in the second frame to hurl Hancock's pet into their own end of the rink and the Blue and White lads garnered a 2-1 lead on goals by Valiquette and Sissons. However, in the final spasm Oshawa came back to equal the count and secure a short-lived lead which was soon wiped out by another Blue goal.

The opening bell found both sextets battling hard to manoeuvre into scoring position but these efforts were nullified by close checking and fast passing of the rubber disc. Oshawa pressed hard in the last few minutes of play but good goal tending by Shipman warded off any score.

Enlightened by the pep talk during the intermission, a determined Blue squad came out to renew hostilities and after three minutes of assiduous play the Blues baled the twine behind Hurst on a driving rush by Valiquette and McClelland. Oshawa came back to net a counter on a passing play by Cooper to Chisholm. During this period Charles, stellar Varsity defenseman, sustained a bad gash over the eye, and the Blues had to do without his services for the rest of the game. Sissons put Varsity in front just before the period ended, when he beat Hurst on a shot from close in.

The final period was productive of many dashing attacks and some interesting hockey ensued. Oshawa, desperate for scores, unleashed all their plays, giving them two counters by Cooper and Bagnall, one of which was attained with Varsity playing a man short. While on the short end of the score the Varsity sextet set up a series of plays, and McClelland on a brilliant effort, along with Valiquette trickled one past Hurst to even the count 3-3. Although the Oshawa team attempted to satisfy their supporters with another goal their efforts proved fruitless.

The Blue and White hockeyists gave a great performance for early season hockey, and those outstanding were members of last year's team of McClelland, Valiquette, McIlquham and MacPherson, along with Ripley, Sissons and Jeffrey. Several of the boys showing great promise were Driscoll, sturdy defence man of last year's commercial series, and Galloway.

Varsity: Goal, Shipman. Young; defence, Jeffrey, Charles; centre, MacPherson; wings, McClelland, Ripley; alternates, Valiquette, Lenahan, McIlquham, Disner, Galloway, Driscoll, St. Vart, Sissons.

Oshawa: Goal, Hurst; defence, Morrison, Barnes; centre, Chisholm; wings, Cooper, Jamieson; alternates, Claridge, Smith, Osler, Bagnall, Everett, Manning, Goodchild, Austons.

Residents of dormitories at the University of Kansas were awakened early last Sunday morning by loud reports of firecrackers and shouts of "Viva, Panama". Disgruntled students, roused from the best sleep of the week, dragged themselves out of bed to find a couple of students from Panama, Carlos de Janon and Carlos Patterson, celebrating Panama Independence Day. The boys felt that if nobody else would observe the anniversary of Panama's liberation from Colombia, they certainly would—and did.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George C. Vair

Well, folks, the charity game is over for another year at least and here is hoping that the indigents will get sufficient funds to carry on without a play-off in future years. On the season's play it seems to us that both teams are evenly matched and the best way to settle their supremacy would be home and home games if an extra game is necessary. It is absolutely unnecessary but since all senior gridiron clubs are obviously playing for the well-known gate receipts it is an idea.

Previous to Saturday's game we heard a good story regarding the present situation and a solution was forthcoming. The idea is this—why not give the league leading team the league championship and then have a play-off for the Yates Trophy? All that is needed is somebody to donate a banner similar to the cotton coloured kite Toronto Maple Leafs raised to the roof in their opening game ten days ago.

Stevens adequately solved the problem which has been worrying sports writers for the past week when he started Isbister at flying wing and Cam Gray on the half line in order to have both men on the field at the same time. Isbister's kicking was somewhat uncertain from the time the Blues' bid for a major failed in the second quarter but the big boy was hard to stop on his plunges and his tackling was effective. Cam Gray turned in a creditable performance and his missing that placement in the final two minutes was a tough break. Cam has been placing the oval between the posts so regularly in the last two seasons that it seemed that he couldn't miss. That cross-wind blowing from every direction didn't help the ball game.

This season we have noticed that a greater number of field goals have been made and fewer major scores than in previous games. Practically every team has its placement or drop kick artist who is adept at putting the ball between the uprights. On Saturday 6 out of the 10 points were scored by this method in the Varsity-Queen's game while Tommy Burns and Eliowitz booted three field goals to make up 9 of the 13 points scored in the Bytown tussle which saw Argonauts pass out of the rugby picture. Looks like Queen's will meet the Hamilton Tigers next Saturday. If so, we wish them luck.

It is rumoured that Queen's supporters made a night raid and carried off the goal posts up at the Stadium, Saturday night and then shipped them on the night train.

Congratulations to Don Graham and his junior crew. The Blues entered the second play-off game 2 points shy, on Saturday but won the game 6-1, the group 9-4 and the title. At least Varsity were not kalsomined on the rugby field this season.

MEDS ABSORB LOSS FROM DENT SOCCERITES

Dentists Pull One Score, Meds' Operations Don't Meet Requirements

The fighting band of the Red and Black clad soccer squad from Meds vanished from the interfaculty picture last Friday when they bowed to Dents 1-0 on the front campus. Dents now enter the playdowns with Vic and S.P.S. for the Arts Faculty Cup.

Dents won the game on a first period goal by McCall which followed a brief skirmish around the Meds net. During this half Dents flashed a neat offensive which had its desired result. Meds did not show up so well in this half and Cowan's toughest job was trying to keep warm.

In the second half the Meds team began a concentrated attack in which Joseph, Townsend and Cathey were dominant factors. The smart defensive work of Cowan and Mason kept them off the score sheet, however. On several occasions Meds kicked right over the goal when the yawning opening was close at hand.

Dents—Stapleton, Cowan, Linkin, Westlake, Rockman, Pon, Mackie, Brown, McCall, L. Mason, H. Mason, Ballouf.

Meds—Seymour, Robertson, Parks, Sinclair, Singer, Townsend, Cathey, Beach, Sned, Green, Epping, Foster, Lore.

IMPACT ON CHINESE OF CHRISTIAN FAITH

emphasis upon man's contact with man, regarding God as unknowable and distant. He quoted the saying of Confucius, "If you are to know the will of God, study the hearts of men." Christianity, he continued, has shown a way of knowledge of, and companionship with, God, as revealed through Christ.

Dr. Koo defined the Chinese attitude toward the material universe as one of "joyous appreciation". To appreciation the Western mind adds the "plus sign" of a desire for mastery. "The material side of Oriental life has been very slow in developing," he said. "When we come over here and see the conquest of nature which you have made, we feel ready to fall down at your feet and worship. We are infants, you have attained the stature of giants." A wave of materialism has swept over China; the people desire scientific rather than ethical development. Christianity, according to Dr. Koo, has brought with it not a contempt for material things, but a claim of priority for the spiritual life.

Buddhism has little hold upon the young people of China, because of its negation of human emotions and desires. Dr. Koo stated in an outline of the message of Buddhism, Confucianism and Christianity with relation to man himself. Confucianism, which teaches that a state of harmony is only to be achieved through a discipline of emotion, produces "a sense of outward compulsion coupled with inward rebellion." In Christianity the self is merged in love towards God and fellow men.

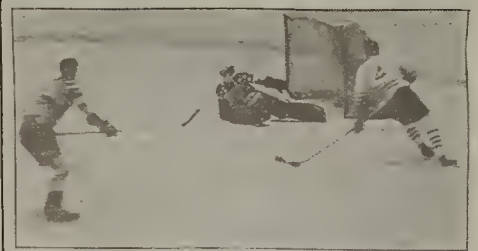

TRINITY COLLEGE TEAM BEATEN BY ST. MIKE'S

The upper gym at Hart House was the scene of a very lively and exciting volleyball game between two evenly matched teams, St. Mike's and Trinity.

In the first game St. Mike's swept to an early lead and held it all the way to win 15-6. The second game was a duplicate of the first only this rally saw Trinity the leaders, who finally won by the same score, 15-6. The third and rubber game was a ding dong battle with both teams scrapping with each other and the referee for points. With every volley the lead swung back and forth but the Irishers pulled a long scoring run to win out by 15-11.

St. Mike's: Bisky, Blum, Noble, Marling, Doherty, Powers, Egan, Hogan, Grace, Hartford.

Trinity: Harvie, Somerville, Ongley, Wyckoff, Delaney, Greenfield, Nock, Dilworth, MacDonald.

VARSITY-QUEEN'S GAME

offensive, eliciting 7 times for good gains. Queen's elicited on four attempts out of six.

Pre-game gossip gave Toronto a decided edge in the kicking department but Ed Barnabe, replacing Munro, booted a brilliant game and had a very slight margin over Isbister and Gray who shared the punting duties. At that Isbister was getting good distance but steadily tackling told on the big boy in the last half.

Varsity broke into the score column in the opening five minutes when "Turney" Williams grabbed a loose ball on Queen's 43 yard line and Marks to Holden pass took them to the 23 yard strip from where Gray kicked a perfect placement. Play was fairly even throughout the remainder of the quarter although Isbister was forcing the Tricolour into their end of the field when the teams changed ends.

After running a kick back 11 yards to open the second frame, Coulter called for a forward and Joe Connolly snared the pass and ran it to the six yard line before he was forced out of touch. Isbister gained five and then fumbled on the third down to give Queen's the ball. Barnabe kicked to Varsity's 53, Marks fumbled a forward on the first down when he wasn't given protection and Scott secured the oval 34 yards out. Two plunges and Barnabe booted a single. The ball had changed ends completely in 90 seconds and Varsity began a second drive for points. Isbister plunged five, Gray added 12 and a Marks-Edwards pass saw the Blues on Queen's 40. After an exchange of kicks Connolly slipped around the end for 25 yards and a short pass to Burke gave them a single when Isbister kicked well over the touch line. However, their supremacy was short-lived and Queen's tied the score on a field goal after Kirkland had grabbed a partially blocked kick on Varsity's 25. Up to half time it was anybody's ball game.

Queen's had a decided advantage in the third quarter but the best they could do was score a single. Oakley, who turned in a first rate game, partly blocked Munro's first kick after the rest, period but Barnabe secured the ball and made a long gain. The Tricolour showed their best offensive at this stage when they ran through a series of assorted plays to move the ball from their own 52 to Varsity's 14, aided by a Toronto offside. Barnabe kicked into his own line on an attempted drop after an interference penalty set them back 10 yards. Isbister booted to mid-field and T. Williams broke up the next Queen's kick but Lady Luck favoured the winners and Kirkland got the loose ball.

The tide changed in the final canto and the Blues had much the better of the play, moving the yardsticks five times to two for Queen's but an intercepted pass by Kirkland and Krug's sensational 62 yard dash after taking Gray's kick on his own 15 saved the day and gave Queen's their third single. Varsity worked the ball back to mid-field and kept Queen's hemmed in their own end but no score resulted from two attempted placements.

Coulter, Connolly, Williams, Oakley, Edwards, Isbister and Holden turned in high class games for the Blue team. Edwards, who started the season as an intermediate, is a fine pass receiver and good tapper. Al Williams snapped a beautiful game and rates with the best on the secondary.

in flowing black gowns, and sweet-faced girls in short (very short) dresses; there was an angel and several devils; Norman knights and English men-at-arms; Scotch lassies and Irish laddies; beautiful Cleopatras and stalwart Anthonys; stately lords and lowly beggars; doctors and nurses, a Tarzan and his mate, a telephone and receiver; and there were girls as boys and boys as girls, which was very confusing.

The decorations and lighting effects were of the best. The corridors twinkled with coloured lights giving a fair imitation of Yonge Street in the evening, the East Common Room was tastefully plain, while the main gymnasium was positively brilliant. Fine music was provided in both rooms by Karl Mueller and Don Romanelli respectively.

Recognition should also be made of the fine arrangements and excellent food provided in Great Hall during the supper hour. Our thanks to Comptroller Gilley for his efforts. That bevy of prettily-garbed waitresses was all that was needed to complete the perfect service.

The prize for the most original couple went to P. P. Dewar, sixth year Meds, and Miss Jimmie MacGregor, who appeared as a telephone and receiver; that for the best costumes of the evening was awarded Mr. Meyers and Miss Meyers of Toronto, dressed as a mid-Victorian lady and gentleman.

HARVARD SAVANT GIVES ASTRONOMY LECTURE

Professor Shapley then went on to show that the earth is a comparatively small member of a great number of stars which comprise the galaxy we usually think of as the universe. But there is a huge constantly expanding outer universe which can only be surveyed through telescopes, and which contains many more galaxies of almost inconceivable size. These galaxies in the outer universe are under continual observation, Professor Shapley informed his audience. Oddly shaped star clusters are seen, and stars which vary periodically in brilliance and are known as "pulsing stars".

"What is the destiny of this expanding universe?" asked Professor Shapley in conclusion, and added that we could only surmise that perhaps it is like our own unrevealed human destiny.

that of self determination of nations, out of which grew a nationalism of the narrowest kind. Particularly is there self determination on the part of minor nations in the nearer east who want to be independent.

Speculating on the future Dr. Mercer thinks that there will probably be some need to divide part of Africa up evenly among the nations, setting the condition that they leave the self determination nations such as Abyssinia, Egypt and Ethiopia strictly alone. In the midst of such a changing world, however, there is still the eternal feminine, remarked Dr. Mercer whimsically, for that modern necessity, lipstick, was found even in Egypt in 3500 B.C.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

second recital of the season, with Reginald Godden assisting in the Brahms Piano Quartet in C Minor. Brahms, a master of chamber music, packs an intensity of feeling into a restrained, complex form which is ideally suited to the string quartet. This piano quartet is extremely well written, the piano being made an integral part of the ensemble, rather than merely a solo instrument. The work was excellently treated, with perfect blending of tone between piano and strings. Mr. Godden's playing exhibited an "ensemble sense" too frequently lacking in assisting pianists.

The suitability of the Brahms work for the medium for which he wrote, may be contrasted with the unsuitability of the quartet by Wassilenko, modern Russian composer, which received its first performance on this occasion. Wassilenko evidently failed to appreciate the narrow limitations, in tonal power and variety, of a string quartet. He expects from four strings, effects which would tax the resources of a symphony orchestra. Noteworthy, also, is the manner in which, after avoiding such commonplace harmonies throughout, the composer concludes with a laborious modulation to an ordinary tonic chord. The finale is the most interesting of the three movements.

The Haydn quartet in D Major was a refreshing return to the clear-cut, sparkling style of the 18th century. The work is a merry one, with the simple melodies and rhythms of the period. The players, emphasizing the precise character of the work, were a trifle too abrupt on their endings, otherwise capably interpreting the number.

T.D.N.

Sunday Evening Concert

Norman Wilks played a program of Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms and Chopin in the Great Hall last night. With the exception of the Moonlight Sonata, his choice of numbers was as far off the beaten path as possible in the works of these composers.

In the Fantasia in C minor (Mozart) Mr. Wilks was at his best. He brought out all the nuances of this intricate music. His pianissimo was breathtaking and in deftness of execution he could hardly have been surpassed.

Beethoven's Opus 27 No. 2 is played so often that only a pianist of rare genius can attempt an original interpretation. Mr. Wilks wisely kept within traditional bounds and let the music weave its familiar magic by itself.

Two Brahms Balades followed with Mr. Wilks straining every muscle. The Balade in D major sounded very English and when Brahms sounds English something is wrong.

The Papillons of Schumann is pretty good for an Opus 27 but it is hardly a masterpiece. Mr. Wilks played it with a lightness and humour that revealed its charm without concealing its defects.

Mr. Wilks was not much at ease in his Chopin numbers. He seemed temperamentally at variance with the composer's morbidity and introspection.

G.H.R.

Toronto Symphony

In some ways Sir Ernest MacMillan's latest Pleasant Saturday Afternoon was disappointing. He served the audience with a kind of club sandwich—seven numbers in the space of an hour and a half. It is a mistake to suppose that a large number of short selections cannot be boring. The fact that boredom was not the result of Saturday's concert is a tribute to MacMillan as a conductor, not as a program-maker.

Smolensky's Overture to the Bortored Bride received better playing than usual and probably better than it deserved. The well-loved Andante from the Quartet in D by Tchaikowsky was played by strings only. The string section of the orchestra is so good, as shown in this and in Grainger's arrangement of the Londoner's Air which served as an encore, that Sir Ernest might well devote one of these concerts to a program for strings.

When Franz Schubert abandoned his 8th Symphony without completing more than half of it, he evidently regarded the work as unsuccessful. That the verdict has been reversed by posterity should not be taken as an indication that the composition as it stands is a complete symphony. Schubert's instinctive feeling for form and balance would be shocked by the complacent modern acceptance of the Unfinished Symphony, which he must have thought no great shakes anyway. As an orchestral piece de resistance, or even as the main layer of a club sandwich, it is unsatisfactory. The orchestra played it somewhat listlessly.

To descend from the sublime to the ridiculous is difficult enough, but to ascend in the opposite direction is more than difficult; it takes time; and the orchestra did not complete the ascent until about half way through Debussy's L'Après-Midi d'un Faune. In consequence, this remarkably moving composition was untidy for a time. However, the finish was strong and this was without doubt the highlight of the program.

In conclusion, Sir Ernest conducted the Blue Danube Waltz. The orchestra pulled their longest laces and attacked the Waltz in the best Wagnerian manner. There are still people for whom there is only one Strauss and MacMillan's jaunty conducting must have pleased them.

ARTIST DISCUSES

PAINTING IN ITALY

Venus and Adonis of the Venetian Titian. Some 200 years had elapsed since the age of the Florentine artist; too, Venice was in touch with the East. It would have been impossible for her to give rise to anything similar to the first picture. In contrast with the spiritual conception of the first the Venus and Adonis portrays an opulent splendor and a romantic ideal. In the work of Van Dyck of the same period is seen a more earthly conception of a religious picture and the flesh is more realistically portrayed. In the pictures of the Florentine Uccello of the 15th century may be seen the searching attitude of people particularly towards natural sciences. A high degree of consciousness of perspective and three dimensional effect is apparent in his work.

The 17th century was interested in almost photographic realism and in subjects from contemporary life. Represented by Tiedala the 18th century possessed some of Titian's decorative facility although it lacked his splendor and richness of colour and emphasized movement in his work.

BRITISH SINCERITY ABOVE REPROACH SAYS SAUNDERS

Trying to Hold League Together in Italo-Ethiopian Dispute

Professors Believe Conservative Majority in Parliament not Representative

Speaking to The Varsity on the recent British election results, R. M. Saunders of the History department, and Mr. Escott Reid, Canadian Secretary of the Institute for International Affairs, were of the opinion that the greatest problem facing the Baldwin government was the nature of the Italo-Ethiopian dispute. Both men also stressed the fact that the Conservative majority in the house was not exactly representative of public opinion.

Mr. Reid stated that the policy of the new government would be indicated by the manner in which they attempted to end the friction in Africa.

A return of the two party system was seen as the Liberal party had disappeared in the House of Commons. He also foresaw a movement to the right, as the right-wing party could

CLASS PROBLEMS DISCUSSED BY CLUB

Canadian Workers Becoming Conscious of Class Differences

STUDENTS GIVE PAPERS

Completely divergent opinions on the relative importance of the regional and the class problems of Canada were expressed at the first regular meeting of the Political Science Club yesterday afternoon.

A large gathering of political science and commerce students and members of the faculty, including Professors Urwick, Innis and Brady, heard papers by Jim A'Court and Ken Woodworth and discussed the various aspects of the motion "Resolved that Canada's fundamental problem is concerned with regional rather than class conflicts." Both papers were well documented and enthusiastically received.

A'Court pointed out that Confederation had increased the natural inequality of the different regions of British North America through the National Policy and had concentrated industry and financial control in Ontario and Quebec. This had caused distress in the depressed areas of Canada as the western and the maritime provinces.

The western provinces need the lowest cost of production and distribution that can possibly be obtained and the interests of these provinces are thus in direct conflict with those of central Canada, where the manufactured products used in the west originate. The maritimes are similarly affected for

S.P.S. AUCTION SALE TO DISPLAY FASHIONS

The zero hour for the annual School Dinner Auction Sale in front of S.P.S. will be at 1.45 Tuesday, November 19, 1935. This year the sale will be conducted by none other than Mr. "Bobbie" McIntyre of London, Paris, New York and Whitney Hall.

It has long been felt around School that the modern girl does not know how to dress. Tomorrow after auctioning off eight hundred School Dinner tickets and several household articles, Bobbie and his "dazzling damsel" will show the University the Engineers' idea of utility in feminine apparel.

Profits of Basic Industries Will Mitigate Loss to Manufacturer

A STEP IN RIGHT DIRECTION

Different Regions of Canada Viciously Affected Says Dr. Innis

The reciprocal trade agreement concluded between Canada and the United States will result in a decided improvement in the condition of certain of the basic industries of Canada and should ultimately be of benefit to all sections of the country, is the unanimous opinion of several prominent Toronto economists who were questioned on this subject yesterday. All made it clear, however, that an intensive study of the terms of the treaty would be necessary before an authoritative estimate could be formed of the complete effects of the pact on the many groups and communities in the country.

D. C. MacGregor, expert in public finance and member of the economics staff of the University, stated that the basic industries, as lumbering and agriculture, would benefit materially and that the benefits would spread to the manufacturing industry, because the production of manufactured products would expand to take care of the increased demand of both capital and

DOCTOR DESCRIBES WAR ON DISEASE

Modern Methods Stress Prevention of Disease Rather Than Cure

HIGH COST TO TAX-PAYERS

"Today we are curing the disease that thirty years ago was given up. Only within the past fifty years have we assumed the responsibility of fighting tuberculosis," declared Hon. Dr. A. J. Faulkner, Provincial Minister of Health, addressing the Samaritan Club at the United Church Training School yesterday.

"The question of tuberculosis as you have known it has been prevalent in history from the beginning. The problem has been raised about whether there is more than one kind of tuberculosis, but that is not important for the symptoms and the end are the same." Dr. Faulkner went on to give a statistical report of the money spent in Ontario alone on the care and prevention of this dread disease. "The total amount paid by the taxpayer, the government and the municipality is approximately $1,300,000 per annum for the care of tubercular cases, and this does not include the money spent on the care of patients in general hospitals and in the homes."

HELD IN WEST HALL

Members of University Faculty Among the Guest Speakers

The annual convention of High School Editors has aroused unusual interest in the University this year and a spirit of co-operation very gratifying to the sponsors has been shown by the colleges.

The convention is to be held in West Hall, University College, on Friday and Saturday of this week. Classrooms have been provided as well, to accommodate the discussion groups. The banquet is to be held on Friday night and will take place in Burwash Hall and the dance to follow it in Newman Club.

A number of speakers from the University are to be found on the program, including President Cody, who will open the convention and Principal Wallace of University College, who will give the closing address. Mr. Dunlop of the University Extension will explain the purpose of this gathering to the assembled editors, and Mrs. Creighton of Victoria College will speak on "Are You Canada's Future Authors?" Among the leaders of discussion groups are Mr. E. A. Macdonald of the Students' Administrative Council; Mr. DeCourcy Rayner, former editor of The Varsity and Mr. Martin Loch, news editor of The Varsity. Professor Macdonald of the English Department will also speak.

HART HOUSE PREFERS ENGLISH PUBLICATIONS

Popular "Esquire" Available Only in Graduates' Reading Room

Humorous and picture magazines are the most popular of the many different types found in Hart House Reading Room. The Varsity was informed yesterday. English publications are preferred to Canadian and American ones it seems. Punch and The Manchester Guardian being two which are the most commonly read.

Esquire, that well-thumbed volume of the U.C. Common Room, however, is not to be found in Hart House magazine room for some unknown reason, although it is present in the Graduates' Common Room. Fortune, which is a rather expensive magazine, is also to be found in this latter place. "It is very seldom that students request copies of which are not present," the Hall Porter stated.

Most of the reading is done between the hours of one and two and five and six, as the room is admirably suited for students to drop in after lunch or while waiting for dinner.

A Word From the President

In the name of the whole University I wish to express appreciation of the splendid work of our Senior Rugby team. Even though they have not won the Championship under the present regulations, they have had a record of fine achievement in the six games of the season's schedule. They were not defeated in any one of these. We thank them for the example of good sportsmanship they have set. They have brought credit to the University and the University is proud of them.

Signed, H. J. Cody, President.

Jr. Meds Favourites In Mulock Cup Game

Medicals Reach Semi-Finals in Interfaculty Series Undefeated

GAME AT VARSITY STADIUM

This afternoon the semi-finals in the Mulock Cup struggle take place with the highly touted Jr. Meds squad meeting the Victoria team. The game is scheduled to take place at 2 o'clock at Varsity Stadium.

Meds have the better record on the season's play, being undefeated, while the Vic crew have only attained their group championship after a strenuous battle with O.A.C. and U.C. However, the latter band of gridlers have greatly improved their early season form, and are expected to provide plenty of opposition for the red and white aggregation.

On the dope so far Meds should have a decided edge in the kicking department. Clunkett, their star hooper, has been hoisting the oval for consistently long gains, usually averaging about 40 yards. On the other hand, Vic's punting has been on the weak side, although "Lofty" Willis is capable of turning in a good performance if given enough protection, while his plunging against the Aggies in the group finals was outstanding. Fleming, flashy Meds half, is always dangerous and has gained many yards around the end during the group games. Barron has been the most consistent plunger for the Doctors and his powerful smashes at the line will Hart House Theatre has been taken over for the big affair and the entertainment is none other than Nancy Pyper's great production, "Hounded by Hate" or "Silas, the Chore Boy", a real honest-to-goodness melodrama, fresh from yesterday.

Most of the college is expected to attend and join in the fun, supplying all the fore-stage noises, boing and hissing the villain, cheering the hero and reserving a lovely reception for the heroine.

They were still on the field at six o'clock Saturday night, says Ross Workman. They may have been battered and bent, but they were there. They have weathered a mighty storm; they had withstood (with the help of several policemen) the furious onslaught of victorious Queensmen; they had suffered untold punishment. But they were there.

And when did they go? During bright daylight or at dead of night? Ah! that is as great a mystery as

Some Members of C.O.T.C. Speak in General's Favour

THINK WORDS TOO STRONG

R. M. White Points Out that Embury Referred to Regina, not Toronto

Almost without exception students of this University denounced in no uncertain terms the attitude taken by Brigadier-General Embury, who a few days ago made a vitriolic attack on "brats of University boys writing in the press insulting army officers."

Varsity reporters, interviewing a large number of students, found most of them bitter. "Hot-headed Scotsman", "narrow-minded militarist", "gouty general" were a few of the epithets levelled at the general. Practically the only students who spoke in his support were members of the C.O.T.C. One of them, J. Issard, Law II, said, "I think a lot of twaddle is being written on the subject", but criticized the general's speech as being "too strong." C. A. Conway, Law III, was in complete agreement with General Embury. "A large percentage of opinions expressed in college papers concerning war and peace seems to be written by purile-minded slackers," he stated.

Opinion contrary to the above was expressed by J. Minsky, Law IV, who said, "In the event of another war the Santa Claus Parade!

This intriguing notice was found on the blackboard of a classroom Saturday morning at nine o'clock. And in Sad was their disappointment. They didn't get their man—or their lecture. What is the fatal fascination of the Santa Claus Parade? Why should it draw the crowd year after year, and often the same crowd at that. What's it got that we haven't got? Even those people who actually worry about getting an essay in on time calmly decided that if it were a toss up between a prof. and Santa, they'd go see Santa. It must have been bad, because even the profs themselves noticed it.

First Guy—Didja see the Parade on Saturday?

Another one across the aisle in the fourth seat—D'ya mean the Santa Claus Parade?

1st G—Sure, that one. Was there another one?

A.o.a.a.t.t.s.—Sure I saw it. I wouldn't miss it for anything.

1st Guy—How was it?

The other one—Oh Great Stuff! But there were no quintuplets. All it needed was some quints. But Santa looked swell. I wish Pda been at the same party he looked as if he'd been to Friday night, though.

1st G.—You're tellin' me. I was there.

But where were all the students who weren't there? It's no secret. They were home sleeping off the effects of the Masquerade. You know there are still people who go around

An Unwarranted Attack On Student Writers

Brigadier-General J. F. L. Embury, a man who in his own words "Did not want to go to war, but having swanked around Regina with swords and all kinds of things just had to go", has recently made the headlines with an ostentatious and vitriolic attack on the "squirts of university boys writing in the press". According to the general such "squirts" have no right to criticize men who fought in the great war.

That the general is a man worthy of the highest esteem of the undergraduates, is obvious. Any man who has such high ideals as to encourage men to give their lives because he himself had swaggered around town in a uniform and felt himself under an obligation to justify his conduct, certainly merits the esteem of "squirts". However, there may be those who would consider this an insufficient reason for giving his life and the life of others. Such men do exist.

Also there might possibly exist the possibility that the general craves a little publicity, and takes the cheapest means of obtaining it, that of making a sensational attack on something or anything. Such things have occurred before, but sooner or later, persons who attempt to focus themselves in the public eye in this manner, will find that the publicity received is not so desirable as imagined.

To assume that students should not criticize is somewhat nonsensical. To assume that they will accept everything which the preceding generations have produced as being "the best possible" is to exclude progress.

The students of today, graduating into a world which has become so disrupted as to practically eliminate the possibility of their getting remunerative work, a condition which cannot be blamed on them, and hence must rest on the shoulders of the older generation, cannot be condemned merely because they do some thinking in the matter. They cannot fail to see that the war did not achieve what was promised, nor did the soldiers receive all that was promised them. They do not wish to relegate such promises as were made at a time when our national future was at stake, to the category of election promises. Neither do they wish to see a similar occurrence. Can they be blamed for this?

True, they are at fault if they fail to give due credit to those men who gave all in the great war. They are at fault when they print stories, (something which rarely occurs) of things about which they know nothing. They are at fault when they assume that the great war victims did not give their best for their ideals. They may be condemned for this but not for their efforts to avoid catastrophes such as have marred many pages of our history.

The general does not believe that presidents of such universities should be allowed to remain. Fortunately, such generals are rare. Otherwise there might be some excuse for the hypothetical attacks the students are alleged to have made. The students today are just as loyal citizens as they ever were. Any charges to the contrary are nonsensical. Why then should a man in a position of such responsibility make such an unwarranted attack on the students, their presidents and their ideals?

Week-end Accidents Cause for Concern

We are much concerned about the loss of life in war-time but no one seems to pay much heed to the casualty lists appearing in our newspapers every Monday morning under the heading of week-end accidents. This week the record runs "eleven die in Ontario accidents—autos claim five lives". Nor is this an unusually large number. This steady drain on our far too small population is quite as devastating in its effect as war.

It is no doubt a laudable ambition on our part to desire to bring about world peace but it is after all a matter a trifle beyond the scope of the students of the University of Toronto. We might accomplish a great deal more if we were to devote our energies to the very immediate problem of preserving life in our own country and of making our fellow-citizens more careful.

Automobiles are responsible for a great number of deaths each year. The automobile has become a very necessary part of our life and the remedy for the situation lies not in having fewer automobiles but in exercising greater care in their use. The Department of Highways is doing what it can to supervise those who are entrusted with the operation of motor vehicles but obviously the co-operation of the populace as a whole is necessary. Excessive speeding which provides such a thrill for the present generation must be checked.

British railways have an enviable record. Accidents between locomotives and automobiles are practically unknown because they have eliminated level-crossings. We must do the same for apparently people can never be taught to stop, look, and listen.

There is a great deal that can be done to make the world safer for its inhabitants. It means a full time job for everyone to take care of himself and of those who forget to take care of themselves.

Repeal of Magazine Tax Welcome To Many

One feature of the new reciprocity treaty which will be hailed with delight by the reading public is that relating to books and magazines from the United States. The most patriotic Canadian will admit that we can scarcely be satisfied with the limited number of good magazines published in our own country and anyone who is in the habit of buying the better grade of American periodicals will agree that the burden of the tax has been quite considerable.

It is always the better class of magazine that is the first to suffer when a tax is imposed on reading matter. The publishing houses bringing out the cheap fiction type were able to surmount the difficulty by establishing printing plants in Canada or by having their magazines published in the Dominion.

As a result of the duty the twelve biggest-circulation magazines of the United States lost sixty per cent of their Canadian circulation, a situation of which the Canadian journals took advantage to increase their own. The repeal will be a test of the hold which the Canadian magazines have on the public. It is to be hoped that Canadians, having in the past three years become aware of their own magazines, will not now drop them entirely in favour of American ones. This is the greatest disadvantage in the new arrangement but one which will possibly not reach serious proportions.

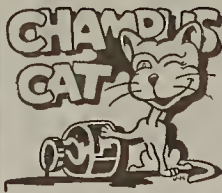

Is The University To Blame For Cheating?

What to do about students cheating on exams is a constant problem, it seems. But it is not such an elusive problem when one looks at it simply.

In the University we have an educational system which places too much premium on the ability of a student to pass an examination. Those who don't have to cheat to pass exams say those who do should be more honest. The perpetrators of our educational system have the same idea. They think the way to correct the situation is to pass rules and regulations against dishonesty.

Students do not cheat because they are dishonest or because they have been brought up by incompetent parents. They cheat because the University often unknowingly places a premium on cheating. Many students come to the University with a very good set of moral principles, only to learn that the delicate art of "getting by" will sometimes pass courses for them.

The University will never be able to teach honesty, although some students may discover its value through bitter experience, so long as it offers plenty of inducement for dishonesty.—Daily Texan.

Our most recent contributor has done his bit in the form of a few suggested verses for that song that goes something like "Picture a something or other without a something or other". Since two of the three verses pass censorship, and in spite of our hunch that the donor (who signs himself R—R) really meant to send them to Fred Waring for a novelty number on this evening's program, we give them to you as they came to us—sans music, sans rhyme, sans reason . . .

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Eaton Auditorium

Toronto has had a full dose of Spanish dancing. Barely ten days ago we saw La Argentina and yesterday evening at Eaton Auditorium we saw Jose Cansino and Tonia de Aragon, two more or less unknowns in the dance world. The name of Cansino is well-known, however, and Jose is unfamiliar to us because he is the young brother of a famous Spanish dancing family. The pair are billed as "sensational", which rather overstates the case. They are, however, interesting and, what is more important, very entertaining.

The dancing of Cansino and Tonia de Aragon has much of the vitality and spirit so necessary to the dance of Spain. They had all the rhythm and technique which characterizes Spanish dances. If they lacked anything it was a certain precision and accuracy, such as is seen in the art of Escudero.

One objection that can be made to all the Spanish dancers who visit Toronto, is that they choose music for the folk dances which is primarily concert material. That is, the music lacks the strong feeling and the intensity of the original, traditional folk-music. It would be so much more entertaining and more real if the dance could be accompanied by a small Spanish orchestra instead of piano music.

Let's Go Places

When La Bataille, shown at the Hollywood on Saturday, was previewed as "a production of great artistic interest and remarkable technique" the writer was not exaggerating. As a study of the Japanese people, their viewpoint and customs, or as a detailed account of a naval battle, the picture was superb. Even the author was satisfied with the adaptation of his novel and as he is a member of the French Academy the book is good.

But the picture could only appeal to a militarist. Boyer was excellent as the commander who sacrificed his wife and honour to learn the English secrets of strategy. We could admire his courage and his perseverance, but never his principles so that his devotion to his country seems to be the only unintelligent part of his make-up. Annabella had the best role as the wife who could not comprehend her husband's adoption of Occidental friends, clothes and social observances. The English captain was least successful, perhaps because of his difficulty with the French language. A little foreign accent is amusing but in large doses, often unintelligible, it detracts from the continuity.

Artistically the picture was superb—the sets, the costumes, Oriental and Parisian, and the incidental music were all first rate. It is probably because of the foreign outlook and drawn-out battle scenes that the picture wasn't quite up to expectations.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

U.C. Freshies very nearly took Vic Seniors last night. They were leading right up to the last quarter and then Vic, headed by Maisie Cowan, staged a comeback and put in about eight baskets to take the lead and the game. The Freshies played a very nice game, working some good floor plays, and they intercepted a lot of the Vic high passes. In our opinion, Vic might do even better if they cut out those high passes. The game was not without casualties, and Bunty Lang of U.C. turned her ankle in the last two minutes and Kitty Guest substituted for her.

The second game was between St. Hilda's Seniors and Vic Juniors, and was the first quarter ever of a scramble! Neither team played as well as in their first encounter, but Vic seemed to be going right to town when they led 6-0 after a few minutes of play. The Saints managed to tighten up, though, with Marg Macdonald playing a beautiful game, and they ended on the top side of the score. Muriel Beaton starred on the Vic forward line, and their defence was in there checking all the time. Quite a number of the Vic boys turned out to cheer on their team, and St. Hilda's was supported by a number of grads and undergraduates.

The group games will end this week. St. Hilda's Freshies meet U.C. Seniors at six o'clock tonight, and at seven the Nurses and U.C. Freshies will play the game they were supposed to play on November 7. The other game which was not played on that date, between St. Mike's and Vic Seniors, will also come off this week, but the date is not yet definite. We'll let you know about that later.

In baseball, Vic will play the Melley team at five o'clock today in Vic gym, or so we imagine. So far the schedule hasn't been kept very exactly, but the girls are having a lot of fun out of it.

undoubtedly give Vic plenty of trouble. The Scarlet and Gold half line of Cooper, Pratt and Gardiner possesses plenty of speed and work together well on dashes around the end. UNIVERSITY CHESS MEN DEFEAT NORTH TORONTO

Last evening in the West Common Room, Hart House, the University of Toronto Chess Club defeated the strong North Toronto Chess Club by 6 wins to 4. At top board, the University champion, R. Drummond, as black, defeated W. B. Hackett in a well played game. At board two, President R. B. Hayes left a queen around for G. P. B. Underhill. R. T. Burgess obtained a strong attack and eventually overwhelmed W. Hodges. A. D. McConnell played 2 games for the students at board four; he made a slip at a late hour, losing to J. G. Wilkinson while he defeated J. McQuirl at board 5 after the latter had refused a draw. S. A. Jennings had things his own way against Treweek at board 6. The other results were: S. Shankman defeated Davidson at board seven, A. L. Rubinoff lost to McKendrick at board 8, D. L. Turner won on board 9 from Andrews while at board 10 T. D. S. Watson lost to Abrams.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George Vair

Tonight Varsity senior puck-chasers open their regular O.H.A. schedule when they take on the Oakville Villains at the Varsity Arena. "Ace" Bailey has been giving his proteges plenty of pointers and they certainly showed results when they held the "Chevies" to a 3-3 score in the Motor City last Friday. The Blue team is an up and coming squad who will battle all the way according to reports from the expert who saw the game. With a good chance for an O.H.A. play-off berth in the offing and a better than average chance to get down in front in the intercollegiate race the team will be worthy of the best support. Student ticket No. 12 will see you by the vigilant at the gate so drop in and get a look at your team at 8.30 tonight.

Rugby will definitely wind up this week at the University when three clubs battle it out for the Mulock Cup. Victoria and Jr. Meds meet tomorrow to determine who will play Dents in the final next Friday. The Medicals are favoured to win on their season's record but figures don't mean a thing when the chips are down and the Scarlet and Gold will be far from push-overs. Varsity juniors have definitely dropped out of competition after winning the city championship. Continuance in the playdowns means valuable time lost in travelling and the thirds are wise to hang up their uniforms although they have a powerful squad.

Last week we received an interesting letter from Maxie Fullerton who is attending Zurich University along with Charlie Sweeney. Both boys played on the 1934-5 senior hockey squad and will coach would-be hockey players in the colourful Swiss college, besides playing in international games. They attended a game between Wembley Canadians and Brighton Tigers at Wembley Stadium, an artificial rink which is used as a swimming pool in the summer. In place of box seats they have tables and chairs and dining room service while the elite attend in formal dress. Maxie states that they appreciate good hockey and have good crowds. The majority of the players are from Canada.

Varsity's senior basketball squad will be augmented by the appearance of three Western seniors who are attending O.C.E. and Stroud, late of McMaster. The addition of these men will make the competition keen for a place on the squad since a number of last year's championship team are back. With football officially over Warren Stevens will be calling practice in the near future.

Football may be officially over on the campus but the grandstand quarterbacks and probably more than one of the players will still be talking a good game when the snow is knee deep. It is to be regretted that the team that finished on top for two consecutive years came out on the wrong end of a play-off game but after looking at it from every angle Queen's were the best team on Saturday. They knew enough to take advantage of the few breaks that came their way and that is something.

VIC SENIORS VICTORIOUS OVER U.C. FRESHETTES

Vic Seniors scored a basketball victory over the U.C. Freshies last evening in the O.C.E. gym. The freshies put up an excellent fight and were ahead until the last quarter. In the first quarter the Vic shooting was rather wild and the U.C. defence played excellently. Alice Elshout shot some nice baskets for U.C. and at half time the board showed 13-6 for U.C. The Vic forwards snapped into action, starting Maisie Cowan and Erna Laing, and brought the score to 19-14 for U.C. At three quarter time U.C. tried hard to maintain their lead, but their passing was sloppy, and the Vic forwards chalked up a final total of 30-23.

Vic Seniors: Maisie Cowan 10, Erna Laing 12, Louise Pryor 4, Marj Leslie 4, Ruby Barrett, Myrtle Robb, Betty Jenkinson, Ruth Leavens, Sheila Brown, Hazel Brown, Doris Wagstaff. U.C. Freshies: Marg Glass 9, Dorcelle Mackeller 4, Alice Elshout 10, Mary Nagler, Jocelyn Rea, Jean MacKenzie, Bunty Lang, Kitty Guest, Kay Robertson.

Varsity Tennis Club Elects Executive

Both senior and intermediate intercollegiate tennis tournaments will be held in this city next year. High hopes for this University's success were expressed at the annual meeting of the Tennis Club, held yesterday.

Election results were as follows: Hon.-Pres.: Rev. H. J. Cody; Hon. Vice-Pres.: F. Y. McEachern; President: A. Y. Eaton; Vice-Pres.: R. E. Young; Secretary: J. J. D. Brunke.

It is expected that the new executive will attempt to remedy the lack of University courts, which it felt is a serious handicap to the team's winning chances.

Saints Victorious Over Vic Juniors

St. Hilda's won a decisive victory over Vic Juniors last night in the O.C.E. gym at 7 o'clock with a score of 22-10. The game was slow at first and Vic was leading 6-0 at the end of the first quarter. The Saints then came to life and Marg Macdonald scored basket after basket, making the score 11-6 at half time. The play was marked by wild passing and heavy checking of the guards on both teams. The Saints intercepted a lot of passes and kept up their fast play in the second half.

Vic Juniors: Kay Wallace 1, Joy Brownlee 3, Amy Schaffler, Muriel Beaton 2, Mildred Sedgewick 4, Alice Banet, Marjory Beaton, Gladys Kippen, Peggy Bailey, Ruth McKay.

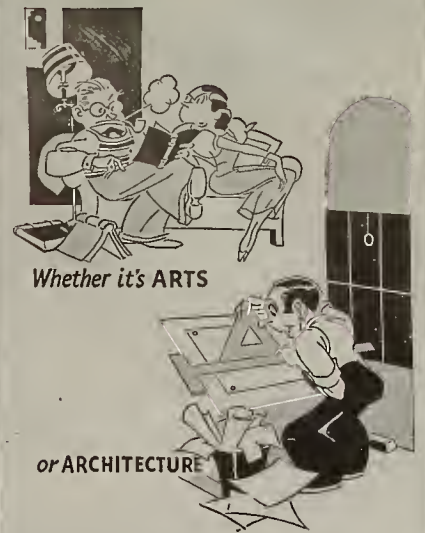

St. Hilda's: Edie Ardagh 5, Ellie Wilson 2, Marg McDonald 12, Isabel Wallbridge 3, Kay Grubbe, Mary Dignan, Jock Whiteside, Kay Mayes, Helen Burnham.

O.C.E. OVERWHELMED BY U.C. IN VOLLEYBALL

The senior U.C. squad defeated the College of Education volleyball team in two straight games last night on the floor of the upper gym of Hart House. The red and white took the first game easily to the tune of 15-6, and it looked easy to take the next. However, O.C.E. came in strong and led by 1 or 2 points most of the way. U.C. finally pulled themselves together to win by a score of 15-10.

Sr. U.C.: Krieger, Laskin, Damsky, Blanchard, David, Shapiro, Lipman, Grand, Beatty.

O.C.E.: Beare, Copeland, Griffiths, Terry, Lancaster, Cochrane, Whitwell, Stroud, McCleise.

VARSITY PUCKSTERS PREPARE FOR FRAY

Smooth-Working Combination
Built Up by "Ace" Bailey; Speed Emphasized

HOPES BRIGHT FOR FUTURE

With sport pulses throbbing at a low ebb, while biting cold winds sting and herald the winter season, the Varsity senior hockey team will usher in the Senior O.H.A. season tonight at Varsity Arena, when they meet Oakville "Villains". In the recent Varsity workouts speed and more speed has become the criteria and "Ace" Bailey is preparing a smooth working combination which should spell trouble to the Allen brothers and company from Oakville. Completely revamped from that sadistic fate of last season the Varsity senior sextet are ready to inflict similar fate and chastisement on the opposition. Their four-star performance at Oshawa warrants plenty of attention.

With Shipman and Young available for the goal guardian activities, Varsity are well fortified, while Jeffrey and Charles loom as a strong rearguard combination. The fast skating forward lines of McClelland, MacPherson and Ripley, along with Valquette, Lenahan and McIlquham, should leave little to be desired for the most ardent Varsity hockey enthusiast. On the whole outlook, the University of Toronto senior hopes for hockey luck bright but the opposition may have their doubts; however, the anticipation of an early season drive should urge the Blues on to victory tonight.

The Iowa State infirmary had an extra heavy load on its facilities a short time ago. Sixty coeds were bedridden after sampling some of their own concoctions, cooked in a home economics class.

labour in these staple industries. Certain manufacturing firms in some localities, as Toronto, may be hit but the city as a whole would benefit because it acts as a distributing centre for the products of northern Ontario industries and supplies them with the goods necessary for production.

Mr. J. Douglas Gibson, economist of the Bank of Nova Scotia, agreed that the benefits of the pact would probably be greater than the disadvantages but stressed the fact that there are definite limitations to the expansion that can be expected, even in the industries most favourably affected.

"The trade agreement is definitely a move in the right direction," stated Professor L. T. Morgan, "for it is a step away from economic nationalism and towards increased trade." The duration of the present world depression has been prolonged by the falling off of world trade, he pointed out, and thus the reciprocity treaty will be of benefit to both countries concerned.

The agreement will affect the different regions of Canada to various extents was the opinion of Professor H. A. Innis. British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec lumber producers will be favourably affected but not as much as they had hoped for. Western Canada will also experience benefits but these will be limited by the quotas on cattle and dairy products.

Professor W. M. Drummond stated that the Canadian government obviously recognizes the importance of the basic industries of Canada and seems to be acting on the theory that if conditions in these industries are improved then the superstructure, composed of subsidiary industries such as manufacturing, would benefit in the long run.

The lower prices of all commodities affected by the agreement, he said in conclusion, would enable the public to buy increased quantities of products of Canadian manufacturers and in addition to the benefits accruing to the consumers because of lower costs of imported goods the net results to the public should be beneficial.

"But the matter of greatest importance is to bring this information into every home and to make everyone aware of the seriousness of and the problems connected with the prevention and cure of tuberculosis.

"The members of the Samaritan Club have for some time been instrumental in the prevention and care of tubercular cases, in such matters as mother's and children's homes, summer camps and occupational therapy classes, and have been associated with the Board of Health. The women have 52 per cent of the electorate of this country. Present your case and no one can help but view favourably a call for assistance in the work you do."

In conclusion the president of the club stressed the important points of Dr. Faulkner's address and encouraged the members to consider seriously the problem of prevention of the disease.

"If Winston Churchill were included in the government, and Anthony Eden dropped as minister of League affairs, it would be a fair indication that the government was going to follow a policy of alliances or isolation," said Mr. Reid, but he saw no likelihood of a Conservative government looking towards Russia or even making a hard and fast agreement with a France that recognized Russia.

Referring to the Italo-Ethiopian dispute, R. M. Saunders stated that Britain's sincerity in trying to hold the League together could not be questioned, although she had made a mistake in not levying some kind of sanctions on Japan when that country was invading China.

Woodworth claimed that the capitalist economists neglect class differences in their analyses and avoid the main issue of capitalism by directing attention to the minor issue of—in Canada—federalism. He stressed the increased trend towards the consciousness of class differences amongst Canadian workers. "In Canada as well as in any other country we have the class struggle and that is the basic problem," he stated in conclusion.

STUDENTS DENOUNCE EMBURY'S ATTACK

general will still be swagging around Regina with the rest of the generals, while the poor "Varsity brats" will be cannon fodder." The same thought was expressed by P. A. Bridle, U.C. IV, who added that "our sense of public duty doesn't happen to include 'swagging around with a sword'." Embury's statement evinces a purely militaristic attitude with the typical narrow-mindedness," said H. L. Baines, IV U.C.

Pointing out that the article referred to Regina and not Toronto, R. M. White said that conditions are vastly different in western universities "where strong red propaganda is finding its way into the schools."

A. J. Andreae, Meds III, described the attack as due to the misunderstanding of two generations. W. R. R. Sutton, Law IV, saw in it an attempt by military authorities to control freedom of speech. "Universities and other seats of learning," he said, "should censor the propaganda and jingoistic ideas of these military officials. A recurrence of anything like the last war should be guaranteed against."

S. F. Rae's statement was the most complete denunciation expressed by a student. "The gaudy general's defence of militarism, his distaste for criticism even of the constructive variety and his proposed intention of replacing college heads because they penned the expression of divergent opinion, are unpleasant symptoms of a fascist leaning on his part."

"Many students write pacifistic articles, not because they believe in the feasibility of world peace, but in order to show they don't believe in war. If war comes they will refuse to fight, hiding their cowardice behind their pacifistic beliefs," said E. C. Colter, Arts III, in outspoken commendation of General Embury's remarks.

Heralded with the fanfare of trumpets which has come to be associated with Vincent Massey's Playhouse, Nancy Pyper opened her latest super production, "Hounded by Hate".

There were parts for everybody, gentle helplessness for the heroine, manly heroics for the hero, and spluttering infamy to the accompaniment of hisses for the villain. In fact everyone took his part magnificently. Finesse, of course, is more liable to trouble bridge players than actors.

Properly a melodrama is one of the most potent weapons of the theatre. It is a most effective weapon for stirring the passions. True, the melodrama did originate with no more pretension than to entertain morons, but by the gay nineties the melodrama had become something more than mere blood and thunder.

Mrs. Pyper has tried to copy the experiment of Christopher Morley. She, too, claims the desire to educate her audience. Mr. Morley was successful because he did provide something more than a revival. He did not sink to the level of the cartoon, and his audiences became a part of the production. This was the fact most noted by New York critics. The audience last night was a mere hindrance to the play drawing to a conclusion.

Thus the government got 53.6 per cent of the votes cast, and 71.4 per cent of the seats in Parliament.

Obviously, the present electoral system gives the victorious party a disproportionately greater power in Parliament in comparison with its true strength as indicated by the percentage of votes cast in its favour. To this method of election, giving the government in power a stronger and probably more efficient hand than would a truly democratic system, to be preferred to the latter?

NEWS OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

Ottawa: Following close on the heels of the agreement between Canada and the United States came the announcement last night that a new trade treaty had been concluded between this country and New Zealand. Details of the arrangement will be made public on Thursday.

Washington: Former President Herbert Hoover is leading a Republican attack on the United States-Canadian tariff-reduction treaty. He claims that "the treaty will bring hardships to hundreds of thousands of dairy and other farmers," adding, "I presume it is more of the abundant life—for Canadians."

Washington: Announcing a policy of United States opposition to any increases of naval strength beyond existing limits, President Roosevelt today named a three-man delegation to the London Naval Conference opening Dec. 6.

Gilson Lectures On Modern Thought

Dealing mainly with the problem of the existence of the external world, as treated by the Cartesian School of Thought, Professor Etienne Gilson yesterday delivered the third in a series of Tuesday afternoon lectures on "Modern Thought and its Tendencies."

Beginning with Descartes' proof of the existence of the human mind, Professor Gilson went on to describe the method of reasoning by which the great French philosopher had arrived at the conclusion that there must be some perfect and eternal being, namely that which we call God. "Existence," he had said, "pertains to God, even as geometrical properties pertain to geometry."

The remainder of the lecture then dwelt with the attempts of Descartes and his three principle disciples, Leibniz, Spinoza and Malebranche to prove the existence of matter on the basis of what they had already proved. These attempts were all brilliant failures as was also that of George Barclay, a later member of the Cartesian school.

Next Tuesday Professor Gilson will deliver the final address on the influence of Cartesian thought on the eighteenth century.

Macintyre Shows Lots of Fire As Auctioneer For School; Architects Wreck All Projects And Break The Golden Rule

BOOM!!! went the little brass cannon in front of that ruddy ruin known as "School" and, when the smoke cleared away, there was Bobbie McIntyre as a bearded and tail-coated but trouserless auctioneer. The S.P.S. Farclay band struck up their theme song, "The Lewd and Trite," and the sale was opened.

First of the many articles to be auctioned was an ancient Egyptian one-handed loving cup, just the right size to hold forty beers, knocked down for three million dollars. Next, the Medical Building fell under the hammer for fifteen cents, purchaser to take it away.

At this point, a pair of lances appeared on the scene, to be claimed by Miss Clara Annis, Beauty Queen of the technical college. Miss Annis' popularity was quite evident as she donned the garment.

Speaking in Victoria several days ago the team from the eastern universities defeated west coast debaters on the subject of secession.

The tour is being sponsored by the National Federation of Canadian University Students. The debaters will speak at Winnipeg on their way back east.

ASK CONFIDENCE VOTE IN OTTAWA MINISTRY

Hart House Debaters Will Discuss Canadian Political Situation

"That this House has confidence in His Majesty's Government at Ottawa" will be the topic of discussion at the next Hart House debate which will be held Tuesday, November 26. The motion will be moved by A. D. B. Marshall of University College, and opposed by J. L. Jeffries of Trinity College.

The debate is being held in conjunction with the National Federation of Canadian University Students, and Mr. J. B. Gould of the University of British Columbia, as also Mr. M. A. Western of the University of Saskatchewan, will be present as Honorary Visitors.

It is also expected that the Hon. Paul Martin, newly elected member of the Federal House and a former member of Hart House, will speak on the occasion.

When interviewed Saul Rae, Speaker of the House, stated that he expected keen interest to be shown in the debate on the part of undergraduates since it gives them the opportunity of expressing their views on the Canadian political situation.

Staff Meeting

There will be a meeting of the masthead at the women's office at 4 p.m. Attendance is necessary.

VARSLITY HOLDS OAKVILLE TO TIE IN SEASON'S INITIAL HOCKEY GAME

Blue and White Team Takes Three Goals in Six Minutes of Play, After Being Held Scoreless Through Two Periods

ALLEN OF OAKVILLE MOST OUTSTANDING PLAYER ON ICE

Fast and Clever Combination Plays by Lenahan, Valiquette, MacPherson and McLelland; Teno
Defends Goal Brilliantly

By Frank Lambert

Inbued with a characteristic unrelenting fighting spirit after facing a three goal deficit in the first two periods, a sterling Blue wave of fast skating attacks gave the University of Toronto sextet a 3-3 draw with the classy Oakville puckchasers in their first game of the Senior O.H.A. campaign at Varsity Arena last night. The first two periods of play saw the Oakville squad come through with some clever manoeuvring to gain a three-goal margin over the Blues, a comfortable lead, but not enough to quell the resurgent spirit under the Blue clad icemen, who rose to the occasion, mid the raucous welcome of the Varsity supporters.

Alford To Give Series of Lectures

Mr. John Alford, Professor of Fine Art, has kindly consented to give a series of lectures dealing with certain phases of painting from mediaeval times until the present day on Wednesday afternoons in the Art Gallery of Hart House.

The first of the series will take place this afternoon when Professor Alford will speak on "Giotto and Mediaeval Painting," illustrating his remarks with slides.

Not until the final period did the Varsity spearhead attacks reach their zenith of perfection, and within six minutes of play, the clever hard working combination of Lenahan and Valiquette and that of MacPherson and McLelland found their efforts rewarded with three goals. The whirlwind rush of Lenahan in the last spasm along with the clever work of Charles, MacPherson and McLelland kept the Oakville "Villains" in check. For Oakville P. Allen was the outstanding player on the ice while Harvey Teno, former St. Michael's net guardian, made many brilliant saves on the Varsity (Continued on Page 4)

McGill Sells Official Matches

McGill University has placed on sale its official matches, neat red and white packets, carrying the University crest. By this means the McGill alumni hope to make a small amount of money, stated letters sent to secretaries of the Graduates' Society throughout the country. One side of the packet bears the University crest, and the other "McGill University, Montreal."

REGISTRAR FAVOURS EXCHANGE STUDENTS

But Sees Little Hope for Any Increase of American Scholarships

A FINANCIAL IMPOSSIBILITY

"Very sound idea," was the comment of A. B. Fennell, registrar, on the suggestion of Hon. Norman Armour, United States ambassador to Canada, that there be greater interchange of students between Canadian and American universities. But the prospects of initiating such a policy by means of scholarships is very remote due to lack of financial assistance to Canadian universities, the registrar intimated.

Mr. Fennell stated that at the present time American colleges offer many fellowships to Canadian graduates. As (Continued on Page 4)

"Within three generations we are in danger of the probable development of a society of feeble-minded individuals, for we, the intellectual class, are unprolific and we will continue to be in all probability," stated Professor E. J. Urwick of the Department of Political Science and Economics, in his address last night before the newly formed Sociology Club.

Professor Urwick, who was introduced by Mr. Saul Rae, gave a brief resume of the history of sociology, tracing its various trends from its first appearance in the seventeenth century down to the time of August Kant, who invented the name sociology and gave (Continued on Page 4)

SAYS ADVERTISING IS ART IN ITSELF

Miss Florence King Speaks on Modern Publicity Methods

MUST APPEAL TO CONSUMER

Miss Florence King, formerly affiliated with The Varsity staff, gave to the Women's Press Club her definition of advertising as the "art and science and business of creating a favourable acceptance of a product". Advertising has developed from a mere proclamation of an article by posters or towncriers to a definite art in itself through the media of newspapers and more recently of radio.

Miss King pointed out that the objection to advertising as an added cost to the product has now been overruled since it creates an increase in demand which in turn means a lower cost per unit of the product and also a better quality at a cost that is approximately one per cent of its value.

NO MAGAZINE INCREASE FOR READING ROOMS

Hart House Unaffected by Changes in Tariff Treaty

American magazines might come into Canada after January 1 at the regular price due to the tariff revision but it is not going to make much difference in the number of magazines in either the Hart House reading room or the University College junior common room.

Magazines are going to be greatly reduced in price but the U.C. executive has ordered all the magazines they can afford for the coming year and there will be no possibility of an increase in the number of periodicals.

The Library committee in Hart House is to meet after Christmas and the matter will be brought up but last night members of the committee indicated it was unlikely the decrease in price would lead to an augmented amount of reading matter in the House.

Femme Debaters Wanting Guys Write The Bureau, Stating Size

Under the assumed name of the "Women's Interfaculty Debating Union" the G.Y.M. ("Get Your Man") Club held a special meeting yesterday; large deputations of young ladies from St. Hilda's College being among those present. The subject under discussion was ostensibly that of the advantages and disadvantages of specialization in women's education, but this was only a blind; before long the real subject appeared in all its glory, namely, "How to Get Your Man."

Madam Speaker, Sir . . .

"When a young man asks you 'What course are you in?' and you answer sweetly 'Pass', that's all right; but suppose you answered 'B. and M.' or 'Classics', then where would you be?" Not where you would be if you answered "B. and O." at any rate.

Madam Speaker, Sir . . .

"All young women want to get their men because their mothers have brought them up to follow in their footsteps." Yet, but they won't get anywhere by being bookworms or using teeth-picks.

Madam Speaker, Sir . . .

"Picture our B.A. from the Classics selling lonjeray behind a counter in Eaton's and brightening her dull moments by repeating Horace odds to herself in subdued tones."

So that's what she's saying in low tones, when the size 43 lady is trying on a Junior Misses intimate garment.

Madam Speaker, Sir . . .

"Or take the delightful deb. She won't be cut in on if she can only discourse on the alcoholic content of Listerine."

"She won't be if she doesn't use it, too (adv.)."

Madam Speaker, Sir . . .

Discussion: "A clever woman has to be very clever to make a go of marriage with a dumb man."

"A clever woman usually can't get anything but a dumb man. The clever man usually goes after a very dumb bunny."

"Why worry about men anyway?" (Cries of "Traitor" and "Throw her out!")

"Women shouldn't worry about them—but they've been brought up to look for the nig—the man in the woodpile."

Madam Speaker, Sir . . .

The Saints as a body remained on the side of the speaker who naively declared "I used to think that women should be self-sufficient but now I want to get married."

Guest speaker at the next meeting—Miss M. West, noted authority.

Olympic Teams Need Support

Another four years is rapidly rolling around again, bringing to the directors of sport in Canada the task of sending the cream of the athletic crop to represent their fair domain in foreign realms. On the surface, this would not appear to involve an incurable headache, because there is no dearth of talent and the finest transportation and communication system in the world boasts of being Canadian. Ah, yes, but where is the monetary wherewithal coming from to support this venture?

Canadian Olympic executive would like to know the answer to this one, too; for, although Canada has been after the olive laurels for more than thirty years, the financial question is no closer to a solution now than it was back in the dim and distant past. This seems rather strange in view of the fact that advancement has been made in every branch of sport, except the financial. It is rather pitiful to see the last minute scramble for money on the eve of every Olympics, especially when thirty years have elapsed in which to solve the question. The memory of the 1932 Games when the Leander Boat Club had to canvass Hamilton's business section on the very eve of the team's departure is not pleasant. Storm signals are again flying at Halifax, where the Olympics have been discussed and it looks as if another feverish scramble for what it takes will soon be on.

Energetic steps should be taken to once and for evermore eliminate the money problem. A system organized on a national scale, which would go into operation at the conclusion of one Olympics, in preparation for the next, is no Utopian suggestion but sound business. Dominion-wide Olympic tag days could be held periodically and with due newspaper support should meet with success. Local subsidiary branches of the Olympic executive could organize and promote sport and retain a part of the gate receipts in preparation for the time when it will be needed; hidden talent would also be brought to the fore.

There is little doubt that such a system would meet with popular support and would also remove the present air of uncertainty and aimlessness which at present exists. Canadian athletes would be furnished with the best of everything and if funds were available for sending them to the country where the games were being held, they would become acclimatized and their chances of success would be immeasurably enhanced.

Coulter Magnificent In Final Appearance

Now that the disappointment about the intercollegiate football title has become a little less keen with the passing of a few days, we offer a last comment on the playing of quarterback Bobby Coulter in his last intercollegiate game. For four years we have watched him run and pass and call the signals, and were always amazed at his speed and determination when he had the ball under his arm. But on Saturday, in the last two kicks which he had the privilege of catching in his intercollegiate career, he showed more speed and more determination than any other football player we have ever seen at Varsity Stadium. With the fortunes of the team depending on his taking the ball within scoring distance of the opposing goal-line, he caught Barnabe's kick, with three minutes to play, and ran with his legs and arms flying in so desperate a manner that it was almost impossible to hold him.

He had that same spirit which made Johnny Copp's football playing such a treat to watch. Both he and Johnny refused to be tackled. Yet when either player was stopped by the opposition, there was no grumbling, except that done by the people in the grandstand. The University of Toronto must indeed be proud that it has had two such students and two such gentlemen in its halls and on its playing fields as Bobby Coulter and Johnny Copp.

Callaghan, Hemingway As Reporting Buddies

Little of a complimentary nature regarding the downtown press and the Toronto Star in particular, has appeared in The Varsity. However, it has come to our notice perhaps rather belatedly, that the Toronto Daily Star at one time in its career, employed two such men as Ernest Hemingway and Morley Callaghan, and that it was through their work together on that paper that they came to be good friends and somewhat alike in their literary preferences.

Whether we approve of the Star's promotion in these latter days of men who write journalistic travel books is a matter for private taste, but we are obliged to approve of Hemingway and Callaghan by all that is good in modern literary criticism.

As the days go by, and our own Canadian Morley Callaghan writes more books, we should pay a great deal of attention to what he has to say, since here is a man who grew up in Toronto and who went to the same school as ourselves. It is true that he went to New York to get money for his books and that he has come to be an urbane American citizen through his contacts there, yet his art has remained definitely Canadian. We are reminded of Henry James in this regard, since that American novelist left these shores for Europe where he received his greatest recognition and where he continued to do most of his writing.

As the Canadian book week is upon us and the usual number of scoffers are demanding what we have to show for it, let us point to Morley Callaghan as our Toronto man, and hope that with our new literary governor-general in our midst, we may discover a whole new group of Canadians who may write novels as sound in character as has this graduate of our University and one time reporter of the Toronto Star.

Patriotism To The Front

National feeling is running at high pitch now in Italy and Ethiopia. Both nations are into the spirit of the war with a patriotism and feeling being exhibited on both sides that bids fair to make a fierce conflict of the situation.

Turning tables on the League of Nations and the sanctions they will impose November 18, citizens of Italian cities are jamming their way into shops displaying French perfumes and cosmetics and forcing proprietors to rid their stores of French and other "sanctionist" countries' goods. They are also boycotting films and operas, the authors of which are English. While the boycotts undertaken by the Italians will probably not materially affect league members' exports, still it does show that Mussolini's subjects are in no mood to be made the objects of measures intended by the league to promote peace.

Irrked by constant orders by Haile Selassie to retreat, and eager to stop the advance of Italians in the northern countries, chieftains and common soldiers are getting the feel of war in their blood and demanding that they be allowed to defend the Makale plain, the latest object of the Italian advance. The impetuous warriors in the north are ready to die, if necessary, to defend their homeland.

Under insistent demands of Selassie's staff, the Conquering Lion has consented to have his plans altered and may allow the warriors to defend the rich plain, although he plans to reserve his main defensive stand until later.

As patriotism continues to mount on both sides, the League of Nations, the pope, and other forces will find it increasingly difficult to apply effective sanctions, to issue mandates, or to enforce other measures to stop the war. Patriotism, when it reaches its zenith, is uncontrollable. National spirit, when aroused by war, has no regard for arbitrating bodies. —Southern California Trojan.

Most of pocket wisdom is conceived for the use of mediocre people, to discourage them from ambitious undertakings and generally console them in their mediocrity. —Stevenson.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

The H.C. Players' Guild

This afternoon Boccaccio's "Untold Tale" will be presented at the Player's Guild. This play is a one-act tragedy taking place at the time of the Great Plague. The players involved are Don Stuart, who plays the part of the poet, Florio; Constance Lailey in the role of Violante; and Carolyn Wesley, who portrays Florio's mistress, Olivia.

The play itself is a poetic drama in the familiar style of Boccaccio and should provide an interesting interpretation of the manners of his famous age.

Vic Team Reaches Mulock Finals By Surprise Win Over Jr. Meds

Scarlet and Gold Squad Score in Final Half to Earn Victory

CLINKETT OF MEDS INJURED

The Vic rugby team returned to the Mulock Cup finals after one year's absence as a result of their unexpected 5-4 victory over Jr. Meds yesterday afternoon at Varsity Stadium. To do this trick they had to overcome a four point lead amassed in the first quarter on a brilliant offensive by Meds. The game was the last word in a fumbling exhibition which gave the boys on the yardsticks plenty of running. Next Friday will see the windup of the local rugby season when Vic will try to wrest the interfaculty championship away from Dents.

By the play in the first quarter it looked as though Meds were going to run up a big score on the Scarlet and Gold just as everyone expected them to do. Willis kicked very weakly for Vic in this quarter, which, coupled with numerous fumbles, kept the ball in the Vic half of the field. Clinkett kicked a long one from the forty and Hodgetts was flattened before he could get out. Meds continued their rush and when one of Willis' kicks went straight up Meds recovered on Vic's thirty. From here McGee kicked a placement. This completed the scoring for the junior medicals and from then on they were on the defensive most of the time. A tough break for them came in this quarter when Clinkett was injured and had to retire. His long boots were missed, and certainly had a bearing on the final score. Carveth took over the punting duties but he was outdistanced by Willis, who kicked plenty of long ones after the first quarter.

There was no scoring until the third quarter, which came as a result of a Meds' fumble. This misdeed came on the Meds' twenty from where Willis kicked a point. Later in the quarter Meds again fumbled on their twenty from where Willis kicked a nice field goal from a difficult angle.

In the last quarter Willis continued to outkick Carveth. One of the big fellow's kicks was fumbled on the two yard line by Fleming and Vic recovered. The Meds line didn't yield an inch on two plunges, but Willis kicked the winning point. Meds made a brilliant attempt to tie it up when Carveth came on to boot a long one behind the Vic line which Hodgetts just managed to run out.

Willis was the standout performer for the winners, garnering all their points and making some nice gains through the line. Gregory also plunged well, and Holman did a good job of running back kicks. The tackling of Amos was brilliant, while a special word should be added for the accurate snaps of Elseley. Stars for Meds were Carveth, the cheer leaders and the band.

Vic: Gregory, Pratt, Holman, Willis; Hodgetts; Elseley; Broadway, Morrow; Gillespie, Wilson, Vaughan, Amos; LeGrice, Stewart, Cooper, Caserly, MacIntyre, McKone, McGill.

Jr. Meds: McGillough, Fleming, Carveth, Clinkett; McGee; Allan; Broadhead, Cavan; Jamieson, Barron; Lindsay, Wright; Graham, Bean, McLeod, Moore, McKone, McGill.

Queen's Will Not Play Hamilton Tigers

The Canadian Football Union last night rejected the challenge of Queen's University for the Canadian football championship. The challenge was rejected, according to reports, because Queen's University was not given the power to represent the Intercollegiate Union in the Dominion playdowns. Queen's failing to get the sanction of the Intercollegiate Union, challenged on their own behalf, but constitutional requirements forbade their acceptance. As a result Tigers will meet the winner of the Sarnia-Beach series. It was reported unlikely that Queen's would play an exhibition game with Tigers on Saturday.

VARSITY BOXERS ON GARDENS CARD

Three Amateur Students Will Meet Well Known Locals in Fight Card

ONE UNKNOWN OPPONENT

Three of Varsity's leading fighters will say it with leather tonight and mayhap bring back three victories from the amateur boxing bouts at Maple Leaf Gardens where they meet three downtown boxers of good repute. Highlight of the 45-round card is the heavyweight struggle in which Varsity's one and only Chas. Pocius clashes with Stein, well-known locally. In the 160 lb. event, Tom Burke of Varsity will mix it up with Harry Crab; and Jack Millson, of intercollegiate fame will meet an unknown opponent at 130 lbs. Fraser, whom Millson was billed to fight, has withdrawn his entry.

The Varsity leather-pushers were disappointed yesterday afternoon when Bobby Lawrence, Canada's leading featherweight, who was scheduled to come and give the boys a few pointers on what to do with their hands, did not arrive.

Pocius is expected to give Stein a rousing battle for the heavyweight honours. If Stein can withstand the big Varsity lad's punishing left and obliterating right, he will be good indeed. In practice sessions, Pocius has to be always very careful about drawing his punches, so Stein is due for an interesting time when Pocius really goes to work.

ST. HILDA'S FRESHIES LOSE TO VIC SENIORS

Favourites Win by 45-16;
Game Featured by Penalties

Last night at the O.C.E. gym U.C. Seniors did the expected thing in beating the St. Hilda's Freshies by the large score of 45-16. The game was featured by many penalties, mostly caused by the inexperience of the first year students. Joan Romeyn and Pat Pethick took advantage of the weakness of their guards and mounted up the score rapidly. Virginia Lander played a steady game for the Saints and did most of their scoring, while Joan McColl held up their defence.

U.C. Seniors: Pat Pethick (20), Joan Romeyn (19), Jennie St. Aubin (6), Billy McGarry, Jean Atkinson, Betty Robinson, Enor Kennedy.

St. Hilda's Freshies: Gladys Carveth (6), Virginia Lander (10), Betty Kirk, Mary Mayes, Ruth Middleboro, Margaret Munro, Mary Coburn, Joan McColl, Frances MacLean.

When students are late to classes at the University of Akron, they are fined five cents. The money is then put in a fund to buy benches on which students may sit during leisure hours.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crochower

Ace Bailey's puckchasers were given a small but rousing reception by Varsity fans at yesterday's O.H.A. inaugural up at the Arena. There were only about five hundred present to watch the proceedings but they certainly gave Bailey ample notice that they were behind his squad with heart and soul. It has been a long, long time since a Blue hockey squad was given the vociferous support it received last night. Furthermore if the Blues continue to put on displays similar to the one with which they thrilled their supporters last night attendance figures will show a sharp upward trend. Varsity's ice sextette didn't turn in a win last night but they did the next best thing—secured a tie. Starting the final period the Blues were down three goals mainly because of bad luck around the nets. A capable gentleman by the name of Teno was proving to be quite a stumbling block for the Blues. It seemed as though Bailey was to be handed a defeat on his first Senior O.H.A. assignment. However the lads in Blue, urged on by the loud cheers of their supporters, began to click and in less than nine minutes the score was tied.

Ade Lenahan sent the Blues on the road to partial victory by beating Teno on a beautiful raid with Valiquette and Charles assisting. Ade turned in a wonderful effort, his spirited play winning him many rounds of cheers. Bruce Charles got the next one for Varsity and McLellan and McPherson combined for the last goal of the game. Throughout the contest Bailey's lads performed creditably and should chalk up many a win this winter.

The Scarlet and Gold of Victoria will once more be seen in a Mulock Cup final on Friday due to yesterday's surprising win. Jr. Meds, favoured to win, were nosed out by a 5 to 4 count thanks to kicking of Lofty Willis. A great deal of fumbling marred the contest with both squads at fault in this respect. It seems as though the mere sight of the Stadium makes these Mulock Cup aspirants too nervous to turn in a good effort. On Friday afternoon Vic will meet Dents, the champions of last year, and this will finally put rugby around the campus on the shelf for another year.

Senior basketball practices will get under way tomorrow at 5 when Warren Stevens will return to the cage pastime after a year's absence. Ed Gold, Connelly, Marks, Newman, and Gordon of last year's squad Steve has a nucleus around which he should be able to build another champion. Fletcher, Whitwell and Garrett of Western will be welcome additions. The same may be said for Stroud of McMaster, Krakauer, Himel and Sullivan of last year's intermediates are likely senior prospects.

Blue hockey fans will be given another opportunity of cheering tonight when Varsity's entry in the T.H.L. Major circuit meet the Evening Telegram squad in the first game of a double-header. Three of Frankie Brown's lads will also be under fire tonight at Maple Leaf Gardens when they meet three of Toronto's classiest boxers.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. K.

Two very one-sided games last night eliminated St. Hilda's Freshies and Nurses from the play-offs, because although Nurses have two more games to play, they are out of the running whether they win or lose them. Freshies, in spite of the fact that they walked all over Nurses, are also out of the finals, which is really too bad because they have lost most of their games by only one point and are a match for any team, especially with two super shots like Alise Elshout and Johnnie Marshall.

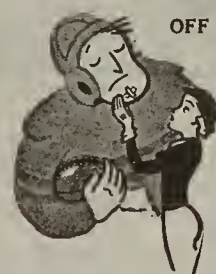

St. Hilda's Freshies were decidedly not equal to the superiority of the U.C. Seniors, as the score of 45-16 will indicate. This was partly because their guards are rather short and not too quick, but mostly because Pat Pethick and Joan Romeyn couldn't miss a shot and played beautiful games. Pat scored 20 and Joan 17 of the 45 points. Virginia Lander was the bright light on the Saints' team—she looks like good material for next year's senior team—and Gladys Carveth was right in there, too.

Even if it wasn't an important game everybody put all they had into it, plenty of free shot penalties were handed out and a good time was had by all. Besides their usual snappy red and white shorts and shirts U.C. had new sweater-shirts to keep them warm between periods, and cheer leaders to keep them pepped up on the floor.

Nothing has been decided about hockey so we'll just have to wait till somebody thinks it's time something should be done and calls a meeting to discuss chances for a team. In Toronto, the Pals are getting up on team, perhaps two, and Toronto Ladies Club are also thinking of it, but whether Varsity joins this league or any other depends on several things not yet decided.

EMMANUEL DENTS WIN IN VOLLEYBALL

Wycliffe and S.P.S. Each Lost Two Hard-Fought

ALL FOUR SCORES 15-8

Emmanuel and Dents interfaculty volleyball teams won over their respective opponents, Wycliffe and S. P. S. Juniors, yesterday in four well fought games.

Emmanuel took two straight games over Wycliffe 15-8, 15-8. Both were close enough to provide plenty of interest and excitement for those in attendance. The superiority in team play and greater precision in shots, especially those of Griffith, resulted in ultimate wins for the Emmanuel team with such a fair margin.

The second contest of the day between Dents and S. P. S., resulted in victories for Dents 15-8, 15-8. Dents came early to the front in scoring and maintained the lead throughout. The members of S.P.S. lacked combination skill but played much better towards the finish.

Although none of the victors were outstanding in the application of any special technique in play, it was interesting to note that both Emmanuel and Dents maintained their positions to a greater degree than either Wycliffe or S.P.S.

Dents: Wildfong, Choddoroff, Hamilton, Kingsberg, Shankman, Shukens. Jr. S.P.S.: Hewson, Leggett, Woodbridge, Coy, Fargesson, Nesbitt, Lewis, Cowan.

Emmanuel: Griffith, Jones, Gladman, Armstrong, Taylor, Stewart, Rapson.

Wycliffe: Fairweather, Paterson, Cardy, Ruche, Simmons, Chevis, and Newton-Smith.

Vic defeated Meds yesterday 24-22 in an exciting baseball game at the Vic gym. Vic had a full team but Meds were handicapped by having only six players. In spite of that, with the score 19-4 for Vic at the end of the third inning, the Medley team pulled up and gave Vic a close game. Greta Maxwell, catcher, and Jean Blondell, the pitcher, were the chief supports for Meds, and Ruth Leavens played well for Vic.

since it differs according to many factors, including the type of product and the type of consumer, which vary in every community and country. In England one appeals to the humour, in America the love motive is predominant while in Germany, which heads modern layouts, an appeal is made to the eye.

Miss King described the routine of department store advertising and outlined the purpose of a good ad which must call attention to the product, create first an interest in it, then a desire for it, finally inducing immediate action. This requires familiarity with the product and the prospective purchaser. It is, she emphasized, absolutely necessary to suit your language in the copy to the audience to whom you are appealing.

Modern advertising also demands a sincerity and permits no misrepresentations such as the old-fashioned cure-all remedies of our grandmother's day. It must also have a definite appeal to our sense of vanity, economy, comfort, pride and humour.

SPECIALIZED COURSE UPHELD BY WOMEN

Co-ed Debaters from Victoria Win Judge's Decision Over St. Hilda's

University women would be wiser to choose a specialized course than a general one, according to the decision of the house at the St. Hilda's-Victoria debate, held under the auspices of the Women's Interfaculties Debating Union at Wymilwood yesterday. Marion Ridout, president of the Union, was in the chair. The motion before the house was "Resolved, that for University women a specialized course is preferable to a general one." Victoria, represented by Margaret Fleming and Helen Carscallen, took the affirmative, while Trinity, with Roxalyn Read and Elspeth Chisholm, upheld the negative.

"Education is a way of life just as truly as religion is a way of life," asserted Peggy Fleming, the first speaker for the affirmative; and only through specialization, which gives "scholarly mastery", as opposed to assimilation of a mass of "heterogeneous facts", is the full value of education to be realized. General courses tend to skim the surface of knowledge, she continued, besides often giving the student a biased viewpoint. Through specialization, women may overcome their inherent sense of inferiority and their lack of initiative and leadership.

Roxalyn Read, speaking for the negative, based her argument on the statement that motherhood and marriage are the most important things in a woman's life, since all mothers bring their daughters up to believe that this is true. "To be a successful wife, you must be able to discuss intelligently the problems of the day," she asserted, and only through a broad general course can a variety of interests be attained.

"Specialization has brought women where they are today," said Helen Carscallen, second speaker for the affirmative. "I exhort you all to waste no time in getting into a specialized course." Specialization leads to discrimination, deeper research, clearer thinking and more careful definition. Miss Carscallen denounced "bargain counter" courses, offering in her opinion, only scraps and patches of information.

Elspeth Chisholm, second speaker for the negative, said that it was up to women graduates to educate the communities in which they live. Thus a broad scope of interest and information is necessary. Education, she declared, is not primarily utilitarian in purpose, but must give to the graduate some basis for criticism and some standard judgment.

The decision of the judges was given to the affirmative because of superior material, but it was felt that the negative was the victor as far as delivery was concerned.

BLUES TIE OAKVILLE IN INITIAL GAME

city onslaughts on the Oakville Citadel. Playing rather listless hockey in the first few minutes of play, neither team was able to gain any edge, as both resorted to close checking until eight minutes of play had elapsed. On a peculiarly fine drive the Oakville "Vilans", led by Peer, crashed through the Blue defence to make a pass to P. Allen, who shoved the puck past Shipman. With McClelland serving a penalty the Oakville sextet pressed their advantage but the Varsity defensive tactics held them off well. On one of these rushes McIlquham broke clear to try Teno but with no result.

Although a little outplayed in the first period, Varsity came out in the middle spasm to lead a strong offensive, battling hard to subdue the shifty Oakville crew and incurring several penalties in their anxiousness to barge through. When Sutcliffe tripped MacPherson at the blue line Varsity set up a five-man power play but "Sonny" Townsley broke clear to smash a rebound from Shipman into the nets. Pressing their advantage of a bewildered Blue crew, Purce Allen coasted in on a brilliant solo effort to score again for Oakville on a play similar to that of Townsley's. With a whirlwind rush the Varsity offensive attacks finally were rewarded with their first goal when Charles took the puck to the blue line to relay a pass to Valiquette, who in turn combined with Lenahan to beat Teno. In an attempt to block out Allen Charles was penalized but on returning to the ice snatched a pass out by McClelland at the Oakville blue line, making no mistake in parking the disc behind Teno. Within another minute a clever passing play by MacPherson to McClelland resulted in the tying counter. Although both squads tried hard no further scoring ensued.

The two overtime periods had plenty of well planned attacks, all of which were frustrated by clever netminding, and the final gong found Varsity with a 3-3 tie in their first game of the season.

MOSCOW FESTIVAL TO BE PORTRAYED

Miss Watts, Student of New Drama in Russia and New York

TORONTO GRADUATE

"The Moscow Theatre Festival" is the subject of an address to be given this afternoon in Hart House Theatre by "Jimmie" Watts. Miss Watts graduated a few years ago in Psychology and since that time she has been studying here and abroad the new trend in drama. This autumn she went to the Moscow Theatre Festival, now the most famous event in the dramatic world. At the Festival she had an opportunity to see the astounding advances made by the Soviet Union in stage craft and acting and to estimate the spirit and vitality of the Russian theatre.

Last year Miss Watts studied in New York in the Theatre of Action and was connected with such outstanding people as Clifford Odets now considered the foremost of American dramatists. Miss Watts since returning from (Continued on Page 3)

Forty-sixth School Dinner Taxes Hart House Facilities

B. K. Sandwell Advises Against Undermining of Existing Systems

FORMER VARSITY EDITOR

"Greatest School Dinner in History" Acclaims Dr. Cody

Livened by the combined comic concatenations of "Hoosegow" Stickney and "Gangster's Moll" Campbell, "Birdy" Eaton, "One-man-band" Rouse, the University Trio and a four-star array of guests, the forty-sixth annual School Dinner brought 499 engineers together in Hart House last night in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the University of Toronto Engineering Society.

B. K. Sandwell, managing editor of Saturday Night and former editor of The Varsity, was guest speaker of the evening. Following a Brobdingnagian turkey dinner and a long toast list, he confined his talk to a few humorous comments on the intellectual advances made by engineers since his day, quoting the two jokes about the Kentucky mountaineer who only had 17 children because he "found out what caused it" and the Ottawa blacksmith who could not spell hospice, and concluding with the suggestion that students go slow in supporting economic change.

"Do not press too closely for economic or political changes until you know where the changes are going to lead," he said. "I have no objection to socialism, but I do object to undermining one system until we have definitely decided to adopt another system. It is possible to destroy the profit system unknowingly, without intending to, and leave no choice in the matter."

Mr. Sandwell told of his early life, when he graduated from the classics course and went his way unprepared for any useful occupation, and so drifted into journalism. He became a professor of economics at McGill University because he wanted to learn something about economics. "McGill, at the time, was a proud, wealthy and efficient (Continued on Page 4)

Religious Essence Seen in Communism

Religion Defined As Being Worthwhile for Self and Others

In Communism, capitalism and even science you find the essence of religion in its broad sense, was the message of Rev. E. L. Wasson to the S.C.M. group at the Women's Union last night, in his talk on "Psychology and Religion". "Religion," according to the speaker, "is devotion to what one holds to be supremely worthwhile, not only for oneself but for all human living."

Psychology and religion, often looked upon as directly conflicting in viewpoint, were shown by Mr. Wasson to be really working towards the same end—the adjustment to human relationships, as best expressed in true friendship and love. "This is the ideal of the 'abundant life' and it is not until you (Continued on Page 3)

APPEAL TO CANADIANS FOR INDIAN PROJECT

Mrs. Lucille Jacob made an earnest appeal for help to Canadians to support a physical education project being organized in India. In her address, which was given to Victoria women at Wymilwood on Tuesday afternoon, Mrs. Jacob described the social conditions under which Indian girls are living; she also spoke of the work which is being done in Bombay by another Canadian, Miss Margaret Burton.

Caesar Studies Self In "Ruddy Hades"

Professor's Home Turned to Hades to Present Pompey and Caesar

CICERO ALSO THERE

The Classical Association of University College last night turned the home of Professor Owen into Hades (temporarily) and in the red glare Pompey, Caesar and Cicero defended their earthly careers.

In a speech interspersed with rolling Ciceronian periods, H. Newman outlined his career, dwelling on his life to the title of "Pater Patriae" and denouncing both Pompey and Caesar for the illegality of their actions.

H. Blanchard as Pompey declared modestly that "All I desired was to be the recognized protector of the Roman State, showered with fitting honours." After a bitter passage of arms with Caesar, he consoled himself with the reflection, "however, had I been victorious, probably I instead of you, would have been assassinated."

As Caesar, M. E. Dell displayed all that calm superiority that is so evident in the "commentaries." "I spend most of my time down here in studying my own career. I find it most fascinating," he said blandly. He admitted that he was always guided more by feeling than by moral principles, but asserted that "for a sound and thorough reconstruction of the state, a military power was necessary."

SITUATION IN FRANCE SUBJECT OF ADDRESS TO STUDENT LEAGUE

The Student League of Canada is fortunate in having secured Professor Felix Walter as speaker this Thursday evening at Wynilwood. Professor Walter, who teaches French at Trinity College, possesses an outstanding academic record, having studied at McGill and at the University of Paris.

A keen observer and commentator, his articles have been printed in many leading periodicals. He has just returned from one of his frequent trips to Europe, where he was able, through his influential connections, to secure an unbiased view of the political situation, especially in France.

Aimee Semple Calls Their Bluff Buck Retorts in Frenzied Huff

Apparently ever since the time of Professor Diogenes Teufelsdröckh there has existed a group of men "what hates females". The professor, who will recall, was that estimable and eminent savant who, while looking down on life from above, collated his observations in six paper bags and let women alone.

Acting on information that misogyny was rampant among certain sections of the student body we set out to beard the lions in their dens. It's the gypsy in us.

Do you know?—and this is one thing that every young girl ought to know—that a considerable number of young men about the campus are confirmed misogynists. (Their mothers did them wrong.)

Aimee Semple McPherson regards such individuals as adolescent. Let me tell you what Hart Buck thinks of them. "Are you a woman hater?" we asked. "Your Buckeyed right," replied Hart. Obviously Mr. Buck could not be termed adolescent—in intellect, so

HERMANT LIKES U.B.C. CO-EDS

Below is an interview reprinted from the University of British Columbia paper, given by Sidney Hermant, B.A., while he was representing the undergraduates of the University of Toronto in a debating tour of the Canadian West.

"The University of British Columbia is the nearest thing I've ever seen to an American college in Canada," stated Sidney Hermant in an interview given to the Ubysey at the Tea Dance Saturday afternoon.

Questioned regarding co-eds at U.B.C. in comparison to those at the University of Toronto, he said: "I've never seen so many beautiful girls in one place before. They don't have (Continued on Page 4)

PARLIAMENTARY CLUB DEBATE RECIPROCITY

The new Canadian-United States tariff agreement will be debated at the University College Parliamentary Club today. The motion will read "That this club opposes the new tariffs with the United States."

Nazis Preserve Race Is McCordick's View

Have Given Hope to Youth and Unity to Country, He Says

RUSSIA BUREAUCRATIC

That the Nazi Government has given Germany unity and its youth some hope in the future, while Russia is still incompletely managed, was the opinion of J. A. McCordick and J. Jeffries, speaking at the Macdonald-Cartier Club last night on the new Germany and the new Russia.

J. A. McCordick gave a very clear delineation of the attitude of the Nazi regime towards the Jews. "In the opinion of the Nazi party," he said, "the grounds upon which their treatment of the Jews is based lie in the desire to guard the strength and health of the German race."

Hilder has stated that every kind of life is a self-contained life. Hybrids are never healthy. To the German mind, Germans have a right to defend their race from decay, and it casts no aspersions on the Jews.

The Nazi government has, in Jack McCordick's opinion, and experience done a great deal for Germany. It has revived tradition, given Germany unity, rid the country of communism, and given youth some hope. Its ideal is the (Continued on Page 4)

Bizarre in Dress Art Ball's Stress

Bohemian Atmosphere to be Created by Original Costumes

ALL STUDENTS INVITED

All that is Bohemian in the students at the Ontario College of Art will blossom forth tomorrow night, November 22, when they hold the first of this year's arty extravaganzas. Costumes for this Bal Bohème are left to your imagination. The idea is to dress in a manner as unconventional and bizarre as possible. The artists have extended an open invitation to all students and everybody is welcome as long as they dress in a decrepit-enough fashion. Singing Sam Morgan and his ebony-coloured ten-piece band will turn on the heat from nine until two a.m.

The finest artistic talents of the college have been combined to furnish the colourful decorations necessary to create that certain atmosphere. The refreshments will be unusual and satisfying. The locale is the Art College, Grange Park (Dundas and McCaul).

Watch Belongings Warns Supt. LePan

During the past few weeks there have been several thefts on the campus. Four purses have disappeared from the women's washroom in University College and a coat from one of the other buildings. A. D. LePan, superintendent of the University buildings and grounds, wishes to warn all students that it is dangerous to leave their belongings about, and that the women in particular should keep their purses always with them.

Every effort is being made to apprehend the sneak thief. The superintendent feels that within the next few days something a little more definite will be known on the subjects, and until then he wishes to impress upon the students the extreme risk they run in leaving their belongings lying around

Escott Reid Pointed Out How League Has Failed in Two Ways

PERSONAL VIEWS

'Canada not Obligated to Apply Sanctions Against Italy'

The League of Nations has already failed in that it did not propose satisfactory peace terms to Italy before hostilities began and will probably fail again in the terms it imposes on Ethiopia when peace is resumed, said Escott Reid, secretary of the Institute of International Affairs, in the Music Room of Hart House yesterday. He made it clear that he was not speaking for the Institute, which as a body takes no sides in any question, but that he was expressing his own views only.

Confessing that he could not find a reason for the difference that exists between the attitude of Canada and that of the United States toward the League, Mr. Reid, however, suggested that the real reason Canada is supporting sanctions against Italy is that Canada has no traditional foreign policy. The United States, on the other hand, (Continued on Page 4)

"Scottie" Acclaims Co-eds As Being "Better Than Ever" This Year

NO SMOKING PROBLEM

Archie Bain, better known as "Scottie" or Archie, head caretaker of University College, will, by January next, have passed twenty-eight years in the employ of the University, and hopes to continue working with them for years to come.

When The Varsity inquired regarding the plethoritude of U.C. femininity of this year, as compared with that of other years, Archie tactfully replied, "Better than ever." The men in almost every respect seem little different from those of the past. Both the men and women do pretty well what they are told, and are pretty good about not smoking in the halls.

VARSITY STUDENTS IN CAR COLLISION

Two U.C. Undergraduates Hurt—Man Still in Hospital, Girl Rests at Home

When their car was struck by another auto last Tuesday night, both Norman Delarue, IV U.C., and Kay Westlake, III U.C., were quite badly injured and removed immediately to St. Michael's Hospital. Miss Westlake was discharged yesterday morning but Mr. Delarue will remain in the hospital for the next few days.

The accident took place about 10.30 when the students were returning from the French Club meeting at the Women's Union. Both received head injuries and minor cuts and bruises. The doctor has ordered quiet and rest for Mr. Delarue. Miss Westlake will not be up and around for about a week. She was recovering as well as could be expected last night and her family have requested that no one phone the house as friends can co-operate best by letting the patient sleep.

Facts and Prejudices

It is well-known that two men with different leanings can draw two utterly opposed sets of conclusions from the same data. This difficulty is especially interesting—and annoying—when investigating a subject like Fascism, where partisan prejudice is apt to be very strong.

To illustrate the point briefly, let us take two pertinent articles from past issues of Current History, June 1934, and May 1935—the former written by a British engineer-economist; the latter, by an Italian professor at Columbia University. The theme could be illustrated with regard to every point which they make, but we shall confine ourselves to 2 prime topics; namely, standards of living and unemployment.

Hugh Quigley, the British economist, sets out to prove that "Fascism Fails Italy". First he deals with the standard of living. How has Fascism dealt with the labourer? The average hourly wage, he finds, dropped between 1928-33 from over 2 lire to 1.5 lire, equivalent at par to eight cents an hour, indicating that "under Fascism labour is worse paid than in almost any other European country." At the same time the deflationary policy of the government has prevented it from alleviating sensibly the position of the masses through social legislation. The rather heavy expenditures on public works have been confined to harbours and railways. So far are the Fascists from providing adequate housing for the people that "slum areas have been cleared for grandiose conceptions like . . . the great boulevard . . . in Rome, but no real provision has been made for rehousing the population thus displaced. In this respect, Fascist history has been one of indifference.

Registered unemployment rose from 440,000 to 1,100,000 in the six years from 1928-34, an increase of over 2½ times. But Mr. Quigley estimates the total unemployment figure for 1934 (inclusive of agriculture) at close to 2 mill. At least one-third of all industrial workers lack employment. Thus Fascism has failed as miserably as any other country in dealing with this vital problem.

Now look at the picture presented by Signor Marraro. Nominal wages have fallen by ¼ during 1928-33, he admits. But let us take present real wages, and let us compare them, not with pre-depression conditions, but with pre-Fascist conditions. Real hourly wages have increased from before 1922 by 54 per cent; real daily wages by 22 per cent. Hours of labour have been shortened, and numerous social legislation has been enacted. Housing, too, has had 500 million lire devoted to it since 1925. Above all, the Italian of today is much better fed than he was before the war. Even during the period 1928-33 the per capita food supply increased from 845 lire to 1310 lire. Moreover, the consumption of semi-luxuries like telephones and automobiles has increased five-fold between 1914 and 1933. Increase in savings deposits likewise indicate raised standards of living, Prof. Marraro avers.

The total unemployed for the middle of 1934, is estimated at 880,000 and the ratio of unemployed to total workers at 4 per cent which "compares very favourably with the record of other countries." The low percentage of unemployed, Prof. Marraro attributes to the more efficient organization of the labour market in Italy. Thus he concludes that Fascism, judged on its ability to improve the condition of the people and cope with the major problem of unemployment, must be pronounced an outstanding success.

How are we going to reconcile two such differing estimates of Mussolini's regime? Obviously, one or both of these experts must have used some specious reasoning. Their inconsistencies may be summed up under two heads: partisan selection of facts and different criteria for success. Mr. Quigley, for instance, attempts to prove that the standard of living has fallen because money wages have fallen; and while he admits that prices in Italy have dropped even faster than wages, he slurs over the point and maintains that increased unemployment takes care that general purchasing power is reduced. But this does not alter the fact that individual real wages may be better than before. The British economist has selected data that suited his case and neglected unfavourable circumstances.

Marraro, moreover, introduces another criterion, one which is more logically consistent. He compares conditions in the Fascist regime with pre-Fascist conditions, instead of confining himself to conditions before and after 1929 and to comparisons with other countries. Thus it is that Quigley correctly deduces the conclusion that Fascism has been no more successful in combating the depression than other capitalist countries; while Marraro concludes that Fascism has bettered conditions as compared with the situation before its advent.

But the Columbia professor has no hesitation in switching over to the criterion of contemporary comparison when it suits his purpose. Italy has coped with the unemployment problem because her percentage of unemployed is more favourable than that of Britain, France and the United States. He does not tell of the enormous increase in unemployment as compared with pre-war conditions.

But even the use of the before-and-after comparison, though usually justified, can be readily falsified. The comparison of pre-war consumption of automobiles and telephones with modern consumption is merely humorous. In making these comparisons and in noting the significant increase in savings deposits, Marraro fails utterly to prove that the mass of workers or peasants enjoy a better existence. Figures for the distribution of consumption and income are necessary, and they are not given.

Finally, Marraro's contention that adequate social services, and especially adequate housing, have been provided the people is not sustained by the argument. Nothing could be more damning to the Fascist contention than the professor's admission that in 10 years Italy has spent only 500 million lire ($44 million) to relieve the desperate housing situation, when we recall the billions of lire spent annually on railways, and armaments.

The platitudinous conclusion that arises from this investigation is that we must never trust to one side of the argument to provide us with complete information. We must beware of our sources, and examine their premises. We hear you saying: "Does it not behoove you to go to the original sources themselves, and draw therefrom your own conclusions?" To this charge we have no answer to make. It is unanswerable—save only for one thing: tempos fugit. Life holds innumerable things to be done, and only the specialist who is prepared to devote his days to such research, can adequately cover the primary data. As for us, we shall have to be content with culling our knowledge from second-hand sources, always beware lest we accept them on faith.

One definite value of a college education was proved recently at Ohio State, where the dean of women asked women what they considered were the most desirable qualities for a co-ed to possess. Upperclassmen voted that, next to a good family, good morals were the most important. But, according to freshmen, good morals was No. 14 on the list.—Southern California Trojan.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

The M.C. Players' Guild

The title of the play produced by the Guild yesterday afternoon, Boccaccio's Untold Tale, resolves itself rather simply into the fact that Boccaccio neither told it or wrote it, but a man named Kent did—and as a finishing touch, or a gesture of modest renunciation, attached Boccaccio's name to it, explaining (see title) that the latter didn't write it at all. This isn't plagiarism, but it's a trifle involved.

Whatever we may think of its author, we must admit that there was some rather good work done in this play by the actors. Connie Bailey as Lady Violante gave a commendable performance, though nothing less than the plague could atone for the resounding boom of her exit. Don Stuart as Florio gave the play a touch of Boccaccio; such a poet might step from his books.

The entire set was arranged to produce consciousness of the Plague in the very atmosphere. It was there in a number of details, worked out carefully, giving evidence of thoughtful direction. In fact, we liked this play; the Guild is producing better things this year, and decidedly, this is one of them.

Massey Hall

Ballet is an acquired taste like most other delicacies. If, of course, it is a part of the regular diet it is swallowed without much fuss even though it may be appreciated. As far as the Ballet goes, Colonel W. de Basil's Ballet Russe, which appeared last night in Massey Hall, and which will again perform this evening, gives a very finished and delightful program. For those of us to whom the dance is the highest form of personal expression the ballet appears overly artificial. For instance, it is a bit hard to get accustomed to people interfering with the flow of a dance in order to get set for a particular movement. Or it seems too unreal when the same step is used for a sad part and a cheery part with only a difference in tempo and music.

Accepting the ballet, however, the Ballet Russe presents a very interesting array of dance. Their first was Le Mariage D'Aurora, which was a celebration in honour of Aurora and which gave opportunity to mass together an array of ten different feature dancer.

The second number was Les Cent Baisers, a ballet based on a fairy tale of Hans Anderson which was a very straightforward dance act in which the story completely developed. Outstanding in the ballet was the excellent dancing of Irina Baranova as The Princess.

The feature of the evening was the Prince Igor Ballet or more specifically the Polovtsian Dances from the Opera Prince Igor. In this dance the steps were more natural and got away from the stereotyped movements used in the others. The scenery and costumes were also out of the ordinary. They were designed by the famous Nicolas Roerich, who made a name for himself by his rather eccentric but very vital paintings.

The ballet is the art most nearly akin to the drama. Each dancer dances a part, which has been arranged for him or her by a director or choreographer. It must be judged primarily on the complete picture which it gives and secondly on the technique of the individual dancers. The Ballet Russe is not unconventional or extraordinary. It is the exponent of one phase of

Varsity Boxers Achieve Win in Two Out of Three Bouts

Millson and Pocius Exhibit
Sterling Form—Popular

BURKE ALSO GOOO

Outfighting their downtown opponents by creditable margins, Frankie Brown's prize proteges, Charley Pocius, Charley Burke and Johnnie Millson, showed realistic ability at Maple Leaf Gardens last night, earning no less than two technical knockouts and a close though lost decision in the third.

Chas. Pocius, Varsity's one and only heavyweight, brought the house down when he smothered Lennie Stein under a heavy barrage of lefts and rights and flattened him three times in 45 seconds. Pocius landed a hard right cross to the jaw and Stein went down for four counts, staggered to his feet and then went down again, automatically surrendering the fight while the mob booed vigorously. It was championship action.

Johnnie Millson, 118 lb. intercollegiate champion, fighting at 126, won the referee's decision after 1 minute and 20 seconds of the fifth round though his opponent, Harold Hancock of St. James A.C., made a most courageous effort. Charley Burke, at 160 lbs., lost the decision to Harry Greb of the Elm-grove Club but got the best of the fight, never being in any great difficulty and knocking his man to the canvas in the second round.

Johnnie Millson out-manoeuvred his man right from the first and repeatedly pushed him in the fact with straight lefts. Hancock tried to rush the fight but got the worst of it nearly every time he came in. Hancock began to wilt under Millson's punishing right in the third round and only lasted out the fourth by the gamest display of sheer grit. The Varsity boy looked tired but had enough left to finish his adversary. The referee stopped the bout when Hancock was practically out on his feet.

Only lack of condition prevented Charley Burke from winning a third victory for Varsity. Burke showed a greatly improved form though he was perhaps over-cautious. Only once did he really open up and then Greb hit the canvas. Greb won on his offensive tactics.

Varsity Beavers Bow to Tely Team

Ahead on Combination Play but Fail to Out-Distance Reporters

SCORE 1-0

The Varsity Beavers went down to a 1-0 defeat to the Tely last night in the Varsity Arena in the opening game of the Toronto Hockey League before a near capacity house.

The Beavers, with four junior players completing the team, had the edge in combination play but every time they went ahead the reporters were fast enough to catch up. The only goal was scored from a scramble in front of the Varsity net after five minutes of play in the second period.

The Beaver defence was outstanding. Brown handing out several stiff body-checks. The play in the first period was evenly divided, the Telegram had the edge in the second. After an inspiring pep talk the Beavers came out in the third period and kept the play well in the opposing zone but were unable to beat Carey in the net. No penalties were imposed.

Beavers: Goal, Shipman; defence, Sissons, Driscoll; forwards, Burchell, Creasy, Galaway; alternates, Boddington, Stavart, Disler, Craig.

Telegram: Goal, Carey; defence, Boston, McKay; forwards, Pipher, Johnson, Nicholson; alternates, Cranston, Adams, Scott, Hamilton.

Referees: Mollenhauer, Allen.

O.C.E. BEATS FORESTRY —LEAD ALL THE WAY

Allison Stars in Lacrosse Fixture, Score 12-7 Despite Rally

In a highly-contested lacrosse game played yesterday afternoon in the main gym, O.C.E. defeated Forestry by a score of 12-7.

Allison of O.C.E. started the scoring three minutes after the start and from then on it was O.C.E.'s game. In the O.C.E. squad Allison led the scoring with a total of 5 points. Coulter, Greer and Calderone each made 2, and Lancaster 1. For Forestry, D'Argiviel, Cowan and Larson each scored 2 which, together with the 1 scored by Mundy, made a total of 7.

The Forestry rally in the last few minutes of the game resulted in a gain of 4 points.

O.C.E.: Cozzi, Calderone, Allison, Lancaster, Coulter, Greer and Cochrane. Forestry: McConnell, Mundy, Larson, Cowan, Powell, Grisdal, Ballantyne and D'Argiviel.

Nurses Swamped By Saints' Team

Ineffective Passing Assures Defeat for Luckless Nurses

SCORE 44-7

St. Mike's claimed another victory last night, when they swamped the Nurses fairly decisively by a score of 44-7. In the opening half of the game, the play was sloppy on both sides, but even so early in the tussle the superiority of the winning team was apparent. Mary McCarthy on the Double Blue forward line, started the scoring by sinking three baskets in a row. The passing on the part of the Nurses was the weakest and most ineffective yet displayed on the O.C.E. floor and Lady Luck was just not with their shots. By the end of this period the Saint Michaels had garnered 18 points, while the Nurses managed to score only 4.

In the final half, both teams seemed to be trying harder, but the losing squad couldn't get through the fine defence of the Blue and Blues to score. Lillie Read did some good work on the forward line of the Public Healthiers, but the other players on the team didn't co-operate. For the winners Gerry Ryan and Vinetta Burke put in some flashy forwarding, and Mary Gallagher on their defence line was outstanding. The Nurses were definitely outclassed by their speedier opponents in this match, as is indicated by the final score.

St. Mike's: Sunny McLaughlan (6), Gerry Ryan (11), Mary McCarthy (8), Vinetta Burke (19), Neanie Halinan, Mary Gallagher, Marg Flahiff, Eileen Bradley, Mary Hutchison.

Nurses: Muriel Tate, Terry Dumond, Jean Kemp (2), Orpha Bush (2), Lillie Read (3), Ruth Kent, Ruth Hindmarsh, Alexa Broadfoot, Bay Little.

Maladjustment to life was then discussed in its psychological aspects. The dangerous years were shown to be from about twelve to twenty-two. "It is in these years that emotional unrest becomes greatly increased, often driving a person to unhealthy and extreme ideas such as amateur agnosticism and extreme conservatism. One must, however, meet his problems frankly. In order to live life to its fullest," was the speaker's concluding injunction.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Frank Lamberti

The long quest for the Arts Faculty Cup, emblem of soccer supremacy, will have reached the semi-final stage this afternoon when S.P.S., defending champions, and the Scarlet and Gold soccerites of Victoria clash for the right to continue against Dents in the final series. The second game, with goals to count on the round, is scheduled for Saturday.

Last Saturday before 80,000 madly cheering spectators the West Point grid men, known as the Army, gained a 6-6 draw with Notre Dame much to the consternation of the football experts, yet what a change has come over football fans since this game has become a classic in the annals of sport. It was only in 1913 that the then mighty Army squad first engaged a comparatively unknown squad from South Bend. At the end of half time the score stood Army 13, Notre Dame 0, but with a whirlwind passing attack the Notre Dame forces came back to smash over a 35-13 victory, a direct result of the pass combination of the famed Knute Rockne and Dorais. Since then these contests have obtained national interest in the East and the Notre Dame marches on.

The recent disappearance of the Blue and White goal posts at Varsity Stadium recalls an innovation introduced at Yankee Stadium last Saturday by the head ground keeper. After a major rugby clash a typical scene on the American gridirons is to have a milling crowd do battle for the possession of the goal posts, often resulting in minor injuries. However, this hazard was reduced perceptibly when uniformed gentlemen kindly pulled the posts and laid them down for the delectation of the souvenir hungry fans. A kind deed indeed.

The whirling gyrations of the Canadian Rugby Union to determine whether Queen's may challenge Hamilton in the Eastern rugby semi-finals culminated in acceptance and probably Saturday afternoon Reeve's band of grid cohorts will demonstrate their prowess, we hope much to the detriment of the Hamilton squad.

The St. Michael's volleyball squad have hung up their fourth consecutive victory in their group and appear to be headed for the semi-finals. Under the influence and play of Biskiey the Double Blue squad have improved greatly and last night gained 15-12, 15-11, victories over Jr. U.C.

This afternoon the devotees of the cage pastime will see the first workout of the Big Blue cagers under the tutelage of Warren Stevens. With many of his last year's potent crew and several newcomers Varsity should have a great squad.

The improvement of the University of Toronto senior hockey squad has marked the inauguration of a new spirit amongst the spectators, all of which proved the words of little Grenville Henderson, mascot of the Blue team. "Grenny," as he is known to the boys, says in part, "With Ace Bailey to coach the blueshirts and the presence of a new spirit amongst the hockeyists, and with Frank 'Roscoe' Jackson to assist in keeping the boys supple, we should see the Blues at least in a play-off berth." We hope you are right, "Grenny".

The University of Toronto boxing contingent of three made a great showing to gain two K.O. victories in the bouts held at Maple Leaf Gardens last night. Charles Burke was rather unfortunate to drop a decision to Harry Greb, but Millson showed plenty of power to earn a technical knockout over Harry Hancock. Pocius, with his sleep producing right, sent Lenny Stein into the arms of Morpheus within 45 seconds, giving Stein's handlers a rude jolt.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

The Nurses lost yet another basketball game last night when St. Mike's swamped them 44-7. Since Mary Parsons was injured last week, their team has been weakened considerably. They are now definitely out of the struggle for group honours. St. Mike's and Vic Seniors will fight it out in this group for the right to enter the semi-finals, when they play tonight in O.C.E. gym from eight to nine. This is the game that should have been played on November 7.

In the other groups, St. Hilda's Seniors are leading theirs with five wins and no losses, with one game yet to come. If U.C. Seniors can take Occupational Therapy tonight they too will enter the semi-finals.

It seems that because of all the basketball games which have been played lately, very few of the teams have had many practices. U.C. Juniors have had only one in the last few weeks. Occupational Therapy have had very few, and the Nurses have had none, because they have played games for about three nights a week. Because time is so valuable, it has been suggested that when two games are scheduled for the same night, half of one should be played, and then the first half of the second, while the first team is resting. In this way the minutes lost at half time under the present system, could be used to good advantage. However, there are also arguments against the idea, and it is up to the executive to decide whether it would be practical.

SWIMMING EVENTS INITIATE SEASON

Promising Freshmen Prospects
Inspire Interest in Junior Interfaculty Meet

TRINITY FAVOURED

Next Wednesday the swimming exponents from the various faculties will line up in Hart House pool to officially open this year's swimming program. The occasion is the Junior Interfaculty meet. Only swimmers who have not competed in any Intercollegiate swimming meets or those who have not won a first place in any Senior Interfaculty meet will be allowed to compete.

As this is the occasion when the freshmen make their initial competitive appearance, much interest is being exhibited in wondering how they will shape up, for upon them rests in a large measure our Intercollegiate hopes for the coming season.

All the colleges and faculties are confident of bringing to the fore a real strong team this year. There seems to be little doubt, however, that Trinity College, according to tradition, has by far the strongest team, both in freshmen and in the swimmers of previous years. Victoria and U.C. also are working up considerable enthusiasm, and, incidentally, some fine swimmers. Meds and S.P.S. can be counted on to provide plenty of major competition.

The meet is scheduled to start at 8 p.m. sharp. The starter has warned the teams that the meet is to start at that time even if he has to jump in and swim the races himself.

university," he added, "and not, as now, reduced to selling matches to raise funds."

President Cody, replying to the toast to the University, congratulated the Engineering Society on the greatest School Dinner in history, and Kent Barker, Architect president, on his decoration of the Great Hall, which brought to light the S.P.S. motto "Meekness and Peacefulness." He expressed confidence that graduate work in the faculty would be enlarged as a result of recent bequests.

Dean Mitchell replied briefly to the toast to the school, reading some of the minutes from the first meetings of the Engineering Society in 1885, and enlarging on the necessity of concentration when playing golf at Murray Bay.

Prizes for the faculty's scholarship winners were presented by President Cody to the winners, who were introduced by Bill Lawrason, president of the Engineering Society and chairman for the dinner. A singsong conducted by Ross Workman, and entertainment under the arrangement of Bill Annis completed the most vociferous School Dinner in fifty years' history.

ISOLATION MOVEMENT STATED AS POSSIBLE

has a strong isolationist tradition.

There are three schools of thought on foreign policy in the States, Mr. Reid pointed out. The first believes that munitions embargoes should be applied only against aggressor nations; the second, and stronger school, favours even stricter neutrality than is now being practised; the third, the armament interests, are opposed to both these attitudes and will fight neutrality legislation during the next session of Congress.

With regard to Canada's support of the League in the present situation Mr. Reid stated, "Any international lawyer could prove that Canada is not obligated to apply economic sanctions against Italy, because of the change of circumstances that has taken place since 1919." Canada's presuppositions at the signing of the Covenant were that the League was to be universal, that there would be an extensive treaty revision following the war, and that there would be a drastic reduction of armaments. None of these presuppositions has been realized, Mr. Reid emphasized.

He also minimized the importance of the claims that Canada is supporting the League because either the League or British interests are at stake. The most important reason is that since there is no traditional foreign policy in Canada, the Canadian government, not knowing what public opinion would say, takes the less bold step because any strong or decided stand by the Canadian government is politically dangerous.

"If there is a lull in the present crisis," Mr. Reid stated in conclusion, "then an isolationist movement of a great proportions will probably arise in Canada, especially if people believe the League has failed."

few moments "running down" the Pep Club. "In my opinion," he said, "your Pep Club is a useless organization. The 1200 that were at the pep meet Friday weren't there as a manifestation of college spirit but to see a good show."

"It is surprising to me," Hermant continued, "to see you running your own activities. At Toronto we hire people to do a lot of organization. If we had a tea dance we wouldn't think of running it ourselves as you are today."

Speaking of the Ubysses the visiting debaters were enthusiastic in their approval. "It is a lot better than the Toronto 'Varsity', both in content and make-up," remarked Hermant.

Both of the visitors mentioned the fact that they had been made to feel at home in Vancouver. "People are a lot easier to meet here," stated Kelloway.

The touring debaters will spend tomorrow on the campus before leaving for the East.

folk-state. He found that most people in Germany are behind Hitler in his rehabilitation of the country.

Jack Jeffries began his account of Russia by saying that it is impossible to compare Russia with western European countries. The Intourist Bureau was definitely inefficient, and, in fact, bureaucracy seems to be the bane of Russia. Kindergarten, where children are kept while their parents are at work, and parks of culture, impress one with the attention to youth, on whom the future of the Soviet depends.

Leningrad, Moscow and Kiev were described as impressively progressive, and the factories as modern. Class distinction fingers, for example, in the separation of the clerical staff from the labourers for meals. The army seemed to spend its daytime loafing about fruit stands.

The Russian courts deliver judgment on the merits of each case and not on precedent. Business in the courts is very matter of fact. Judges are elected from among the workers. Dignity is lacking, but attention remarkable. The key-note in Russia is the dependence of the people on the state.

Possibly we are not less loyal. In a sense I think we are. We no longer really believe in nationalism; that superstition has let us down once too often. But neither the church nor the international proletariat commands greater allegiance on the part of the majority as yet; perhaps these two groups will eventually combine against nationalism. In the meantime our loyalties are in a state of flux and redefinition; we may, lacking a stronger group to fall back on, allow ourselves to be stampeded into another war, but it will be a gesture of despair rather than heroism, defeat rather than discipline.

MIXTURE OF PATHOS AND HUMOUR ENCOUNTERED DAILY BY SANTA

Quintuplets and Nigger Dolls Are This Year's Trends in Toys

ST. NICK OFTEN STUMPED

By Harold Freeman

Thirty-five hundred children a day line up to see Santa Claus at Eaton's, stated that great man in an exclusive interview yesterday. As for Saturdays—well, last Saturday, no less than twenty-two thousand kiddies made known their wishes to him. And the rush hasn't started yet!

As usual, the range of things asked for is infinite; some want little dollies, others want bicycles; some want little cars, others want big trains. The popularity of Shirley Temple is attested to by the great number of kiddies wanting that type of doll this year; reverberations of the Ethiopian contest is seen in the increased demand for nigger dollies; even Callender is wielding its influence, as numbers of little tots ask for quintuplets.

The diversity of types of children which the Great Man meets is as great as the range of things wanted. There are shy little kids that have to be coaxed, and brazen little kids that don't have to be coaxed; there are sweet little kids that you would like to kiss, and the other kind of little kids that you would like to kick; there are rich little kids who come in all their finery, and there are poor little kids in old clothes many times too large for them, telling Santa that they don't want any.

NEWS OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

Washington: Secretary of Interior Ickes moved, today, to secure co-operation of oil companies in a boycott of Italian petroleum supplies from United States sources.

London, England: Great Britain is reported to have played an important role in checking Japan's attempt to create another puppet state in China.

Rome: Gianni Gambi, famed Italian swimmer, turned over a supply of gold medals to the government mint. He joined other citizens in building a gold reserve for war purposes.

What awful writing! The better to fool you with Miss Ferguson.

Ah! Here comes a delectable little dumpling, a real lame'd lamkin (we didn't know, we only heard), "And where are you going on this dark and stormy night," we asked. "For a walk," she haughtily replied. A hasty survey of the good book revealed that about 50 per cent of the leaves were for walks, so she was probably half right anyhow.

U.C. FOLLIES NEW SPONSORS ASSERT

Months of planning and the application of unlimited talent to revolutionary ideas in University entertainment, have culminated in the completed program for what its sponsors say will be the greatest event University College and the U. of T. are ever to experience—the U.C. SATIRE IN POETRY SAID DUE TO WAR

Disillusionment and Moral Indignation Other Cause of Modern Trend

WAR A REFINING CRUCIBLE

"Horror of the foulness of war, the sense of having been cheated and tricked by smooth words and false promises is the root of the satire in modern poetry," were the words of H. G. Davis, professor of English Literature, to the English and History Club in his talk on "Satire in Modern Poetry". Professor Davis outlined the development of modern satire which appeared before the war in the poems of Thomas Hardy and reached the height of disillusionment in the writings of the young soldier, Wilfred Owen, whose poetry he described as "refined by the furnace of war".

Describing post-war poetry such as that of T. S. Eliot and D. H. Lawrence, Professor Davis said that it carried on the theme of the slam and emptiness of life, only Eliot's "Waste Land" is even more derelict than modern man's land. In conclusion he gave as his opinion that, "Underlying all modern satire is the power of the fierce moralist."

BLUE LINEUP UNDECIDED

By W. A. Crochower

Tonight Ace Bailey will send his University of Toronto hockeyists out against Hamilton Tigers at the latter's home ice. Both teams will be in quest of their first O.H.A. victory for the season and the game should be an exciting one on this account.

The Mountain City pucksters have already absorbed an O.H.A. defeat this coming from the sticks of the Toronto Dukes, the final score being 4-1. Ace Bailey's Blues were also given a 4-1 setback in a pre-season tilt. This means that tonight's game will be close. The Blues, however, have improved tremendously since their defeat at the hands of the Dukes and have since earned a tie against the Oakville Villans.

Although the members of the Blue squad have been named, Coach Bailey is still doubtful about the definite arrangement of his lines. In the game against the Villans he ended up with MacPherson, McIlquham and Ripley on one line and McLelland, Valiquette and Lenahan on the other. This will probably be the arrangement used in tonight's contest although Bailey may (Continued on Page 4)

Eastern Debaters Meet First Defeat

Winnipeg, Man., Nov. 21.—The Eastern Canada debating team of S. M. Hermant, Varsity, and E. Kelloway, McGill, met its first defeat here tonight. Speaking in Saskatoon last night, the combined McGill-Toronto team won a favourable decision.

SUDDEN-DEATH GAME

Injuries sustained in the semi-final clash with Jr. Meds last Tuesday materially lessen Victoria's chances of wresting the Mulock Cup from the Dental gridgers, present holders of the historic mug, in the sudden-death contest at Varsity Stadium this afternoon.

"Lofty" Willis, star kicker for the Scarlet and Gold squad, injured his knee so severely on Tuesday that he is definitely unable to perform today and Colmer, also with an injured knee, is a very doubtful starter. Mac Pratt, Vic's flashy ball-carrier, is bothered by an injured ankle and so the Vics are unlikely to again upset the dope and win the Mulock Cup from the powerful Garnet and Grey band.

Undeclared in a league game for three years, the Molar Maulers are a husky outfit boasting a favourable scoring record over the season's six games of 47 to 6, and are said to be a stronger team than the one which defeated Jr. Meds in the finals a year ago. VICTORIA-SCHOOL BATTLE TO DRAW

First Semi-Final Soccer Game
Marred by Muddy Con-

HARD CHECKING FEATURED

The semi-finals for the soccer championship got under way at 1.15 yesterday on the front campus, in a rough, muddy tussle between S.P.S. and Vic which ended in a 1-1 draw.

Good football was an impossibility owing to the condition of the field. Small of Vic kicked the goal for his team on a nice passing play. Near the end of the second half when Cooper handled the ball S.P.S. was granted a penalty kick. Powell took the kick, the ball went to the left wing, back to Rutherford waiting in front of the goal, who promptly kicked it in.

Be Careful And Helpful

Recent thefts of clothing from the University buildings have been a source of annoyance and expense to several members of the undergraduate body. Several arrests have been effected by the University police, but the pilfering, although it diminished considerably, has again made its appearance. Every effort has been made to halt this disagreeable occurrence, but it appears that as yet the students are not safe from the activities of the thieves.

The latest report of this nature came yesterday when an expensive overcoat and two hats were removed from the Botany Building. The only suggestion we can make in this regard is the installation of lockers or guarded checkrooms. These are located in various University buildings, but the Botany Building seems to be an exception in this regard.

However, there are many ways in which the students can co-operate to avoid these unpleasant experiences. They can avail themselves of the checking services provided in the various buildings and where possible keep their belongings in sight. Students should also be ready at all times to lend assistance to the police in their duties.

An example occurred earlier this week where students could have been of assistance in apprehending a law breaker, but thought it not worth the efforts. This particular example occurred at the corner of Hoskin and St. George, when the officer on point duty was struck from behind by a car, and severely injured. Several students were reported to have witnessed this unfortunate event, but not one could be found who would give evidence against the perpetrator of the crime. If students or citizens want protection they should be ready at all times to lend assistance to the officers who are attempting to give it to them.

Others Subscribe To Popular Ideas

There are some indignant football fans in Toronto today if there is any blue blood in the veins of the Toronto football fans. And with good cause. The Toronto Varsity football team was outlucked in the intercollegiate play-off game with the Kingston Gaels on Saturday and despite the fact that it was its first intercollegiate loss of the season the Intercollegiate championship went to Queen's. Truly a farce.

Queen's football teams have always been noted for their fight. We are not in any way belittling what is undoubtedly a fine team, but we do reiterate that to credit them with being intercollegiate champions is very much like calling black white. There are those who saw the other Toronto-Queen's games this season and were insistent in their opinions that Queen's deserved of better things. But this cannot detract from the fact that Toronto went through the Intercollegiate schedule without losing a game whilst Queen's lost two and drew another.

This year's results should do one thing. They should deal a death-blow to the commercial tendencies that the Canadian Intercollegiate football has been taking the past few years. The Toronto Varsity Athletic Union is several thousands of dollars richer today, because of Saturday's play-off game, but the University is also poorer by an intercollegiate championship. But what is more laughable still is the fact that although Queen's are several thousands of dollars richer yet Queen's has an intercollegiate championship to its credit. And we reiterate a totally undeserved championship.

What conclusions are we to draw from these facts? Are we to understand that at long last the Intercollegiate Union has realized the over-emphasis that it has been placing on CHAMPIONSHIPS? Or are we to agree with the rest of the critics of the system and say that the Universities are taking part in athletics for all they can get out of them and for no other reason? Anyone who knows the athletic situation at McGill will know that this is certainly not the case. But we make no bones about saying that this intercollegiate football play-off system is an out and out money making proposition.

Why is there no play-off in intercollegiate hockey, or basketball? Why indeed?

Why not rerun the track events every year just to see whether or not the man who got off to a poor start in the hundred or two-hundred could not place better? What matter if the original winner is beaten by a hair-breath in the rerun. If he could not win all the time he is no champion.

What we do insist upon, our dear C.I.A.U., is a little consistency. We do not want to see the sort of thing that happened to Toronto happening any closer to home. If McGill only wins the football championship on the average of once every seven years or so we do not want that average either increased or decreased through an intercollegiate play-off system.

—McGill Daily, Nov. 18.

What! No War?

As has been formerly stated in the columns of The Varsity the theatre of war in which Italy and Ethiopia are alleged to be engaged is one which lends itself readily to a good publicity organization which would wish to capitalize on the distance and location for the production of good colourful news stories. The variety of reports issuing from Ethiopia together with their tendency to conflict has long had people wondering just what proportions the war has actually attained. In fact many people are inclined to be skeptical of its existence. Certainly the inaccessibility of the country makes stories hard to refute, while the distance itself, together with the poor communications which an uninhabited desert could offer would make it relatively difficult to check on the accuracy of the information issuing from that source.

And now this suspicion regarding the war has assumed a tangible shape. Several newspapers it has been reported, have recalled their correspondents because of their inability to locate the source and location of the war. The Christian Science Monitor has definitely established this fact. Certainly such an action would lead us to wonder just how much truth there is in the stories which appear in print.

However, the Monitor is not the only paper to make this disclosure. Fay Gillis Wells, correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune, tells an even more impressive story. Her story says that she travelled 2000 miles through Ethiopia in the course of a month and found no war whatever. In Harar and Agaden, two provinces which have been at various times reported to have been swept with the fire and sword, she found all serene. Reports of massacres she brands as ridiculous. She admits the possibility of sporadic fighting having occurred but nothing more.

Somewhere in the mean, as usual, the truth probably lies. Should the Monitor and the Tribune be right, we would be faced with a unique and attractive occurrence. Wars are usually a matter of a person or a dynasty fighting for their prestige. What better method could be devised than that of picking out some isolated and uninhabited part of the world, big enough to conceal the movements of an army, and having successfully camouflaged their movements, turn the war over to the bureau of propaganda.

A Tribute To Sigma Phi

Today University College opens its doors to the annual High School Editor's convention, brought to the campus each year by Sigma Phi, women's journalistic fraternity. The convention gathers editors of high school magazines from all over Ontario for two days of instructive study groups, sight-seeing, and entertainment under the benign leadership of the members of Sigma Phi.

It is to be hoped that our guests will not be awed by their surroundings, and the unfamiliar faces which throng the halls of U.C., but will realize that the students they meet are their friends, and the professors with whom they come in contact are friends, and will be their helpers when they too attend the university in future years.

We extend the heartiest welcome which The Varsity can give, to these embryo newshawks and editorial writers. May they learn much from the study groups, make friends with those whom they meet, and go away with a pleasing memory of their two days at the University of Toronto.

UNDEFEATED VIC TEAM WINS LACROSSE TILT

Victoria College defeated Meds for the second time yesterday in Hart House in their intercollegiate lacrosse match. Vic remains undefeated, having won four. This win gives them a sure place in the playoffs.

It was anybody's game right up to the last minute of play, the score being tied at the opening of the last period 4-4. But the Victorians showed their superiority and quickly scored three goals.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crocker

While the controversy about the Queen's-Hamilton Tiger muddle waxed loud and strong we would like to shed a little light on the intercollegiate side of the question. During the last few years it has been clearly shown that the Interprovincial and O.R.F.U. circuits were slightly tainted with professionalism. Two years ago this fact became quite evident and at that point all the trouble which has come to a head this year was begun. Queen's University officials decided that an intercollegiate play-off would be a good idea. Consequently they came to the C.I.R.U. meeting with a good plan for dropping out of the C.R.U. playdowns. They claimed that since the two large Eastern rugby leagues were spotted with professionalism that the college circuit ought to drop out of the C.R.U. playdowns and engage in a college play-off instead. They maintained that this would provide ample reason for dropping out of the C.R.U. picture. Queen's, Western and McGill were in favour of this course of action and thus it was passed. Last year with a team which was just a little better than average this plan was O.K. as far as Queen's was concerned. However, this year there's another story. Reeve believes that his team can go places in the playdowns—consequently the about-face. In our humble opinion the C.I.R.U. should not only refuse Queen's permission to enter the C.R.U. playdowns but Queen's should be censured for their dual behaviour.

Yesterday's Arts Faculty Cup semi-final between Vic and S.P.S. resulted in a 1-1 tie and so both of the squads will enter the second tilt of their two-game series on even terms. The game was played during yesterday's driving burst of rain and the bad weather probably had a lot to do with the low scores. The condition of the playing field was also far from conducive to the playing of good football. The two squads will be at it again tomorrow, however, and will no doubt decide as to who is to meet Dents in the finals next week.

Tonight Ace Bailey will take his squad to Hamilton to wage war on the Tigers. Both squads will be looking for their first victory of the season, which should make for good hockey. The Blues have demonstrated that they will be hard to beat this year and with slight improvements in play should chalk up many victories this year. The Tigerville stalwarts have demonstrated their strength despite their defeat at the hands of the Toronto Dukes last week, and Bailey's lads will have their hands full tonight.

Varsity's senior cagers made their first official appearance last night and under the watchful eyes of Coach Warren Stevens went through some preliminary exercises. There were about thirty-five hopefuls out, most, as usual, below senior calibre. These, of course, will be dropped in the near future. It seems to us that Stevens will have a very good first-string squad but will have some trouble in finding substitutes for his regulars. If Steve can round out a squad with fairly good strings of substitutes he should be able to continue last year's phenomenal successes.

Those of you who wish to attend tomorrow's Sarnia-Balmy Beach play-off struggle may do so by presenting Coupon No. 14 plus thirty cents.

THE FOLLIES DAY BY DAY

We were most happy to see the Follies list overhauled in less than twenty-four hours, but we must admit this was not surprising. We might just say that it has always been customary to issue a supplementary list to take care of uncollected tickets, so you who arrived too late—don't contemplate suicide yet, but watch for this supplementary list announcement. And remember—this is an informal notice, so don't worry about your credit with your Chairman friend—public opinion has ruled taxes and tolls take.

SR. U.C. AND SR. MEDS WIN AT VOLLEYBALL

Sr. U.C. and Sr. Meds chalked up victories in yesterday's volleyball doubleheader played in the upper gym at Hart House. Sr. U.C. trounced Sr. Vic 15-0 and 15-7, while the Sr. Medical volleyballers defeated the Pharmacy squad by the same scores.

The Sr. U.C.-Sr. Vic game was an uninteresting affair with the Victoria College squad playing a man short throughout the entire game. David and Damsky played well for U.C. while Tiller and Hillard starred for Vic.

Sr. Meds were potent medicine for the Druggists, who failed to withstand the co-ordination of the Medical attack. Krakauer's spiking and Kaplan's serving for Meds featured this tilt. Lazarus and Grainer starred for the losers.

VIC SENIORS TRIUMPH OVER SAINT MIKE'S

Vic Srs. defeated St. Mike's 24-20 last night in one of the most exciting basketball games of the season. Both teams were out to win, with a cheering gallery to support them, and since St. Mike's were the victors in their first encounter, this game puts the teams in a tie position. On Monday night they meet again to settle which of them will enter the semi-finals.

Vic had the lead all the way, with the score 6-2 at quarter time, 12-6 at half time, 21-14 at three-quarter time and 24-20 when the final whistle blew. Maize Cowan was responsible for most of Vic's points, and was well backed up by Erna Laing and Marge Leslie. The Vic guards played no small part in the (Continued on Page 4)

THE SPORTSWOMAN

An upset occurred last night in the intercollegiate basketball series when Occupational Therapy scored a triumph over U.C. Seniors, to put both teams in a tie for the leadership of their group. The final score, 31-27, indicates the closeness of the contest. The Therapists have a fine lot of players who work extremely well together, and also have a valuable forward in Ruth Carlyle. The Red and White Seniors were definitely handicapped on their defence by the absence of Billy McGarry, who is their star defence player. On the forward line Joan Romeyn put in some nice shots, while Kay Brown seemed too excited to sink very many. The combat was the best yet witnessed at the O.C.E. gym, and it is expected that both these teams will have another try at each other to decide which one is to enter the semi-final round.

Another surprise was sprung last night when Vic Seniors came out on the large side of a 24-20 score, after a tussle with St. Mike's. The leadership of this group is also in a tie, as the Double Blue team defeated the Scarlet and Gold in their last encounter. Vic displayed their superiority over the losers throughout the entire game, but St. Mike's gave them plenty of opposition. Monday night the two teams are to play again to settle which squad will contend in the semi-finals.

Due to an oversight, no mention was made in The Varsity of the game between U.C. Juniors and Meds, which took place on Wednesday night. The Red and White aggregation defeated the Medicals for the second time by a score of 21-14, to win two out of the five games already played. Tonight this team meets St. Hilda's Seniors, to complete their schedule.

OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY DEFEAT SR. U.C. 31-27

Occupational Therapy basketweavers last night trimmed U.C. Seniors by the score of 31-27. Starting off with a bang the Therapists had the Seniors a little dizzy in the opening minutes of the game. U.C. soon rallied, however, and kept the score nearly tie throughout the remainder of the game. Both teams were at their best and the play had never a dull moment.

toys, "but please, can I have some new clothes", or "couldn't you get me a job for Daddy, he's been out of work so long . . .". And the most humane of men treats them all alike and sends each one away happier, and prouder.

One must be a real psychologist to be Santa Claus. For eight hours a day, with short rest periods, little tots of every description file past. As each one comes forward, Santa does a quick job of character analysis and treats each one in the best possible way. That's why he has been there for so many years.

Embarrassment and fun are inextricably bound up with the day's work. There was, for instance, the case of the little fellow who came up to Santa and asked for a train. Then he went away again, only to line up once more at the other end. When he came through again, Santa asked the usual question;

"And what do you want Santa Claus to bring you, my little man?"

"Ah, you old fool," came the reply, "I knew you would forget."

Yes, it takes a lot of tact to be Santa Claus.

"I consider him very insulting to the girls in his former faculty, to which I belong, in saying that western girls are better looking. He certainly can never have been in Falconer House, or attended the Whitney Hall tea dances to which practically all eligible young men on the campus get bids."

The president of Cody House stated that very nice tea dances were held at Whitney Hall, and that they were really popular. She could not remember having seen Sydney Hermant at any of them.

Miss Molly Stevens, of Mulock House executive, thought their tea dances very nice. Tea, sandwiches and cake are served, and good music is supplied. The last one was after the Queen's game. "We prefer formal dances, but specialize in variety," she added.

The executive of the Newman Club told The Varsity that "students find our tea dances very agreeable, and the girls who attend them undoubtedly good looking, as beautiful as can be found on any campus."

The Tigers have made a few additions to last year's strong squad. Most of last year's veterans are back in action with a few new players added to give the squad added speed and scoring ability. However, despite their reputed strength the Tigers will have to turn in a good effort if they expect a victory tonight as the Blues have demonstrated that they will be a contender in this year's O.H.A. race.

Singer and Garret, speedy Dental hinges, are always dangerous scoring threats, and are expected to do well this afternoon. Mueller, Speers, Peterson and Oswald have been consistent performers for the Garnet and Grey all season.

A strong front line has been responsible for much of the Vic team's success this year, and Hodggets, Gillespie, and Amos, and Vaughan and Holman, outsiders, will make up to some extent for the weakened backfield where ball-carrying duties will rest on Bobby Cooper, the broad-jumper, and Mac Pratt, perhaps the best broken-field runner in interfaculty competition.

LOCAL FLYING CLUBS ATTRACT FEW STUDENTS

Three Graduates and One S.P.S. Man Comprise Air- Minded Element Here

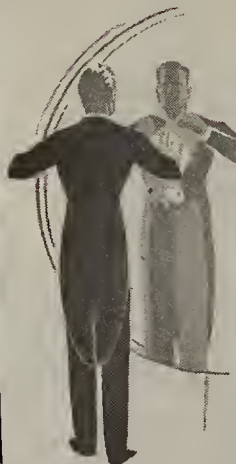

Toronto students are definitely not air minded, according to the Murray Aeronautical Company, when they were queried concerning the ad inserted in Varsity, which proclaimed that students could learn to fly at the lowest rates in Canada, under competent instructors. So far, the company admitted, they had received no answer to their ad.

Likewise, the Toronto Flying Club was approached. One student, W. C. Burgess of S.P.S., is enrolled as a student there, and there are two or three graduates. But an average of approximately one out of seven thousand is low enough to more or less prove that, as yet, University students are not taking to the air.

In several of the colleges and universities in the States, flying clubs have been formed as a college activity. However, it looks as if Toronto University doesn't intend to follow their lead. At least, that is the way it looks to the flying clubs, who should know.

"Ghosts" is a play well worth a revival. When it was written more than fifty years ago, Ibsen set forth as his object "To make the reader feel that he was going through a piece of real experience." This is the effect that Nazimova has achieved.

She is magnificent not only for her own action but also for her direction. Her interpretation of Mrs. Alving prevents the powerful theme of the play from crashing in on our minds with all its terrific force. Yet the clearness, directness and intensity of Ibsen is there.

The rest of the cast equally deserve mention for their performance of roles rivalling that of Mrs. Alving in the difficulty of their interpretation.

EXPLAINS GEYSERS OF YELLOWSTONE

Hot Springs Described Before
R.C.I. Audience by Dr. Day,
Carnegie Geologist

On Saturday evening, in an illustrated lecture, to the Royal Canadian Institute, in Convocation Hall, Arthur L. Day, Ph.D., director of the Geophysical laboratory of the Carnegie Institution, Washington, D.C., discussed the cause and action of hot springs, and in particular those in Yellowstone Park.

Hot springs are divided into two major types which differ in the amount of water contained. When there is an abundance of water the spring is alkaline and is a geyser. Acid or sulphate springs contain less water and are not geysers. Some of the acid type in the Park have no outlet and merely deposit salt. Geysers occur only in New Zealand, Iceland and western North America.

Dr. Hay, the eminent geologist, as a result of his investigations in 1890, was able to set an accurate date to the springs in Yellowstone. The whole area

DENTALS MAKE MERRY DANCING AT HART HOUSE

Last Friday night the graduates and undergraduates of the Faculty of Dentistry mingled together, renewed old acquaintances and struck up new ones at the Dental night in Hart House. This dance took the place of Noctem Cuckoo, former Dental stunt night.

A water polo game between U.C. and Dents and diving and swimming exhibitions were also provided. Supper was served in the Great Hall. Many were heard to remark that this was practically the best dance they had ever attended in Hart House.

The patronesses were Mrs. Cody, Mrs. Scembrace and Mrs. Woolatt. Those in the receiving line were President and Mrs. Cody, Dean and Mrs. Scembrace, Dr. and Mrs. Woolatt, M. Twible and W. Weir.

BICKERSTETH SEES GERMAN STRUGGLE TO REGAIN POWER

"Pride of Status" Is Emotional

Hitler Stands Between Radical and Conservative Forces, His Movements Unpredictable

"Everyone in Germany is living under a high emotional strain," said J. Burgon Bickersteth, M.A., Warden of Hart House, in his lecture, "Some Impressions of Germany," given on Saturday afternoon in Trinity College. "Pride of status" is how he described the urgent force behind the German people today. Germany feels that she is a second-hand power and will be satisfied only when she regains equality of rights with the other nations of Europe.

The great political bodies, Mr. Bickersteth stated, are three. There are the radicals, who are violently anti-Jew and anti-Catholic. With them go the S.S. or Black Shirts, formerly conservative, but now radical. Under Schacht are ranged the Moderates, who are opposed to the more extreme policies. Between these two parties there stands the Reichwehr and Hitler, the movements of which it is impossible to judge.

One of the most significant things in modern Germany and about which few people know anything is the national political educational institutions to train the boys who will be the leaders twenty or thirty years hence. The candidates must go through a test which

FORMER CHAMPION IS NEW INSTRUCTOR IN HART HOUSE GYM

Word has been received of the appointment of Mr. Charles Zwyg as physical instructor in Hart House. In view of the extra burden placed on the shoulders of the physical staff due to the death of the late Mr. Donald Barton, Mr. Zwyg has been asked to assist until further arrangements can be made.

The new instructor formerly held the Canadian championship in gymnastics. Among his other duties will be the training of the gym team, for which he is well qualified. Gymnastics have been in rather a depression lately; it is hoped that the appointment of Mr. Zwyg will restore interest in this spectacular sport.

VIC WINS MULOCK CUP SMASHING DENTAL SQUAD IN SENSATIONAL UPSET, 9-1

TIGERS MANGLE VARSITY BLUES

Ace Bailey's Protegees Snowed
Under, 8-1, by Smooth
Hamilton Machine

U. OF T. DISORGANIZED

By W. A. Crackower

Ace Bailey's Blues were relegated to the cellar position of the eastern group of the O.H.A. senior series as a result of the 8-1 shellacking they received at the hands of the Hamilton Tigers in the Mountain City on Friday night. The Bengals thus handed the Blues their first reverse of the season. Sweeping toward the Varsity net with well-balanced lines the Yellow and Black came from behind in the first period to assume a 4-1 lead to which they added three more goals in the second period and finished off with one more counter in the final stanza.

The Blues' attack was discouragingly disorganized compared with the powerful offensive drives of the victors, who swept in on Shipman relentlessly. Teno, in the Hamilton nets, had very little to do as a rule, but now and then he was brilliant in staving off an unusually dangerous Varsity effort. Shipman turned in a good performance despite the fact that he was beaten eight times. However, he was very shaky on shots fired at close range.

Coach Bailey's charges started the tilt by clearly outskating and outplaying the Tigers in the first ten minutes of play. However, for the remainder of the game the Blues went to pieces, skating all over the ice in a disorganized manner, missing many scoring opportunities by failing to pass the puck.

Lenahan, McLelland and MacPherson tolled hard throughout the game. McLelland particularly was robbed of several counters as he just missed scoring on several of his fine dashes in the last period. Jeffrey and Charles had frequent lapses on defence but made many nice offensive threats. Syl Apps, McMaster University star, was the best player on the ice. The big lad was hard to stop all night. Hoch, Primeau and the veteran McGowan also played well for the Tigers.

The Blues started the scoring when Lenahan banged home MacPherson's pass half-way through the first period.

RECORD ATTENDANCE AS SCHOOL EDITORS CONVENE ON CAMPUS

The largest gathering of High School Editors ever held in Ontario, took place this week-end in University College. One hundred and thirty-five delegates were present, representing forty-six schools, from Owen Sound to North Bay.

The Star Shield for the best magazine was carried off, for the second year in succession, by the Kitchener-Waterloo Grumbler, which also won The Varsity prize for the best literary material. The Birks-Ellis-Ryrie shield for cover design was won by the Vulcan of Central Technical School and the J. M. Dent prize for make-up by Argosy from the Ottawa High School of Commerce. The MacMillan short story prize was divided between the North Toronto Houlder and the Jarvis Collegiate Magnet, second prize going to Westward Ho of the Western Technical-Commercial School.

Superiority of Victorians in All Departments;

The Mulock Cup, emblematic of the intercollegiate rugby championship, will gather dust in the Vic locker for the next year as the Scarlet and Gold squad defeated Dents 9-1 at Varsity Stadium on Friday afternoon. In winning the historic mug Vic left no doubt as to their superiority, clearly outplaying the Dental squad in all departments. In their battle for the championship Vic upset three teams who were called to defeat them, and thus established themselves as the surprise team of the season. Both teams played without the services of their respective kickers, and of the substitutes Pratt hoofed the oval much farther than Jim Garrett. Dents, defending champions, were never a serious threat, and in the second half, particularly, were seldom outside their own half of the field.

The mining industry is the most prosperous in Ontario and if it were to cease production every part of the province would be seriously affected, stated Hon. Paul LeBuc, minister of mines, speaking to a capacity audience in the North Common Room, Hart House, at the Liberal Club luncheon on Friday.

Introduced as "a very able man and a splendid speaker", Mr. LeBuc, referring to the club treasury, noted that when the Liberal government took over in Ontario the province was nearly bankrupt and had large debts of the Dents opened the scoring when Vic fumbled the kick-off, and the Extras recovered. Two plunges got nowhere and Jim Garrett easily kicked the point. Vic tied the score in the next quarter on a long kick by Pratt which got away from Garrett to roll over the line. This half was featured by the superb line plunging of LeGrice, the way Cooper gained ground around the ends, and the forward pass combination of Holman and Pratt.

Dents kicked off to start the third quarter and Hodgetts promptly ran it back thirty-five yards. From here Pratt kicked to the twelve yard line. Garrett in attempting to boot out of danger, lifted a high and short one on which

Our Ideas On Conducting Wars

For some time past we have been swamped with reports and conversations relating to war. While our editorial columns have at times carried opinions which found support or opposition, we don't remember having uttered anything constructive regarding the conducting of a war. While it is doubtful if anything constructive can be said for wars we offer the following whimsical suggestions regarding the conducting of what we believe would make an interesting war. Also we might add that our suggestions are not entirely original.

Since war is necessarily a destructive agent it always seemed to us a waste of energy to have the young and physically fit men die first. Why not start at the other end of the list, and send the men who are past their peak and have only a short span of time to live anyway? Many valuable years of life and consequent preservation of man power would be effected in this manner. And an old or mildly crippled man could operate a tank, armed car or machine gun just as effectively as a younger man.

Another approach to the problem would be this: we are alleged to fight our wars to defend our interests. Then why not grade the men in proportion to the interests they have to defend? The man with fifty thousand dollars worth of assets would then have precedence over the man who makes four dollars a day. The former would have the honour of defending his interests from the front line. He would have real interests to defend. He should logically put more zip into his defense. All this would make for a good honest-to-goodness war with much of the sham left out. When the war was finished, if he wasn't, he could return in triumph, having valiantly defended his interests against the ravages of foreigners.

Of course any man who wanted to fight should not be denied an opportunity. The professional soldiers could either "do their bit" at the front, or act as instructors for the men desirous of defending their large interests. It is quite probable that the latter would require at least some instruction in the art of conducting a war.

These suggestions will of course be regarded as nonsensical. In fact almost any logical analysis of a war would give rise to so many absurd conclusions that the entire procedure would be regarded with amusement. Still, any impartial observer would be inclined to regard with something akin to cynical mirth the spectacle of armies of men slaughtering armies of men, each defending their own honour and interests.

If we regard war in the perspective it amounts to this: a lot of people will be killed and property destroyed. But why not kill the least valuable of our citizens, as a purely economic measure? Why not have the men with the most to defend do the most of the defending? True, war would lose its glamour under such a system. The hand to hand struggles would not be such fierce encounters. In fact war would be little if any fun any more, and as a result would probably suffer a demise similar to the melodrama of a generation ago.

As an afterthought, since we insist on being ridiculous, we would make the suggestion that the League of Nations pass a law that soldiers wear baggy overalls with patches on the seat and old sweaters with the elbows worn through.

Will France Waver?

One week ago today, sanctions went formally into effect. For the first time the League of Nations has applied its right to collective action against an aggressor nation. This step has set a precedent in world affairs, and has met with wide popular acclaim. Whether or not it will be effective, however, remains to be seen.

That Great Britain will go the whole way is quite certain, especially in light of the recent elections. But the position of France is still doubtful. Although she is nominally supporting sanctions, her support is not so whole-hearted as might be expected. There are powerful pro-Italian forces in France which are doing their utmost to sway France's foreign policy towards Italy. The press is bribed with Italian money. The Croix de Fer, headed by the wealthy Colonel de la Roquette, is opposing sanctions by word and deed. The "Front paysan", an organization which recently arose among the peasants, and which has definite pro-fascist tendencies, is also lending its support to the anti-sanctions movement.

On the side of sanctions, however, there is the powerful "Front populaire", which has become more and more well known of late. This movement is led jointly by the Communist and Socialist Parties, together with large sections of the Radical Socialist Party. The last-named was until recently the French equivalent of the Canadian Liberal Party. What this means may be easily appreciated if we can think of Mackenzie King and Ernest Lapointe leading demonstrations through the streets of Toronto arms linked with J. S. Woodsworth and Tim Buck.

The support that the movement is receiving from the people of France as a whole is well shown in the article by Prof. Felix Walter of Trinity College in a recent issue of Saturday Night, on the July 14 demonstration in Paris. In this demonstration Herriot and Deladier marched beside Blum and Thorey. Whether France will take a firm stand definitely in support of sanctions depends almost entirely upon this unique "Front populaire". It will be interesting to note the developments that take place.

Why Don't We Fly?

Somebody has jumped to the conclusion that Toronto students are definitely not air-minded. According to evidence in hand that is final. But all evidence is not in hand. If it were, probably we would be revealed as "taking to the air" in a body. Indeed, if allowed to follow our heart's desire, it is doubtful if there would be enough students left on the campus to push open the library door.

The conclusion drawn was based upon the number of students enrolled in the local flying schools. The number is small. But how many would like to be there? The answer to that question is actually what determines whether or not we are air-minded. Most of those who would like to join flying clubs are restrained for various reasons. There is a lack of time. Some students have parents or friends who still believe that everyone who flies gets killed. A few have life insurance policies which offer an obstacle. And neither last nor least, even the lowest instruction rates in Canada are high. Flying is necessarily costly, and this keeps some of us on the ground who would otherwise be in the air.

Is it impossible for ambitious students to overcome these obstacles? Certainly not. It isn't even impossible to keep women out of Hart House. It is true that students have not taken to the air; but that does not imply that they are not air minded.

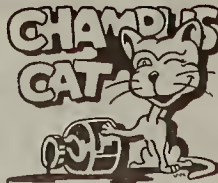

They are only waiting for half a chance to go up after the thrills and chills of flying. If the summer course which was available for some students a few years ago, were again made possible, we would readily see whether or not flying was popular here.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Royal Alexandra

Following its 11-months' run at the Booth Theatre, New York, Hugh Walpole's "Kind Lady" opens a week's engagement at the Royal Alexandra here on Monday night prior to proceeding to Chicago for an extended run.

In the meantime, the play comes to Toronto with Miss Lucy Beaumont, English stage and screen star, playing the role of the nice old wealthy lady who inadvertently gave shelter to two lonely people on a Christmas Eve only to discover that they were crooks.

So adroit is Hugh Walpole's manipulations of the characters that the spectator identifies himself with the old lady's dilemma and later participates in the brave and desperate fight that Lady Mary stages to save her sanity, her life and her property, those who have seen "Kind Lady" say. Miss Lucy Beaumont, who plays the lead, was with Leslie Howard in "Berkeley Square". Her last picture appearance was with John Barrymore in Elmer Rice's "Counsellor-at-Law".

Friday Afternoon Recital

Miss Wilma Stevenson, the artist at last Friday's recital, is always a welcome visitor in University musical circles. A capable pianist, she excels in interpreting modern music, and her zest for this type of music has undoubtedly done much to popularize it among University students. On this occasion she presented about a dozen small numbers, all modern, ranging from the satires of Goossens and Berners to the tone-poems of Debussy and Griffes.

The first group included works by representative Russian composers: Medtner, typical of the conventional school; Scriabin, whose introspective preludes have earned him the title of the modern Chopin; and Prokofiev, modernist and experimenter, whose suite: "The Loves of the Three Oranges" has gained some repute.

The program continued with an English group, including the satirical "Funeral March of a Statesman" by Lord Berners, the chaste "Dance for Harpsichord" by Delius, and Goossens' amusing "Marionette Show". The outstanding number of the group—a favourite of Miss Stevenson, and of her listeners—was Griffes' "White Peacock", which was exquisite.

The third group was French, including works by Grovlez, Dukas, Debussy and Ravel. Dukas' "La Plainte au Loin du Faune", was particularly noteworthy. Miss Stevenson is unusually successful in "putting across" these miniature pieces, almost succeeding, even, with Debussy's delicate: "Des Pas Sur la Neige". T.D.N.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Frank Lambert

The Scarlet and Gold colours fluttered gaily as pennons of victory over the week-end when Victoria secured the Mulock Cup honours from Dents, the defending champions on Friday afternoon, and a strong hard fighting Victoria soccer squad ousted S.P.S. from further contention in the Arts Faculty Cup series, to relegate two former champions into the limbo of the unknown X.

The ancient art of Japanese wrestling known as jiu-jitsu is being pursued ardently in the wrestling room of Hart House on every Tuesday at 3.30 p.m. and Saturday at 12. Given official sanction by the University athletic directorate, great progress will be made, and those wishing to take a course of instruction in jiu-jitsu are urged to sign the list in the Athletic Office at once as the class is limited to twenty-five members.

Hockey results from a Blue and White standpoint received a rude jolt on Friday and Saturday as Hamilton Tigers Senior and St. Michael's Junior A squads rang up identical scores of 8-1 over the Blue senior and junior squads respectively. The latter game was an S.P.A. series tilt advancing St. Michael's into the second round. Down in Hamilton, however, the Blues were rather off colour while the Hamilton sextet were right on edge.

While football had its four horsemen at Varsity this year it will be remembered that several years ago the Blue and White hockey hopes had "three nusketeers" composed of George Hendry, James MacPherson and Norman McClelland, the first two of whom were chosen captains in successive years, and now to complete the cycle the dashing, swerving, diminutive centre star in the person of Normie McClelland takes the helm. "Congratulations Captain McClelland".

One of the greatest defeats ever incurred by any intercollegiate gridiron squad in Eastern Canada rugby circles was handed to Queen's by a Hamilton squad of granite mold which sealed the heights of fame on Saturday afternoon to trample the Tri-colour's fondest hopes and dreams into the ground to the tune of 44-4. Evidently the long and animated controversy about Queen's eligibility to challenge in the C.R.U. sapped the energy of Reeve's Ironsides, as it usually does to a team in athletic controversy, a fact which points to "Kid Psychology" making an inroad into team morale. To many faced with similar positions in athletic competition this defeat therefore was not surprising.

On Saturday afternoon Signor Massucci's Sarnia Imperials effaced Balmy Beach from further rugby contention to give Sarnia its fifth consecutive O.R.F.U. senior title, a feat no other squad in any other rugby series has ever attained. Big, powerful, with a well balanced wing line Sarnia stands out again as potential champions with a great chance to retain their Canadian rugby title of last year. Perhaps Hamilton will answer that question next Saturday.

Tomorrow evening the league leading Toronto Dukes will invade Varsity Arena to engage "Ace" Bailey's Varsity senior sextet in their first meeting of the O.H.A. campaign. A wide open game should result as both clubs adhere to brilliant offensive drives. With a full hearted support of the Varsity fans the boys will go places. How about it?

Playing the Game

Volleyball—

Vic Beats Trinity

Jr. Vic took 2 out of 3 games from Trinity in an interfaculty volleyball contest in the upper gym Friday afternoon. Victoria won the first game 15-7 chiefly due to the clever combination of Affleck and Lang. Trinity took the second game by the score of 15-13 because of a tendency on the part of the Vic players to let the ball fall between them during the early part of the game.

The third game was very close, Victoria again drawing up from behind to win 15-11.

Victoria: Affleck, Bennett, Scott, Lang, McKinnon, Ward, McDonald, Hurley.

Trinity: Wykoff, Summerville, Dilworth, Harvie, Ongley, Greenfield, Nock, Hodgins, Baldwin.

Lacrosse—

Pharmacy Downs Trinity

School of Pharmacy put on a varied attack to gain an 8-4 victory over Trinity in a very hard fought lacrosse game played at Hart House gymnasium.

VICTORIA-DENTS

Dents failed to give yards. This put the ball twelve yards out. Plunges by Cooper and Gregory gained yards, and on the next down Pratt skirted the right end to score standing up. The touchdown was not converted.

In the last quarter Dents fumbled one of Pratt's hoists at the ten yard line which Amos recovered. From this point Holman dropped a placement over the bar to end the scoring.

The playing of Holman was outstanding all afternoon. He was deadly on the tackling, threw well placed forwards, and his placement kick was right over the centre. Dental backfielders gained very little on running back kicks due to the great tackling of Amos and Vaughan. Hodgetts handled the team fruitlessly from the quarter position.

Vic: Gregory; Pratt, Cooper, LeGrice; Hodgetts; Eideley; Rodway; Wilson; Gillespie; Morrow; Holman; Amos; Vaughan, Stewart, McIntyre, Dales, McBean, Gardiner, Casserly.

Friday afternoon.

The combination play and accuracy of their shooting led to the Pharmacy win, while Trinity was constantly checked in their efforts to organize an effective attack.

Trinity: Martin, McCreary, Millard, Grant, Bosley, Cox, Burchell, Bell, Botwell, Ford.

Pharmacy: Blackburn, Jackson, Berkan, Pronger, Ellinghausen, Laughlin, McIntyre.

Basketball—

Saint Hilda's Senior basketball team defeated U.C. Juniors to the score of 28-5 on Friday night in the U.T.S. gym.

St. Hilda's: Edie Ardagh (5), Marg MacDonald (17), Isobel Wallbridge (2), Ellie Wilson (4), Mary Dignam, Helen Burnham, K. Grubbe, J. White.

U.C. Juniors: Doris Johnson (2), Joyce Tenenbaum (2), Jean Meiners (1), Alice O'Brien, Edith McGruder, Miriam Kronick, Yvonne Ritchie, Gladys Ashdown, Yvonne Kirk.

SPECTACULAR GAME SEES S.P.S. DOWNED BY VIC SOCCERITES

Slippery, Half-Frozen Field Contributes to Thrills of Tie-Breaker Tussle

"ANYBODY'S GAME"

One of the most spectacular soccer games of the season took place on the front campus Saturday afternoon when Victoria met S.P.S. to settle their tie game of Thursday. Out of a well-contested match the Scarlet and Gold team emerged the winners with an advantage in goals over the S.P.S. squad of 3-2. A cold biting wind and a surface of slippery mud over frozen ground made far from ideal conditions for the playing of excellent soccer, yet it was a good game. So evenly did the play progress that there could be no safe predictions made at any time during the game as to the final result.

The first half Victoria had the wind in their favour and with this natural advantage succeeded in battling out a slight edge in play. Woods of S.P.S. netted the ball during a scramble in front of the Vic goal to bring the Engineers to the front in scoring. Vic retaliated when Pratt made a hard shot which found the S.P.S. net. Just before halftime Self, the S.P.S. centre-forward, broke through Victoria's defence, bringing the score to 2-1 in favour of S.P.S.

After half time things really began to happen. Every man gave everything he had to bring his team to the top. Powell, fullback for S.P.S., intercepted many Victoria rushes and played a very excellent game. Maynard and Self also Engineer men, showed good form.

A second goal was made for Victoria when Tommie Rutherford snuk a hard shot to the corner of the net on a penalty kick. Sim of Victoria played an outstanding game, showing equal ability in both defence and attack. The final and winning goal of the game was made by Cooper of Victoria shortly after being moved to the forward line.

Victoria: Dykes, Scott, Cooper, Sim, Simpson, Woodsworth, Taylor, Campbell, Pratt, Rutherford, Menzies; subs. Pacey, Macdonald.

previous administration to worry about. He expressed the hope that the club's present executive did not have the same sad experience, when it took over at the beginning of the year.

The speaker traced the development of Ontario mining and stressed the importance of the industry to the province. He pointed out that the increase in the price of gold from $23.67 to $35 per ounce in the past few years had had a very favourable effect on the mining districts and on all industries providing supplies for them.

The nickel, copper, silver and natural gas industries were also touched upon. With regard to the last speaker said, "When people come to be complaining of the high price of natural gas I remind them of the prices current in the parts of the province where manufactured gas is used."

"With the depression lifting in Canada because of the Liberal governments in Ottawa and the provinces, the building industry should improve and with it the sand, gravel and stone industries of Ontario," said Mr. Leduc, referring to the present depressed state of these industries.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

The regular basketball schedule is now finished, but the playoffs are yet to come. Tonight, two sudden-death games will be played, to decide which teams will meet in the semi-finals. Occupational Therapy will play U.C. Juniors at seven o'clock in the O.C.E. gym, and then Vic will fight it out with St. Hilda's at eight. These games should produce the best basketball yet. The teams are evenly matched, and as all of them have hopes of winning the championship this year, it will be do or die.

The teams that win tonight will play in the semi-finals on Wednesday and Friday evenings, and whoever piles up the larger score in the two games will meet St. Hilda's Juniors in the finals. St. Hilda's get the bye this year, and intend to have some stiff practices before they play the finals on December 3 and December 6 in the Hart House gymnasium.

The three games played Friday night could not have affected the standings of the teams very much, and everyone had a great old time. The U.C. freshmen took the Nurses in their encounter in the Margaret Eaton gym, but the Nurses played one of their best games of the season.

The Meds versus Vic Juniors, and U.C. Juniors versus St. Hilda's Juniors games were played in the U.T.S. gym, because some dance or reception was being held in the one in O.C.E. Vic Juniors and St. Hilda's won the games, but by no means outclassed their opponents. The Meds' game was the most interesting to watch. One of the medical fraternities was initiating its pledges and the latter attended the game dressed in striped pajama trousers, jailbird sweaters, and impossible hats. They cheered lustily every few minutes, and at three-quarter time staged an impromptu basketball game, scoring some remarkable baskets. We hope their would-be fraternity brothers are satisfied.

is volcanic in origin. Although no craters are to be found in the park, Dr. Day and his assistants came upon steam held in at great pressure when boring through the terrain. These gases and those given out by the springs, although not unaltered when they reach the surface are of volcanic origin.

These springs, although not transient phenomena, sometimes dry up without reason; sometimes they renew themselves; sometimes not. Sometimes new ones erupt. They are local in action; some have deeper basins and are older than others.

The heating of the water is done by the volcanic steam which rises until it reaches the surface water.

Dr. Day refuted the theory of Bunsen, who in 1847 from investigation in Iceland, assumed that geysers had a tube, straight and narrow, extending about 90 feet down into a hot zone and had a bowl to catch the water. In this theory, when the water reached the boiling point there was an eruption. This theory does not fit the action of the geysers in Yellowstone, for they do not have the basin at the top and they play all winter. The speaker advanced a counter theory in which the action is due to kettle-like formations, several of which are required for each geyser, in which the pressure varies with that of the surface water.

John Gould had a colourful career before he entered the University of B.C. and travelling salesman, logger, bank clerk, agent for a theatrical company were some of his occupations. Better known at U.B.C. as "Jay", he spent six years seeing the world before going to college.

Gould is now president of the Literary and Scientific Executive and is noted as one of the most active students on the U.B.C. campus. Born in Vancouver, he attended a high school in that city previous to entering the U.B.C. He intends to enter law eventually. At U.B.C. Gould belongs to the Parliamentary Club, forum, the Players' Club, the Badminton Club, and is on the Students' Council.

Maurice A. Western, a senior from the University of Saskatchewan, has had a long run of progressive experience as a debater. He debated for the Normal School in Calgary City League and had been active in team debates at the University of Saskatchewan.

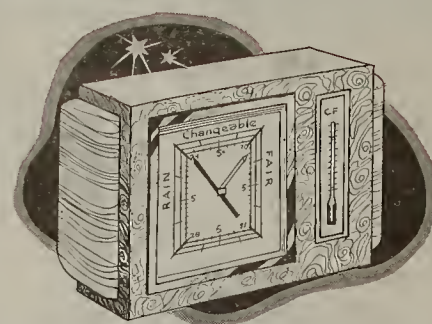

The two debaters representing the U. of T. are senior students and members of the Debates Committee of Hart House. Mr. Marshall is in political science and economics and of strong Liberal tendencies. Jack Jeffries is a student of law and a sound Conservative.

A large crowd is expected to attend this outstanding debate in Hart House. Speaker Rae indicated last night that everything pointed to the debate being one of the most successful for this year.

onto Symphony Orchestra was one of the finest presented this season. The orchestra was in splendid form, even the wind section displaying a certainty it has been slow in acquiring.

The opening number was Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony. This work is lighter in mood than his Fifth and Sixth symphonies, although it opens with the ominous "Fate knocking on the door" theme, whose grimness pervades the whole first movement. The second and third movements are gayer, the former being a graceful dance theme, and the latter, a picturesque thing of pizzicato strings and adventurous woodwinds. In the energetic last movement, the chill opening theme makes a dramatic reappearance, leading to a tremendous climax.

The "Introduction and Capriccio" by Saint Saens is a brilliant work, but exhibits, perhaps, too much of the glitter of the late-romanticist period to which he belonged. Elie Spivak, concert master, made a fine showing in the solo part.

Ravel's whimsical "Mother Goose" Suite portrays some well-known nursery rhymes. These five short pieces are beautiful, with a pastel delicacy of design, all the tenderness of muted strings and all the variety of a Ravel orchestration. The third piece, "Empress of the Pagodas", a lively Oriental work, affords sufficient contrast to avoid the danger of monotony in the suite.

The program closed with the well-known "Carnival Overture" by Dvorak. The number is a spirited one, yet containing quiet passages of unexpected beauty. Utilizing all the power of the orchestra, the overture ends magnificently, forming a fitting conclusion for an unusually fine program.

T.D.N.

Malloney Galleries

Alberto Guerrero's program on Saturday consisted entirely of the thirty-two- and three-part inventions by J. S. Bach. These intricate compositions, representing the ultimate achievement of the polyphonic period, very seldom find their way into concert programs and an opportunity to hear them is so rare as to be almost unique. They require a great deal of concentration on the part of the listener and if this concentration is not forthcoming nothing can be got out of the music.

There is not the same variety in this group as, for example, in the 8 Pre-ludes and Fugues, but such variety as there is, Mr. Guerrero took full advantage of. He treated each number as a separate work of art, varying the ornaments to suit the particular one.

Mr. Guerrero's playing was delightful. He was able to convey his keen appreciation almost as well as that great mentor of Bach's keyboard music, Harold Samuel. All the subtleties of the inventions were brought out without taking too great liberties with the rhythm and the strictly limited tonal effect. The sixth two- and three-part inventions and the eighth two-part invention (probably the only well known of the thirty) were perhaps the most pleasing.

The pianist prefaced his recital with a few remarks on his approach to the music.

TIGERS MANGLE VARSITY BLUES

However, the Varsity lead did not last as McGowan, Apps, Hoch and Chisholm counted in quick succession.

About mid-way through the second canto Primeau and Charles were sent off for tripping each other and McGowan scored again, going in for a close shot. Four minutes later McGowan again put the red light on after taking a pass from Apps. Williamson got the Tigers' seventh goal on a pass from Primeau.

With Bruce Charles again serving a penalty Mackie scored the last counter of the contest on a smart passing play with McGowan and Apps getting the assists on the play. The Blues ganged in waves of four but Teno rose to great heights and kept them out until the final whistle.

Varsity: Goal, Shipman; defence, Jeffrey, Charles; centre, Lenahan; wings, Valiquette, MacPherson; subs, McLelland, MacLoughlan, Ripley and Driscoll.

Hamilton: Goal, Teno; defence, Radke, Hoch; centre, McGowan; wings, Mackie, Apps; subs, Primeau, Chisholm, Williamson, Farrell.

Referee: Charles Talbot, Preston.

The press agent at Columbia University roars our Nancy Pyper one better. Recently he kidnapped the dramatic critic of the Columbia Spectator and forced him to take a very minor part in the play. The other actors merely raised their brows and said "That dreadful critic person."

DRAMA SUPERSEDES THE MODERN NOVEL CONTENDS WILDER

"ATTITUDE UNGRATEFUL"

Pratt Agrees Drama Improving

Novel

"The novel," barked Mr. Thornton Wilder in the notebook of the New York Journalist, "the novel is losing its validity for the twentieth century."

Mr. Wilder went on to explain, and, to some extent qualify his pessimistic observations on the value of the novel to modernity. His viewpoint is reproduced in the "Yale News". Stating that the most distinguished novelists of the past decade had suddenly become to modern eyes less vital than we had thought them, that the vast work of Galsworthy, Conrad and Hardy can already be seen against the perspective of the Victorians to be of slighter concern. PRACTICAL WORK IN SLUM CLEARANCE PLANNED BY S.C.M.

A new study group, sponsored by the S.C.M., gathered with the hopes of arousing student and outside interest for the accomplishment of something really concrete in the way of a slum clearance. The Reverend John Frank, recently returned from England, led the discussion.

It was suggested that a similar scheme to that worked out in London might be adopted here. A small block of flats might be erected as an experiment for housing here as a 3 per cent investment similar to that adopted in England. However, to work out the system on a large scale a firm financial backing will be necessary. With the co-operation of members from the various professions some scheme could be concluded. A central authority such as a Public Utilities Committee would be required to supervise the affair.

For the accomplishment of anything practical a thorough study will be necessary. Hence the group looked forward to a further discussion on this vital question.

DR. PHELAN ADDRESSES LITERARY SOCIETY

Philosophical Ideas Should Be Handled with Care

Reverend Dr. Gerald Phelan, director of the Mediaeval Institute at St. Michael's College, last night stressed the importance of fidelity to philosophical ideas in an address to the St. Joseph's Literary Society. Taking as his subject "The Dynamic of Philosophy", Dr. Phelan outlined the consequences of handling philosophical ideas recklessly and traced the growth of much of our present day philosophy to its origin in the earlier centuries.

In his lecture he indicated the present distorted existence of the philosophy of the 17th century as originally found in Descartes, Spinoza and their contemporaries, as a result of the careless manner in which their original ideas were handled.

AVUKAH'S DISCUSS ZIONIST PROBLEMS

A Philosophy of Co-operation not of Socialism, Says
Dr. Gelber

CURRENT EVENTS REVIEWED

"All philosophies of Zionism start with the Jewish problem," stated Marvin Gelber, B.A., in his discussion of "Palestine and the Philosophy of Zionism" at the meeting of the Avukah Society yesterday evening. "The main philosophies differ in what they consider the nature of the problem to be. There are three divisions: political, labour and cultural."

"They have developed," continued Mr. Gelber, "a movement of co-operativeness. We must not mistake it for socialism. But the danger is that what may start up with the idea of co-operation and sharing may end up in individual exploitation. The ideal of co-operation is realized here in America."

"The co-operative colonies as represented in Palestine interested me most," said the speaker, who has just returned from a four months' stay in Palestine. He went on to discuss the various labour groups existing there.

"We may easily lose the spirit of Palestine. It is one of upbuilding of camaraderie and co-operation," stated Dr. Gelber in conclusion.

The meeting included an account of Current Events presented by Dr. Mark Zimmerman, in which he reviewed the events now relevant to the Jewish problem. (Continued on Page 4)

Famous Speakers to Address Club Founded by
M. de Champ

REDUCTION IN FEES

Speaking on "The French Theatre since the War," Monsieur Henri Bon-gard, French consul at Montreal, will address the Alliance Francaise next Friday evening at the Heliconian Club.

Membership fees for students have been reduced to one-third of the amount in former years, and increased membership in the society has already been noticed, according to Felix Walter of Trinity College, president of the organization.

Long established on this campus, the Alliance Francaise has branches all over the world, with headquarters in Paris. The Toronto branch was founded thirty-five years ago by Professor de Champ of University College.

An ambitious program has been arranged by officers of the society for the coming year. A concert of modern French music will be presented sometime in mid-December at the Women's Art Association. In conjunction with the University of Toronto, the society will present, in the new year, a lecture by Professor Dalbensterger.

The Alliance Francaise has indicated its intention of presenting a gold and a silver medal to University students for work in French. The conditions of these awards have not yet been settled.

PLANNING OF ROOMS TOPIC AT MUSEUM

Principles of Design, Harmony of Line Essential in Dignified Home

MISS HAMILTON, SPEAKER

Simplicity was the keynote of the second of Miss Evelyn Hamilton's lectures on Interior Decoration at the Museum yesterday afternoon.

Miss Hamilton discussed the principles of design and harmony of line and form with special reference to the planning of a room.

Beginning with the bed sitting room, she pointed out how useful it is to members of a large family in whose home there are not enough living rooms.

These rooms should be more formal than a bedroom and should be planned with a view to utility and comfort. (Continued on Page 3)

SPECIAL CONVOCATION PROCEDURE

The following instructions are for the benefit of those students who intend to be present at Convocation Hall tomorrow afternoon:

Entrance will be through the southeast door of Convocation Hall. Doors will open at 2:45 p.m.; admission by ticket only.

The galleries of Convocation Hall have been reserved for students; galleries O, P, Q, H, I, will be filled first.

Any students unable to get tickets may see the arrival of the Governor-General and his party by lining up at the Chancellor's door, which is situated between the main entrances to Simcoe Hall and Convocation Hall.

The Governor-General and his party will arrive at 3:15 p.m. Cheerleaders will be on hand.

When the convocation procession is proceeding to the platform the head cheerleader will call for a Toronto yell.

When the procession is in pace the national anthem will be sung. The President of the University of Toronto will present His Excellency for the degree.

After conferring the degree the Chancellor will ask the Governor-General to address the convocation.

When the Governor-General rises to speak the cheerleaders will call for three cheers for His Excellency.

After the address the convocation will be dismissed. The organist will play a "Toronto" which will be sung by the audience and undergraduates.

Annesleyites Accept Restrictions Altho' With Many Maledictions

Life in a girls' residence is hedged about with rules if one can believe the Annesley Hall Handbook, which we scanned today. We understand that freshies are given every care, being assigned on arrival to a senior, who immediately introduces them to a couple of fellows named Dean and Don—campus gigolos, no doubt.

The parties at Annesley are evidently won, as witness this item: "You should co-operate with the nurse by visiting the infirmary on Monday following the House Party for a medical examination." What about the Hart House Masquerade?

The medical needs of a residence girl are amply cared for by an imposing panel of specialists that would make Ann Arbor take a back seat. Even a psychiatrist is listed.

Don't get the idea that our Annesleyites are not free—they may attend any of five city dance halls. Red-tape is cut to the minimum and all that is necessary is permission from parents and from this fellow Don. It isn't requisite to even mention it to Dean—unless one desires to be out until 1:30. Other things that require special permission are to drive home or outside the city, to drive a hired car, to toboggan or ski, go flying or boating. It also requires official consent to go home.

Six times a year the first year girl may stay out after 12:30, by giving notice the day before. Twice a week she may be out until that time, and once the week until 11:30. Other nights 10:30 is the deadline, after which fines go into effect. No leave is allowed after 11:30 Sundays unless the student is returning from out of town.

If the co-ed be caught attending an "unspecified" dance hall, she may be confined to residence after 7:30 nights for a period of weeks. Wonder about those two at the "Dude Ranch" the other night?

Men may be received in the reception rooms from 7:30 until 10:30 on Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings. But the girls are not left without amusements other nights, as "a sewing-machine is supplied for the use of students."

Residence girls are required to have a wardrobe consisting of sweaters, skirts, dresses and a bathrobe, but no (Continued on Page 4)

Tweedsmuir Visit Honour to Students

Tomorrow afternoon we shall have the privilege of seeing a distinguished visitor receive an honorary degree from our University, an opportunity unlikely to occur more than once in the career of any undergraduate. It is a privilege and an opportunity that no undergraduate should disregard. We are fortunate in receiving a visit from Lord Tweedsmuir so soon after his arrival in Canada.

The conferring of a degree upon so eminent a person as the Governor-General brings honour and distinction to the University which confers it. It would still be an honour and distinction if Lord Tweedsmuir were not the Governor-General for John Buchan comes to Canada a famous man in his own right in the fields of literature and of statesmanship. Possibly no appointment has caused more genuine satisfaction throughout the country than this most recent one.

We hope that Lord Tweedsmuir will carry away with him a favourable impression of our University. We know that he will face a Hall packed to capacity with enthusiastic students. We are grateful to the President for making it possible for undergraduates to attend this Convocation. With so many people anxious to be present at the ceremony we appreciate his thoughtfulness in reserving a thousand seats for students. It is only unfortunate that Convocation Hall holds no more.

The presence of the University Band and of cheerleaders to lead the college yells should lend a truly student atmosphere to the dignified ceremony. It is Dr. Cody's wish that it be essentially a University function and primarily for students.

Those who do not succeed in finding a place in Convocation Hall will no doubt have an opportunity of seeing the Governor-General anyway, as it is his intention to spend the entire day on the campus.

Canada's Position In the Sanctions War

Economic sanctions imposed by fifty-two nations against Italy have now been in force for nearly a week and already there are two groups of people who are disappointed—those who optimistically predicted that Italy would meekly surrender and those who pessimistically warned that she would precipitate a world war. Military sanctions may be found necessary for a speedy termination of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict. If so, Canada may be asked to lend her support to the League. It is thus appropriate to see under what circumstances Canadian support of League of Nations military sanctions against Italy may be justified.

Some people say—we are happy and more or less contented here in Canada, why bother about some unimportant state away off in Africa, we are sure to lose trade by meddling with Italy. To a degree, this may be correct, but there is also another view to consider.

For security of trade, for assurance that we will always obtain from other countries those things without which we would have to greatly curtail our standard of living, for continuance of our supply of such things as rubber, oil, coal, sugar, we must ensure that there is eliminated the threat of robbery of one state by another. The argument that present members of the League have been guilty of armed robbery in the past does not alter the fact that this

Arthur Lismer Hart House Art Gallery

(The following review has been written for "The Varsity" by George D. Pepper of the Ontario College of Art.)

To enter the Art Gallery at Hart House while the present exhibition is on the walls, is an exhilarating experience. For the canvases of Arthur Lismer on view there are colourful and alive, and evince a joy in their creation. These robust landscapes indicate an artist to whom nature is an open book, and who paints it with enthusiasm.

Mr. Lismer brings to his work an unerring instinct for character and mood. Technical accomplishment and precious qualities of paint matter very little to him. His interest is centred on fixing on canvas, in as direct a manner as possible, the essential characteristics of his subject. Thus, whether he is painting in a Nova Scotian fishing village, in the rugged country north of Lake Superior, or in the Rocky Mountains, the place and the season are strongly felt.

Some of the canvases in this exhibition are things of great complexity. In his treatment of these he is aided by a rare ability to summarize. The jumbled paraphernalia on a fisherman's wharf, and the tangled growth of pine, poplar and sumac on a northern island, are suggested rather than defined. In this way pictorial unity is preserved, with no loss of wealth of detail.

In his sketches of the rugged country north of Lake Superior and in his Rocky Mountain canvases, the handling is different but no less appropriate to the subject-matter. Here, detail is rigorously suppressed. Rocks, trees and clouds are combined and unified into an expression of elemental grandeur. This quality is at its height in the large painting of Cathedral Mountain.

But it is Mr. Lismer's Georgian Bay pictures that give most completely the sense that the artist is at one with his environment. In these the mood, whether quiet or stormy, is deeply felt. One canvas is drenched with sun: the rocks reflect the dazzling light, the foliage droops, and the water moves lazily in the white stillness of noonday. In others, of the same district, nature has sprung into action. Scudding, lowering clouds race across the sky, the trees bend in the gale, and the water is lashed with waves that leap across the channels to break into shimmering rhythms against the rocky islands.

The knowledge and conviction that are evident in Mr. Lismer's work, and the vigour of his handling, make this present exhibition a most stimulating one.

Action was taken recently by the Cambridge police in suppressing the sedate Harvard Advocate, a campus literary magazine, on a charge of literary immorality. So far this has resulted in little more than a restrictive premium on all copies of the issue in circulation.

Eventually the public may learn to evaluate colleges upon their deeds, and not upon the reams of press matter that are sent forth from some of our higher institutions.—The Cornell Daily Sun.

robbery must be stopped—that the ruthless killing of innocent defenceless peoples must cease.

There can be no objection to the internal policing of a state, if necessary, by armed men. If a man to advance his own economic interests starts robbing people at the point of a gun, all good citizens are in favour of sending out armed men to stop him—even though the ultimate loss to property and to life will be greater than if the criminal were allowed to take his spoils and retire in peace.

And why do we do this? Because all sane people realize that robbery of any sort, especially armed robbery must be outlawed. If it were not, then personal property and human life would be valueless. We punish an aggressor because we must prevent him and others from ravaging society. If we go to these great pains to punish aggression between individuals, why should we not similarly punish aggression between nations?

It is to be fervently hoped that military sanctions will not be found necessary. But if they are found necessary, and if the Canadian government supports them, then we should bear in mind that there is something at least to be said in their favour. Whether the disadvantages of support of military sanctions are greater than the advantages as outlined above is not for us to say.

Ever since we ran his interview with the fantastic engineer whose self-assumed task is the demolition and rebuilding of the local town hall, our demon interviewer Hal Taylor, has been straining at the leash in his eagerness for new and bigger assignments. He heard that Prof. Ketchum called attention to his scoop in third year psychology and spent some moments discussing the strange case of the bewildered builder. Since then there's been no holding him back, so the other day we let him go up to the museum and interview the Black Widow Spider whose picture has been on the billboards for some months now, and very vicious she looks, too. Here, then, is the result: Mr. Coventry please note.

"There was a sign hanging on the museum about a black widow so its up the stairs we go past the telephone pole with the bumps on it and past the statue of a lady with a child in her arms (who has no arms and consequently no child) till we see the black widow. After looking at her for fifteen minutes we asked her where the card was that told about where she was found and her name in Latin so she gave us her card and we told her we'd phone her.

"There was a little glass box up there too with some twigs in it which was supposed to have a spider which was a black widow just like the other one, who gave us her phone number. The spider was busy tearing into some flies so we didn't have the heart to disturb it. It said on the card that the female black lady widow spider would make love to the guy spider and then kill the guy spider and eat him. There weren't any guy spiders in the glass box so either—

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Royal Alexandra

Lucy Beaumont is a Kind Lady who gives food and shelter to a villain (Ralph MacBane), the latter disguised as a beggar. He brings his wife (Mary Young) and four confederates to the house, gets rid of her maid (Marie Paxton) and takes possession of the household. The Kind Lady's best friend being conveniently killed in an aeroplane accident, the wretches, as Miss Beaumont calls them time and again, are in complete control of the situation. Her escape after five years of captivity is the final event of the plot.

There are thirteen characters in the play, six of whom could be dispensed with without the slightest loss to the dramatic structure. The plot is at the extreme edge of probability. Edward Chodorov, who dramatized Hugh Walpole's story, has missed almost every opportunity for good dialogue and good comedy.

It is a pity that Miss Beaumont has come to Toronto immediately after Mme. Nazimova's dignified and beautiful performance in a part of the same age. The difference between genuine feeling for gesture and an array of stage tricks was clearly apparent.

Miss Beaumont had the time of her life tottering about the stage feigning impotent old age. The supporting cast was inadequate; half-finished characterizations were the rule. The stage movements, however, were very good. The set was correct, but what purported to be a Whistler looked like one of the earlier works of the late Sir J. E. Millais.

Margaret Eaton Hall

The Toronto Operatic Society seems to have captured the genuine Gilbert and Sullivan spirit, presenting their operas with verve and enthusiasm. Last night's performance of Ruddigore, at Margaret Eaton Hall, was an exhibition of sheer exhilaration in both dramatics and singing.

Let's Go Places

Bal Boheme

With its walls adorned with a glittering galaxy of masterpieces, the ballroom at the Ontario College of Art provided a perfect setting for the Bal Boheme last Friday night.

The murals on the whole bore the hallmark of genius from the point of view of line and colour and originality of conception and treatment. Their subjects ranged all the way from Bacchanalian revels to the antics of Groucho Marx, the loves of Calamity Jane, and last but not least the immortal ride of Lady Godiva.

Singin' Sam Morgan and his ten coffee-coloured syncopeating Harlem Knights did things with their asbestos-lined instruments and the smell of brimstone filled the air. The costumes varied all the way from stately burnoose-swathed Arab sheiks to their sylvan-like paramours who—well—were not burnoose-swathed. Colour and bizarre designs were the rule for all costumes and the Bohemian motif reigned throughout.

A highlight of the evening was the skit given by first year students, who touched up Shakespeare's version of the Wall Scene in "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

Sandwiches, sinkers and java were served in profusion, amid surroundings of a cafe Montparnasse, at intermission. At two a.m. the gay revellers reluctantly sought their dusty garrets and mouldy cellars to plan (we hope) another arty spurge in the not-too-distant future.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

U.C. Seniors and Vic Seniors will fight it out in the basketball semi-finals this Wednesday and Friday. These two teams won their sudden-death games in O.C.E. gym last night. U.C. Seniors defeated the Therapists 33-16, and some of the wildest passing of the season featured the play. The ball passed very rapidly from one end of the gym to the other, so rapidly that some of the players couldn't hang on to it when it came their way. The Therapists' shooting was spectacular at times, and Ruth Carlyle sank some beautiful shots from almost centre floor. The U.C. girls, particularly Kay Brown, got most of their shots by clever cluding of their checks, and showed real basketball technique.

Unfortunately for U.C. Jean Atkinson will be out of the game for the rest of the season. One of her ribs was cracked in the last game with St. Hilda's freshmen. She is one of U.C.'s best defence players, and their team will certainly miss her. Incidentally the team has had only two practices, so it certainly deserves credit for its record to date. Margery Bean, the coach, has done a good job, and has instilled a lot of pep and energy into her squad.

Vic Seniors defeated St. Mike's by 23-12, outclassing the Saints in passing, shooting and floor-play. They have plenty of speed to burn, and were in championship form last night. Betty Jenkinson, Maisie Cowan and Erna Laing all started for them. St. Mike's didn't play quite as well as in their other encounters with Vic, and had very little luck with their shots, but they fought hard all the way. Sunny McLaughlin was the best of the losers, and with a little more knowledge of floor-play, should go quite a long way.

The galleries last night were surprisingly large, especially in the second game. The St. Mike's men turned out in large numbers, and roared their approval when the Saints sank their shots. At half-time they staged an impromptu shooting exhibition to which the girls responded by playing "Chopsticks" on the piano. Vic also had a crowd of supporters, and the Scarlet and Gold yell was heard loud and often.

We would like to draw the attention of the Vic girls to the announcement which appeared in the Sports Notices yesterday: "Will all those who signified their intention of swimming at the Lillian Massey pool this year, please pay their athletic fee at Simcoe Hall at once if they have not yet done so. There will be a rebate of $1.25 for each girl who signed the list. This may be obtained by presenting your receipt to the swimming convenor, Room 29, Upper Annesley, on Wednesday, November 27 from 1.30-2.30." This is a real bargain Vic, and you're very lucky to have it.

It seems that quite a number of girls were interested in our suggestion about rifle shooting, so now we'll have to rouse ourselves from our lethargy, and discover what can be done about it. It was a hit in the dark, but the shot told.

SENIOR CHAMPIONS TO PLAY VARSITY AT ARENA TONIGHT

Last Week's Defeat Finds Them Determined to Make Amends

TEAM REVAMPED

Toronto Dukes, Twice Victorious, Are Confident of a Win

Tonight the Toronto Dukes, Senior O.H.A. champions, invade Varsity Arena to engage the University of Toronto in their first clash of this season. With victories over both Hamilton and Oakville, Toronto Dukes are confident of setting aside the Varsity threat for a win. The Blues with a tie and a loss chalked against them, however, will be out to gain some ground against the champions and a fighting Blue squad will go out on Ross Workman's ice surface to upset senior hockey dope.

With an 8-1 loss chalked against them last Friday they are in no pleasant frame of mind considering that they were off colour down in Bengal town, and tonight should see Varsity make amends. One of the features of their last home game was reaction to student support, Varsity attacks having plenty of drive under the stimulation of the Varsity cheers which should not be lacking at any game. No doubt the line up will be revamped to give the University of Toronto sextet the best scoring lines possible as Captain Normie McClelland will lead the Varsity attacks for the first time on home ice.

A long schedule of fourteen games is yet to be played and the Blues' hopes are by no means dimmed, as they have already one point to their credit with more in the offing and the system of playoffs qualifying the first three should see Varsity battling it out with the leaders tonight to attain a good start towards that end.

Ottawa, Nov. 25.—Changes in Canada's radio policy, it is rumoured, are being considered by the new government. More revenue from advertising, the abolition of licenses and the substitution for them of a stamp tax on tubes are among the changes contemplated.

ACE LENAHAN

Shifty centre for the Blue team who will clash with the Toronto club in their scheduled O.H.A. fixture at Varsity Arena tonight. Ace starred with the Blue team a few years ago, and has returned for a course at O.C.E.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George Vair

Evidently John DeGruchy, president of the C.R.U. and the leading sports writers, are not of the same opinion as to who's who in the rugby world and how all-star players should be chosen. Choosing players by their consistency, durability, versatility, clean play and personal capabilities Mr. DeGruchy selects an all-Eastern aggregation of stars in this week's MacClean's Magazine and includes Al Williams of Toronto University as first string snapback. The seventeen newspapermen who chose an intercollegiate team from the four clubs awarded the same spot to Barker of Queen's. We leave it to you to fight it out at leisure. Personally we gave Al the call along with four other Varsity players, four Queen's players, two from McGill and one from Western after looking at it from all angles.

Joe Connelly is rated by DeGruchy as capable to line up with Sterling and Welch on the all-star backfield while Coulter and Witzel find a place on the alternate squad. Barker is the only man from Queen's to find his name in print on either squad. However, the fact remains that the Presbyterians have the championship mug. Possibly Mr. DeGruchy failed to consider a player's aggressiveness when glancing over the 300 candidates for 12 positions.

In a recent editorial in the Western Gazette the writer condemns the subsidizing of rugby players and remarks that a move is on foot to recruit senior players by the above method. Although not in favour of subsidizing sport as an easy means to get a degree we do believe that certain branches of sport in this University are deserving of more than the sweater the player used all season. At present even the annual athletic dance free to T holders looks to be doomed. The argument that amateur sport is purely amateur no longer holds water whether it be in the intercollegiate rugby union or any outside league and the sooner the governing bodies admit this fact the better for everyone concerned. Athletic scholarships are accepted in at least one university in Ontario while other means are undoubtedly used to retain certain players at the college which they are attending.

Sylvonus Apps, the Paris student who won the pole vault championship at the British Empire games is a busy man these days. Attending McMaster University, it is rumoured that he is trying for the Rhodes Scholarship award besides playing hockey for the Hamilton senior club, who will be seen in action when they visit the Arena one week from today. He also played on the championship intermediate rugby team at the Tigertown.

Varsity juniors lost their initial S.P.A. game when the St. Michael's majors ran up an 8-1 score on the Blues, but don't run away with the idea that the thirds are doomed to a season of defeats. Bailey iced a strong team which held the Gaels to a 2-1 score in the initial session only to weaken in the remaining two periods. The Juniors have only been out for a short time and will improve with regular practice. Just remember that only twice in history has the S.P.A. winner gone on to win the Canadian title.

Normie McClelland's senior club are on the proverbial spot when they engage the Toronto Dukes at the Varsity Arena tonight. The boys who saw the Hamilton fixture last Saturday report that the Tigers could not do anything wrong and were especially "hot" around the nets, while Varsity were decidedly off colour. However, tonight is another game and the Blues will be in there giving everything they have, so how about a little support for the team?

Varsity's three-man fencing team of Michell, Bachert and Tuckingham made a good showing in the fencing tournament held at Hart House over the week-end when they finished second to the Toronto Sword Club with six points.

THERAPY DEFEATED GROUP TIE BROKEN

U.C. Seniors Lead Throughout in Championship Form Score 33-16

SHOOTING SPECTACULAR

In the sudden death game to break a group tie, U.C. Seniors defeated Therapy last night in the O.C.E. gym, with a score of 33-16. U.C. led all the way and the result was never in doubt, although in the second half the Therapists broke through to make five baskets. The sensational shooting of Ruth Carlyle put Therapy on the scoreboard when she sank two beautiful ones from centre floor. But the pace by U.C. was too fast for Therapy who did not cover floor space quickly and U.C. used their six man defence to advantage.

U.C. Seniors: Kay Brown (10), Pat Petlick (9), Joan Romney (14), G. St. Aubin, H. McGarry, E. Kennedy, Betty Robinson, R. Turner, H. Dewy. Therapy: Ruth Carlyle (6), Phyllis Webb (5), Mary Eaton (5), Ruth Young, D. Grant, M. Pollock, Hetty Smith, Muriel Clark.

on your arrival in Canada as representative of His Majesty, our beloved king."

Mr. Nixon expressed his confidence that Lord Tweedsmuir would be able to assume his responsibilities in this, the most difficult period of the world's history, with the same calm consideration and sane judgment that has characterized his actions in other spheres. "We gladly avail ourselves of this opportunity to refer to your services during the war," he said. "As a member of the Intelligence Staff and later as director of information and dissemination of propaganda for the British forces, you performed a duty, not in the public eye, but fraught with important results for the allied troops, and carried out that duty in a manner which earned for you the gratitude of your King and the admiration of your conferees."

Replying to the acting premier's speech, Lord Tweedsmuir expressed warmest thanks for Mr. Nixon's "generous words of greeting." "It might well fire the imagination of any lover of history to be so welcomed by the representatives of a great province, which, in its time, has made so much history," he said.

Ontario has produced men famous in Canadian and Imperial history, and many notable leaders in the spheres of commerce and scholarship and science. Lord Tweedsmuir went on. "Your boundaries run from the temperate shores of the great lakes far into the distant north, so that you have that priceless asset for a nation, great tracts which still await development and still call for the adventure."

"I thank you most sincerely, sir, for your kindly words about my wife and myself. My knowledge of Canada is still slight, but my appetite for further knowledge is immense. I look forward with enthusiasm and delight to my term of office here when I can get to know you better."

PLANNING OF ROOMS TOPIC AT MUSEUM

The speaker showed an illustration of a room of this type which was planned to give the aspects of a foyer, a bedroom and a living room.

The purpose of sunrooms is to get the outdoor atmosphere of relaxation and sunshine and air into our homes. Bright cheerful furniture, plants and birds help us to do this. Some people prefer flagstone terraces to the sunrooms.

The hall is the most important room in the house. It gives the first impression of the home. Therefore it should be warm and cheerful, yet dignified.

In the library, a room used for quiet reading, we should find comfort. Soft warm colours of russet and brownish tones, soft deep cushioned chairs and proper lighting gives us this.

It is in the kitchen that the greatest strides have been made in recent years. Since the three main working centres, the stove, refrigerator and sink are in the kitchen, a triangular arrangement is most satisfactory.

ST. MIKE'S ELIMINATED BY VICTORIA SENIORS

Sudden Death Game Brings Victory with 11 Point Lead

In a sudden death game Vic Seniors eliminated St. Mike's 23-12 last night at 8 o'clock in the O.C.E. gym. The game was featured by sloppy passing, and although St. Mike's put up a good fight, the Vic players were too tall and powerful for them.

ment. It is believed the socialists, communists and fascists on the campus will be aligned on the opposition benches in an endeavour to defeat the motion.

The debate has unusual significance in light of the straw vote sponsored by The Varsity, which revealed a predominant Tory tendency among the students at the University here.

Two of the ablest undergraduate debaters from Western Canada ever to make the tour of the east under the auspices of the N.F.C.U.S. will speak at the debate tonight. John Gould from the University of British Columbia, whose amazing career has run the gamut from logging to being "at sea" for two years, will speak for the Liberal cause.

Maurice Western from the University of Saskatchewan, renowned in that province for his oratorical ability, will lend his eloquence to the opposition. Paul Martin, Liberal member of parliament for Essex, will also take part in the debate.

Speaker Rae stated last night a large number of undergraduates had indicated their intention of speaking from the floor.

In Response to Requests

The Date Bureau is still going strong according to the Operator, when discovered in a local caffeine and beans house late last night.

"Tonight, last night and every night our dates are being enjoyed. We have had only one minor complaint so far, and that applicant sent in a lead dime anyway."

Here is a copy of a letter received by the Operator recently:

"Dear Cupid:

This is a letter of appreciation. Last year I was persuaded to try the date bureau on a dare. I did, and got a girl who had also gone into the thing as a joke.

We were both in our graduating year, both had the same interests, and ideas, and best of all, our homes were within twenty miles of each other. Since graduating, we have each returned home, and have been glad to continue our friendship.

The Date Bureau, as we see it, is regarded with suspicion, and we wish to give you full permission to publish this letter to clear up doubts.

I would be very pleased if, in the near future you could point to ours as the first "Date Bureau wedding". Fortunately, it is not beyond the bounds of possibility.

Yours gratefully,

The letter apparently speaks for itself, does it speak for any more Date Bureau couples?

The Date Bureau form is being printed today in response to popular request.

The Annesley girls have student government. Last year the executive modernized the rules, especially those relating to leaves. Before that girls had to be in about an hour earlier. The system is essentially a survival of the constitution of 1906.

The mauve decade has been over for a quarter of a century, and since that time women have been granted equal rights with men in politics, law, medicine and most other fields. University residences seem to lag far behind the world at large in this respect.

grams of the season is to be presented by Richard Halliburton, who is to appear here Wednesday evening, November 27 at Massey Hall. An incurable romantic, a fearless explorer, one of the most popular of non-fiction writers, Richard Halliburton returns to the lecture platform after a year's absence with his thrilling lecture "Seven League Boots".

During the last year he has turned newspaper correspondent. Free to roam the world, to go any place he chose, with an assignment to fill an entire page for forty newspapers was the order given him—probably the largest order ever given to any author in the history of journalism, visiting more strange places and encountering more extraordinary adventures than ever before.

His elephant ride over the Alps, his visit to Abyssinia, his deathbed interview with the chief assassin of the Romanoffs, are only three of the high spots along this latest journey.

He also went to Santiago de Cuba to visit the wreck of the Merrimac of Spanish War fame, and the hulks of the Spanish warships driven, during the famous naval battle, onto the beach where they are still to be seen.

He visited Fort Jefferson, America's Devil's Island, the Civil War fortress sixty miles out in the Gulf of Mexico from Key West. This prison was made famous by the unjust imprisonment of Dr. Samuel Mudd, the doctor who set the broken leg of John Wilkes Booth, after the murder of Lincoln.

Mr. Halliburton spent all last winter in Russia. Of life in the Soviet state he has much to say—and he is not afraid to say it as he does not expect to go back.

He turned monk at a monastery on Mt. Athos, the religious community in northern Greece where no woman—or any female animal or fowl—has set foot for a thousand years.

He was the guest of Venizelos at the time when the failure of the recent Greek revolution caused the ex-premier to flee the country.

Halliburton enjoys a wide reputation as a public speaker, having begun his lectures in 1925. As a box office attraction he has few rivals on this continent.

larily attended the French movies and who hoped that perhaps their car was becoming attuned to the different nasals and elisions, Dr. Knock must have been a great disappointment. Having only attended about 40 movies myself, I was quite proud when I caught approximately one word in fifteen and the general idea of the plot. And that was a difficult job but worth the effort.

The play is an amusing satire. Dr. Knock, having bought a practice in the mountains that, due to the healthy climate, hardly exists, set out to make his village medicine-conscious. By lectures and free consultations he succeeds in raising the number of patients from 0 to 250 in three months. The town prospers, the doctor has a comfortable living, and each night at ten he is consoled by the thought that in the little town below the hospital, 250 thermometers are penetrating 250 of his clients which is a consoling thought even for us this cool November morning.

Again we were struck by the versatility of French actors—that scrawny maid was last seen here as Sonia in Crime et Châtiment. Dr. Knock himself gave a perfect performance, and the first doctor was a treat. The dialogue was smart and witty and usually over our heads, but the gestures and diagrams aided our comprehension considerably. The general effect was more startling than shocking and really delightful.

Next week we get Black Eyes with real Russian music in atmosphere and everything and a return engagement of the story of Chopin and his favourite literary friend and room-mate, George Sand, to the accompaniment of the Etude in E major, the Polonaise, and other such famous compositions.

We do not know who was the original author of "Barbary Coast" or what alterations were made by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur in preparing the story for the screen, but the result, as viewed this week at Loew's, is certainly characteristic of the co-authors "The Scoundrel". There have been gold rush pictures before, and they have all had their bad men and gold-digging women (with hearts of the same material) and their idealistic young heroes, but in "Barbary Coast" these very obvious ingredients are handled with

The theme of the opera offers great scope for humour, as it is a satire on the maudlin melodrama of the period. Because of the misdeeds of Sir Rupert Murgatroyd, the first baronet, all the baronets of Ruddigore inherit a curse, by which they must commit some crime every day. The last baronet, Sir Ruthven, being both good and clever, skillfully avoids his curse by disappearing from home and taking on the rustic identity of Robin Oakapple. His young brother, Sir Despard, is doomed to terrorize the countryside with Dracula-like activities which his benevolent ancestors supervise, while his poor sweetheart goes stark mad. The tale becomes complicated, with both brothers romantically involved, until finally the last ancestor, coming out of his picture frame to pass judgment on his too-kindly successor, is convinced that he really is not supposed to be dead at all. It seems that "if a Ruddigore does not commit a crime he will die, which really means that in avoiding a crime he is virtually committing suicide; suicide is a crime —"

The explanation is rather hazy, but he returns to life and all ends well. The professional bridesmaids end a long term of unemployment by officiating at three weddings, and everybody is happy. Arthur Slater, as Sir Despard, gives an outstanding performance in a cast of excellent players. The last act is made doubly hilarious by his appearance in a beautiful wig of long black curls. Alfred Kidney lacks a bit of his old vigour in his portrayal of Sir Ruthven, but handles his role well. The chief feminine roles were amazingly well played. Doris Pett was an eminently satisfying Rose Rosbud, com-tent than we had first supposed, the prominent novelist wound up by declaring that "in the realm of possibilities the drama may well become the chosen vehicle of expression of the new twentieth century mentality."

Professor E. J. Pratt of Victoria College, was inclined to disagree with Mr. Wilder's estimate of the novel as a less powerful force. He acknowledged that drama was forging to the front as the chief medium of expression, but held nevertheless that the novel would be by no means supplanted by the drama. He denied that the work of Conrad, Hardy and Galsworthy had declined in popularity.

"The novel is an art form of a bourgeois civilization and can last only as long as that civilization lasts," declared Mr. H. N. Frye of Victoria. "The drama implies a group response, and must inevitably take the place of the individual to the individual inasmuch as we are moving from an individualistic to a group of civilization."

Mr. Frye went on to explain that the novel was a diffusive medium and was made up of the massing of many details. "Galsworthy and Conrad had reached the peak of the novel's development, but had not unified their material," he said, and added that much of the praise which had greeted their work in the beginning was unjustified.

"Nothing which Mr. Wilder says can possibly interest me," remarked Professor Davis of University College on reading the excerpt. "It seems rather ungrateful in a man who has reaped such tremendous profits from his own novels to say that the novel is on the decline."

Toronto, Nov. 25.—By a unanimous decision the appeal of Mrs. Elizabeth Tilford, of Woodstock, sentenced for the murder of her husband, was dismissed. She is to be handed on Dec. 17. Written reasons for the refusal of the appeal, which was unusual in that it lasted for two days, will be given later.

LIBERAL M.P. SPEAKS

Conservative Argument Ably Presented by Jeffrey and Western

By John W. Dixon

The forces of Liberalism and Conservatism came to grips last night at Hart House in a debate filled with breezy rhetoric and political banter. After two hours and a half of discussion of the motion they upheld the Liberal government at Ottawa by a vote of 80 to 46.

In broaching the motion, "That this House has confidence in His Majesty's government at Ottawa," A. D. B. Marshall stressed the importance of uniting the sectional interests of Canada. "Liberalism," he said, "is designed to make Canada a political and social unit by fomenting a spirit of co-operation between the provinces and the Dominion." He scored the policy of the past government as Fascist, "imposing" (Continued on Page 4)

Gould Finds Co-eds at U. of T. As Fair As Those of U.B.C.

"The co-eds," mused John Gould, undergraduate debater from the University of British Columbia, who spoke in Hart House last night, "the co-eds of the University of Toronto are quite comparable in beauty to those at the U.B.C."

And it was at U.B.C. that Toronto's own Sidney Hermant, B.A., cast reflections on the University of Toronto co-eds by the trite remark, "I have never seen so many beautiful girls in one place before," referring to the Pacific Coast girls.

However, Gould came from the west coast and last night he vindicated the pulchritude of the Varsity girls after a tour of the University campus in which he admired the beauty—architectural and otherwise.

He puffed on his unlighted cigarette and elaborated on his remarks—this

Professor Gilson Completes Series of Discussions on System of Descartes

A TRUE CYCLE

How accommodating was Descartes' idea of God, who had created just such a world as could be explained by Cartesian philosophy, was pointed out by Professor E. Gilson of St. Michael's College in the last of his series of lectures on the Cartesian cycle, given yesterday afternoon in West Hall.

Dr. Gilson went on to show the paradox presented by Descartes' metaphysical ideas, in which he was willing to dispense with God, and his principles of physics, in which God was essential as the prime mover.

Descartes derived his first principles on physics from his ultimate metaphysical conclusions, said Dr. Gilson. As matter was identical with extension there was no empty space in the world. When God created matter he caused in it a certain amount of motion, and he still reserves in it as much motion as there was on the day of creation. Descartes' idea of motion was a purely geometric concept. It was no (Continued on Page 4)

Under the presidency of Count Odon de Bystrice, of fourth year Medicine, the Polish Club, whose aim it is to promote Polish culture and the Polish language among the students of the University of Toronto, held its fourth meeting of the season at the Polish-Canadian club on Addaide St. last night.

Organized by Stanley Tomalski in March 1933 and consisting now of about 35 members the club is endeavouring to promote a combined social and intellectual activities among the University students of Polish parentage.

Each year members of the club are sent to a University in Poland as representatives of Canadian Polish students. The club also conducts Polish lectures and instructions for the Polish-speaking members.

Student Enthusiasm Runs High Over Visit of the New Governor-General

Demand for Seats Exceeds the Supply; the Band will not be Present

Yells and cheers from thousands of throats will greet the arrival of His Excellency Lord Tweedsmuir, new Governor-General of Canada, at the University this afternoon.

Reports from the S.A.C. office indicate that student enthusiasm for this event is running high, and they cannot hope to fill the demand for seats. One thousand tickets were distributed among the various faculties, but students kept pouring into the office yesterday, clamouring for more.

The facilities of Convocation Hall will be taxed to the utmost, and it is expected that space in front of Simcoe Hall will be literally packed with undergraduates.

Contrary to previous reports, because of the lack of room, the band will not be present, but music from the organ and choral led by McClaren, Mondo and Blum are expected to fill the gap. (Continued on Page 4)

MERCHANT SPEAKS ON FERMENTATION

Work of Chemical Department with Bios of Wildier Ably Described

A SLOW PROCESS

For the past year members of the Chemical Department of the University of Toronto have been carrying on research work with Wildier Bios, which they have found to be an essential food for the reproduction of certain yeasts, it was learned yesterday from Mr. C. Merchant at the weekly Chemistry Seminar.

"Pasteur," Mr. Merchant said, "was the first to determine the cause of alcoholic fermentation, but he believed that a solution of salt and sugar was alone necessary. In 1901 Wildier discovered a substance which he called bios which he said was essential for the reproduction of all yeasts."

The first experiments with Bios were made here by Prof. G. H. W. Lucas, of the Department of Pharmacy and Pharmacology, who succeeded in isolating several constituents of bios and the work is still being carried on. It has been discovered that the particular yeast used here—Saccaromyces Cerevisiae (Continued on Page 3)

NEW STAGE OPENING WITH UNIQUE REVUE AT ST. MICHAEL'S

The new stage, just completed at St. Michael's College, will be opened Saturday, when the first of a series of revues will be presented at the school. The revue combines song and dance acts and brief comedy and dramatic sketches.

Prominent among the numbers will be "Uncle Tom's Taxi Cabin" with Hugh Marks as Uncle Tom, Joe Connolly as Simon Legree, Fred Blum as Little Eva, Charles McShane as Topsy and Charles Peters as Eliza. Others prominent in the cast are Daniel Egan, Arthur Grae, Edward Holihan, Peter Cremasco, John Springer, Pat O'Byrne, John Foristal, James Brigger, Thomas Brett, Desmond Kennedy and many others.

A feature of the revue is the singing, both by the chorus and audience, of parodies on several popular song hits, arranged by a member of the faculty, who is also directing the show.

The assignment sheet said, "Look in at the rehearsals of the U.C. Follies at 3 o'clock." We were there sharp at 3. At exactly 3.10, a comely lass, who said she was a spectator, arrived. Then came Mr. Saul Rae, who proceeded to curse the tardiness of the cast until about 3.45 when the entire ensemble was present. A pretty little trick, who looked like Gail Patrick of the films, was the last to appear. This inspired Mr. Rae to a little pep talk, which certainly ought to have some effect.

Visiting Debaters Vindicate Liberalism

The political harangue which was witnessed in Hart House last night had two highlights—the splendid quality of the speeches delivered by the undergraduates from Western Canada and the Liberal victory in the debate.

Students at the University here as elsewhere are probably unique in the vacillation of their political views. A little over a month ago the students voted for the Conservative government and last night on almost the identical political issue they gave the Liberals a majority by a vote of 80 to 46.

John Gould from the University of British Columbia showed himself to be one of the ablest debaters to visit Hart House for some time. He displayed unusual ability in presenting the Liberal case to the House and his pleasing touches of humour were most acceptable. His colleague, Morris Western, also brought credit to the University he represented.

The appearance of the two debaters from Western Canada at Hart House last night indicated a very desirable situation in the realm of student discussions. Now as never before the West is under observation and the opinions of these two men, steeped in the political thought of their society contributed in no small way to our knowledge of the trend of opinion in that part of Canada which lies west of the Great Lakes.

The efforts of the N.F.C.U.S., which was responsible for their appearance here, is worthy of our highest esteem. Such debates offer an excellent medium for exchange of ideas, and contribute in no small way to a greater understanding of the diverse interests of the Canadian people. As such they embody an indispensable factor in a University education.

To the Victor Goes the Applause

Canada's greatest game, hockey, appears to be reclaiming some of its old time popularity in the minds of the students of the University of Toronto. For the last few years the top heavy teams which formed the opposition together with a correspondingly weak Varsity team, has detracted somewhat from the popularity which the game once enjoyed around the campus. However, a hockey following is somewhat fickle and while the team last year drew only scattered groups to the games the current season will probably see the crowds once more swarming to the arena for the home games—that is providing the team can compete successfully in the group in which they are entered.

Last night's contest proved one thing. That the students want to support their team. Not for some time has a game caused the spirited display among the followers as was evidenced last night. The Blue team, although obviously lighter than the Ducks, were considerably faster, and their courageous efforts had the student body solidly behind them.

The increase or decrease of the attendance depends largely on the results of the Varsity efforts. Should they prove themselves the match of the other members of the group they are certain of support. Last night's defeat, although unfortunate, clearly indicated that they can give the best team in the circuit a real struggle. Given an equal number of what is known in the realm of sport as the "breaks" and they would have beaten the leading Toronto club. Should they have won, the next game would have attracted twice as much student support. And this is as it should be. They have given every indication that they are worthy of it. With practically a new team and a new coach and a new season, with a more optimistic outlook, the students are sure to give the team more support than they have enjoyed for some time.

A Refutation of Disinterestedness

A new faculty organization has made its appearance on the campus—the Social Science Club. It began several weeks ago as a meeting of the students of the Department of Social Science to discuss the Canadian Youth Council, and the formation of a Social Science unit in the University section. The C.Y.C. unit was formed; then it was decided to broaden the activities beyond Council work and link up the course still further with non-academic contact. And for this broader organization was chosen the name: the Social Science Club. It has held several meetings now, two of them devoted to guest speakers, Professor L. T. Morgan of the Department of Economics, and Miss Margaret Gould of the Child Welfare Council.

It is an important step that these students have taken. It carries a refutation for those who (with some justification we must admit) accuse the student body of apathy and lack of participation in current social, economic and political events. By the formation of this group, the Social Science students declare their alliance with the world outside of the campus, and with activity and interests that are not completely academic. If they continue in the spirit with which they started, they will build up a background which will be invaluable to them when they step from the seclusion of the school atmosphere into the poverty-stricken, discouraged world where they will do their work. Social Science is a practical course in an academic university, and the formation of the club is a practical action.

Is Longevity Due to Exercise

Most students, like most people, worry about their health. They would like to get stereotyped rules to go by that they may know what the road they are taking means in terms of resistance to disease and longevity. If we go to the doctors, however, and ask for maxims to health, they will, like good scientists, tell us that there are no such general maxims, but that, as in every organic science, each case must be dealt with on its own merits. According to Dr. Clendenning, for instance, there are only two rules that we can categorically lay down as essential to human health: eat fresh food daily, and avoid getting micro-organisms under your skin or in the absorptive body cavities. The rest, he tells us, is mere opinion.

Living the sedentary life they do, students generally are harassed by one thing in particular and that is the question of exercise. Provision is made on the curriculum for physical training, and that helps to ease our mind. But we manage to sabotage most of the classes. When we emerge from 2nd year, in any case, that one bulwark to sanity is gone.

Back in the late twenties exercise used to be a fetish you will remember. It still remains a bugbear for many people. Is there then no hope for us who slave at our desks all day? Are we all doomed to an early death?

We can all recall how surprised we were when we found that men like Hugo, Faraday, and Spencer died at the age of 83. Isaac Newton was 85 when he died. At the same time constant exercise has not seemed to prolong the lives of some of our famous athletes. In fact it is almost true to say that exercise has little or no effect on longevity at all, except that if it is indulged in too violently it may enlarge the heart. He who uses his body constantly will live a more strenuous life than the man who sits at a desk, but not necessarily a longer one.

Most of us would agree that exercise builds up resistance to disease. This, too, is a fallacy according to many trained observers. It was noted during the war that the diseases resulting from the crowding together of men into camps attacked the robust men from the farms rather than the sallow youths from the city. The latter had in various ways become immune to most of the diseases, which the country-bred youths had never encountered. The only thing that builds immunity to disease, apparently, is immunity. At any rate bodily vigour through exercise is not necessarily a determining factor in combating disease.

Hart House String Quartet

The Hart House String Quartet, under the leadership of the new first violinist, James Levey, formerly leader of the London String Quartet, will play their first Toronto concert on Friday, November 29, at Convocation Hall.

The program for this concert includes a new composition by a prominent contemporary English composer, H. Waldo Warner, former violinist of the London String Quartet. This composition, "Moods," is in six movements and is dedicated to Dr. Frederick Bierhoff, of New York, in gratitude for having saved the life of James Levey from an almost fatal attack of typhoid fever.

The first performance of the work was given at Dr. Bierhoff's home with James Levey, T. W. Petre, William Primrose and Felix Salmond, all former London String Quartet members. The other two items on the program are the Mozart D Minor quartet and the Beethoven quartet in E Minor, Op. 59, No. 2.

James Levey, the new leader, is considered by musicians to be the finest quartet leader in the world today. Born in London, Eng., Mr. Levey studied the violin with Ferdinand Weist-Hill, and made his first public appearance when only 15 years old. Five years later he became a member of the Royal Philharmonic and Beethoven orchestras, and was soon after appointed concertmaster of the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra under Sir Landon Ronald. Later he became leader of the London String Quartet, remaining with that organization until it was disbanded. He then took up teaching in London and New York. Recently, with the resignation of Gera de Kresz as leader of the Hart House String Quartet, Milton Blackstone and Harry Arn Adaskin set out to find a new leader. After much persuasion they prevailed upon James Levey, who had given up public appearances in favour of teaching, to accept the position of leader and first violinist. The Convocation Hall program will be played the following night, Saturday, November 30, at Hart House Theatre.

JUNIOR INTERFACULTY SWIMMING MEET TO-NIGHT

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

Vic Seniors and U.C. Seniors will fight it out tonight in the first of the semi-final basketball games. They are playing at six o'clock in the O.C.E. gym, and we are not predicting who will come out on top. Both teams have experienced players, both have plenty of speed, and both have some crack forwards. U.C. are lucky in that they have two intercollegiate players, but the Vic defence should be strong enough to check Kay Brown and Billy McGarry will have to work hard to keep Maisie Cowan or Erna Laing from scoring. From a spectators' point of view, the hour set for the game is not very convenient, but it will be a good game to watch, and we advise you to try and see it.

The baseball squads are still full of enthusiasm. The Medley team defeated St. Mike's 17-11 yesterday and the game was run in what we consider a very generous and non-partisan spirit. Medley had only five girls out, and St. Mike's seven, so they divided up the teams, and had a grand time. Medley are not really in the series, but are playing just for fun, which leaves Vic and St. Mike's as the only real contestants. In the game last week between these two teams, Vic were the winners, but their next encounter may have a reverse result.

Jean Atkinson wishes us to announce that the University Women's Athletic Association is selling tickets for the Yale-Varsity hockey game on December 12, and any profits which ensue will be given to the Association. The price of these is fifty cents, which is the same as the general admission, but for these tickets you will get a much better seat. So if you are planning to see the game, be a little Girl Guide and buy one of these tickets, and help the Association to make a little money.

The St. Hilda's Seniors are not letting the thought of their six victories in their group go to their heads, and have arranged to play Occupational Therapy tonight at seven o'clock in the O.C.E. gym, in an exhibition game. The Therapists have a very good team, as we've told you before, and so far the Saints have not met a team that shoots in quite the way they do. The St. Hilda's defence may learn a lot, in their attempts to check Ruth Carbyle.

SWIMMERS AND OIVERS READY FOR SWIM MEET

Trinity and Victoria Favoured with Other Faculties Unknown

Swimmers and divers from the various colleges and faculties are lined up in readiness for the junior interfaculty meet tonight. A short, snappy rehearsal of starts and turns, last night, loosened up the swimmers for tonight's splashing and swallowing contest.

Right now, Trinity and Victoria are the outstanding favourites, while U.C. also has potent possibilities. Meds and S.P.S. are rather unknown quantities. Events are provided for breast-stroke, back-stroke and free-style. There are two relays, one a medley, back, breast and free style swimmers; the other is a straight free style, 200 yard relay.

Free style races are 50 yards, 100 yards and the quarter mile; back stroke is 100 yards and the breast stroke 200. The meet will be held in Hart House pool at 8 o'clock. There will be no admission charge. Men only will be admitted as spectators.

Admission Free

Attention is drawn to the fact that there will be no admission charge at the Junior Interfaculty meet tonight. The swimming is scheduled to start at 8 p.m. sharp. Men only will be admitted.

JR. MEDS OUTSLASH IRISH LACROSSERS

Medicos Run Wild in Fourth Quarter when Gaels Weaken

FINAL SCORE IS 10-4

In a lacrosse game played in the upper gym last night Jr. Meds relegated St. Mike's to the cellar. The teams started slow and at the end of the first quarter the score stood at 2-1 for the Galloping Gaels.

In the second quarter St. Mike's put on the pressure when White of Meds was penalized for slashing and McGlynn made it 3-1 for the Irish. Ker, for the Doctors netted one to make it 3-2. Finan's rush near the end of the period put St. Mike's ahead 4-2.

After the third quarter the embryo doctors became aroused and St. Mike's did not score again. Ker, Boyd and Metz scored, making it 5-4 for the medical men as the period ended. Meds ran the Irish dizzy in the last period to score five goals and make it decisive.

For Meds, Ker and Boyd ran wild to score four goals each; Metz made a very creditable showing, scoring two goals. St. Mike's outstanding men were McGlynn and Finan, who scored all the Irish goals between them. Dolan's brilliance in goal prevented a larger score for Meds.

Jr. Meds: Cowan, Ker, White, Boyd, Metzler; subs, Starr, Cash, McGoe, Newman.

St. Mike's: Dolan, Finan, Marling, Reid, Belanger; subs, McGlynn and Byrnes.

MARGARET KINNEY ADDRESSES S.C.M.

Purpose of 12th Quadrennial Convention Outlined by National Secretary

"REVOLUTION IS OFF"

"The revolution is off," said Miss Margaret Kinney, National Secretary of the Christian Movement in Canada, "and now we must settle down to plain plodding." Then Miss Kinney outlined the purpose of the Twelfth Quadrennial Convention, which is to discover the real place of the church in the world order.

"It is obvious now that no great social upheaval, which we had rather expected, is going to take place, especially since the last election in Canada proved that the radicals are making little headway. This has not resulted in the chaos that some people expected. Rather the tenacity of expectation has been replaced by a certain quietness. This settling down requires our total energies as expressed in the church."

"The place of the church in the world order is not any figment of the imagination since it is the concern of all leading scholars not only in Canada and United States but also in Europe and the Orient. This is evidenced by the speakers of the Quadrennial Convention, which is to be held in Indianapolis during the Christmas vacation under the auspices of the Students' Volunteer Movement. The Archbishop of York, one of the foremost Christian statesmen in the world, will lead the convention. Guest speakers include Dr. Koo, Mr. Kagawa, author of "Christ in Japan", Dr. Richard Roberts, Moderator of the United Church in Canada.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crocker

There were only about five hundred hockey fans up at Ross Workman's Arena last night but you'd never know it if you judged by the cheering and shouting. It seems that there were quite a few Schoolmen and Medicals present and this made the game a success—a loud success anyway. It looks as though the correct formula for a Varsity cheering section is made up of a certain number of Engineers, Medicals plus a mixture of students of other faculties. The first two ingredients seem to be essential if the cheers are to have much force. What we are trying to say is that the student hockey fans are whooping it up this year. With the rooting section behind them to urge them on Bailey's Blues turn it on in delightful fashion.

Although Ace Bailey's lads have yet to register a win this year we're not giving up hope. The final score last night was 7-5 for the Dukes and although the Dukes deserved their win they certainly had their anxious moments. Five goals against a strong aggressive and speedy team like the Dukes constitute a good night's work for any team. With a little more luck around the nets the Blues might have earned a tie if not a victory for their performance.

Last night's encounter certainly gave the fans plenty about which to cheer. Aside from the rough stuff which always brought loud yells there were plenty of beautifully executed goals. The last goal of the game was a pretty effort. Jimmy MacPherson made a smart pass and from the corner to Bruce Charles, who circled the prostrate Marsh to score Varsity's fifth and final counter. A few more plays of this sort and the Blues will go places in the standing of the eastern group of the Senior O.H.A. At times the Blues looked just as good as their bigger rivals and at times they looked like—well, they were terrible. We've never seen a team that could go to pieces so fast nor recover so quickly as do the Blues. It is during these momentary lapses when Shipman gets no protection at all that their rivals score most of their goals. Bailey's lads have some fine passing plays and when they follow his plans they constitute threats. However, when they insist upon trying their own formations as they often do it is just too bad for words. There wasn't much of this solo master-minding on the ice last night. That accounts for the five goals. When Bailey is able to get the boys to forget their own ideas and use his, wins should come along quite regularly.

Tonight the annual junior interfaculty swimming meet will get underway. The meet always gives one a line on future Varsity stars and for this reason every individual effort is carefully watched. Freshmen and students who have never won an event in a previous interfaculty meet are eligible for competition. While speaking of swimming we'd just like to mention that the swimming clubs of Toronto and Oshawa are planning a big dance to be held this Friday at the Royal York Hotel. The dance is open to the public. Tickets may be obtained at the Athletic Office or from any swimming club.

The first of the interfaculty soccer finals is scheduled for 1.30 this afternoon with the second game listed for Saturday. As yet it is doubtful whether today's game will be played due to the big doings at Convocation Hall this afternoon. Dents will oppose Victoria for the Arts Faculty Cup in this series and if the players live up to advance notices the final series should be worth watching. The Dents promise to get revenge for the Mulock Cup defeat while the Scarlet and Gold are out to score a double.

Waterpolo made its first splash of the season at Hart House last night when Varsity scored a tie in the senior event and a win in the junior game. The seniors tied Broadview Y at 5-5 while the juniors registered an 8-1 victory over the Toronto Police swimmers. Comforth played extremely well for the Y squad while Kingsburg, Twibble, Stratton and Beatty played well for Varsity's senior team. The junior game although much slower than the second encounter was a fairly good exhibition of waterpolo.

Aria—Prologue to "Pagliacci".
Chamade—Concerto for flute and orchestra.

Solo Flute, Walter Whitaker
Wagner—"Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla" from "The Ringgold".
Rimski-Korsakov—Symphonic Suite "Scheherazade".

Sir Ernest MacMillan will conduct the orchestra.

Last night the Toronto Symphony Orchestra had as its guest artist William Primrose, formerly viola soloist of the London String Quartet, which disbanded one year ago. The program, included a great variety of composers both classical and modern, and brought to the audience some of their lesser known works.

Sir Ernest MacMillan opened the program with Handel's Concerto in B Minor. Mr. Primrose as soloist displayed from the first an admirable self-confidence, although he was at all times both stiff and formal. The presentation of the Concerto in three movements marks an increased interest in Handel as a composer of concertos rather than of oratorios. The figured bass was an excellent accompaniment to the flutes, bassoons and strings.

The Mozart Symphony in G Minor which completed the first half of the program was rendered with remarkable verve and a majesty Olympian in character and mingled with the tragic. The melancholy note of the first movement allegro molto was changed in the second andante to a tone more consolatory. They never permitted the piece to drop below the level at which it began but rather sustained it to the end. The last two movements, minuet and finale, fail to drown out the melancholy sorrow although ending in wild merriment and glee.

Smetana's Ultrava was a Symphonic Poem in descriptive style. It depicts two rivers in their origin, slow and trickling, their junction in a wild rush in which the character of each is portrayed alternately until they mingle in a turbulent flowing river.

Butterworth's "Rhapsody, A Shropshire Lad", was based on the theme of a poem by A. B. Housman. It lacked the simplicity and clarity of Housman's poetry but it was intense and moving.

The Romance from Suite for Viola and Orchestra by B. J. Dale was frankly sentimental in tone and showed a remarkable excellence in construction. Mr. Primrose played to an enthusiastic audience, and in response gave a minor suite from Bach as an encore.

Richard Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks closed the program. This grotesque piece portrayed a humour wrought by constant contrast between the serious and the light. The element of surprise predominated throughout and sustained interest.

tion Day", of the show.
The motif of the entire production is suggested by high spots in a year at school. In the course of the show, Mr. Rae, Bernie Shaffer and the chorus sing everything from the ultra rhythmic "I've Got a Date Bureau Date", written by Mr. Rae, to opera, slightly jazzed and parodied. The Mirsky and the Ferris twins have a smart dance and there is a routine in the "Meet Me at the Masquerade" number, in which eight dance teams are featured.

There's a brief scene in which Court Benson turns on the dramatics. The Gail Patrick girl, who turns out to be Joyce Arnold, scores in the Date Bureau sequence. A fellow named Hart Buck does strange things in a clever manner. The big shots of the campus are satirized in an amusing sequence. And through it all is Saul Rae, giving directions, singing, setting a speedy tempo and in general, behaving very much like Nancy Pyper at dress rehearsal. And he gets results.

This year's Follies is filled with innovations. Girls are in the cast for the first time, almost all of the songs were written by either Mr. Rae or Frank Beer, sets are designed by Alan Jarvis, and despite the fact that the whole show is original, it has received professional coaching. The show has been in rehearsal for six weeks. And if yesterday's rehearsal is any indication, it looks like the best U.C. Follies so far.

GOULD FINDS CD-EDS AS FAIR AS IN U.B.C.

Gould discerned an element of puritanism in the east in regard to education. "You do not seem to achieve the true end of co-education in the east," he said. "In the west we are far more liberal in our attitude towards the matter."

He expressed amazement that co-eds in residence were restricted by regulations concerning how late they can stay out in the evening. "The only thing we have to contend against in U.B.C. is irate fathers and mothers," he commented.

"And what about the famous tea dances at the U.B.C.," we asked, having in mind the laudatory remarks of Sidney Hermant, B.A., concerning their excellence at the Vancouver university and the amazing statement that they do not exist at the University of Toronto.

"Mr. Hermant was probably referring to what we call 'depression dances'," commented the eloquent Mr. Gould. "On week-day afternoons we sometimes have dances for three hours but no food or drinks are served. The charge is usually 15 cents and I am glad Mr. Hermant enjoyed the affair."

its will upon the outlying parts." Present as one of the guest speakers was J. R. Gould, of the University of British Columbia. Speaking in favour of the motion he catiched the late Bennett government as "a sort of illegitimate dictatorship". Easily the outstanding speaker of the evening, Mr. Gould outlined the tariff policy of the Liberal party as one of compromise. "Canada is composed of two irreconcilable houses," he said, "the industrial east requiring tariffs, and the west prospering only under a policy of free trade. But tariffs are unfortunately federal. Therefore the only solution is a middle-tariff policy—the policy of the Liberal party."

In further criticizing the Bennett regime, the same speaker referred to a personal visit in the relief camps of British Columbia. He said, "the meals are not fit for human consumption, and the work required of the men is eight hours of hard work on the Caribou Canyon highway. For the type of work which is chosen as punishment for criminals, these men receive twenty cents per day." The administration was headed by professional peace-time soldiers, "one of the lowest forms of human beings in existence", who treated the men as a rabble mob.

Speakers against the motion were led by J. L. Jeffrey of Trinity College. With true Conservative fervour he condoned the Bennett policies as designed to "lend prestige to our foreign policy, through the maintenance of a strong central government." He praised the character and executive ability of Mr. Bennett, and characterized Mr. King as a weak and inefficient leader. In the matter of the recent Canada-U.S.A. trade agreement, Mr. King "carried the ball over the line after Mr. Bennett did the ground work." He further scored Mr. King's pre-depression policy as one of unwarranted capital expansion and social lassitude.

M. A. Western, a guest speaker from the University of Saskatchewan, spoke against the motion, stressing the importance of maintaining a balance between East and West within tariff walls. He created a sensation in the House by declaring himself in favour of some form of socialism in the face of the failure of capitalism to reform the social order.

Outstanding among the undergraduates who spoke from the floor were M. Mirsky and J. L. Graham. The former termed the speech of J. R. Gould as a piece of "good prime western beefing", and proceeded to elaborate on the need for trade between east and west.

Further support for the motion came from Paul Martin, Liberal M.P. for East Essex and a graduate of the University of Toronto. "We of the Liberal party," he said, "believe that there is a common contribution to be made by all. On Oct. 14 one man ceased to govern and several took his place."

thing but transportation and neither the force nor the action that transports. There was only one mover in the world, God, and He was immutable.

"But, bad metaphysics do not pay, even in science," said Dr. Gilson. "Because Descartes had not grasped such notions as force, form or motion, his physical laws were mistaken, and at the end of sixty years they were no longer believed in, even on the continent."

Dr. Gilson went on to consider the development of the Cartesian principles in the hands of Descartes' disciples. In Hume, who derived many of his ideas from Descartes and Malebranche, the Cartesian cycle ended, when he announced the discovery that "all our reasonings concerning cause and effect are derived from nothing but custom." "It was a true cycle," concluded Dr. Gilson, "for it found its end in its very beginning—skepticism. Montaigne's scepticism had started the whole movement, while the scepticism of Hume was to bring it to an end."

His Excellency plans to spend the entire day on the campus. As this is primarily a University function all lectures and labs will be called off at 3 o'clock, to give every student a chance to see the arrival of the Governor-General and his party, even though only a few can be admitted to the Hall. Doors will be opened at 2.45 and the ceremony will begin promptly at 3.15.

It will be Lord Tweedsmuir's first chance to see our University life at close range, and the students seem determined to produce a good impression.

HERE are the advantages that make Dominion Ring Books longer lasting, more convenient to use and better looking—

Steel Hinges, anchored right into the leather cover, not only make the book flat-opening for easy writing, but prolong its life at the point where ordinary books wear out first.

Fibre Back, coloured and grained to match the leather, prevents scuffing.

Flattened Steel Rings have greater capacity and are easier on punched sheets. Available in 3 or 7 rings.

Yet with all these advantages Dominion Steel Hinge Equipment costs no more than ordinary ring books.

DUKES DEFEAT BLUES IN ROUGH GAME

back fighting even after two Toronto Duke's counters in the final period, which were scored while Duke's men were inside the goal crease, but their efforts proved fruitless. The fast-breaking rushes of Lenahan, who was given a rough ride all night, coupled by the passing combination of McElquham, McClelland and Charles, gave the Blues their scoring punch, ably assisted by MacPherson, while "Shorty" Robinson's three goals in the second period were the best plays for the Dukes. With twelve goals scored by both squads, five in both the second and third periods and two in the first, the game had plenty of punch.

The opening gong saw the stellar Toronto Dukes aggregation proceed to demonstrate some fancy golf shots on the Varsity nets, none of which were very dangerous, while the harassed Blue defence worked hard to check the Dukes' forward line, and on a typical rush by O'Brien and Oliver, Jimmie MacPherson intercepted the pass and raced down centre ice to score the first goal of the night, by rifling the shot onto Marsh's pads from which the disc bounded into the net. O'Brien and Grivel combined a minute later to beat Shipman, while Driscoll and Charles were serving penalties. A battle royal ensued, with forensic dashes made by both sides, the Dukes' defence crushing the Varsity attacks with hard checks and Robinson drew a major for trying to cut down McClelland.

The middle spasm saw Varsity pressing their advantage and although he was continually roughed "Ace" Lenahan took a perfect pass from McClelland to put the Blues ahead after a minute of play. Bounding out of the penalty box Robinson came on the ice to tie the count on a brilliant solo rush, and during a short Varsity lapse crashed two more home past Shipman, who had no chance to save. Again play became rough and Bowman was sent off for hooking Ripley, and on a passing play from McClelland, Ripley beat "Hawse" Marsh. Although Lenahan and Ripley led some great rushes the count remained the same, with the Dukes maintaining a one-goal margin.

Coming out into the last stanza, Grivel and Charles mixed it up on the boards and both were penalized and it was not long before Grant took a perfect chance from Kitchen to score. Melec followed upon melec and the Toronto Dukes capitalized on the breaks to add two more goals scored from the sticks of O'Brien and Grivel, and on each occasion Dukes men were sprawled within the goal crease to give the Toronto sextet a large margin. Garney Large, a regular thorn in the side of the Varsity forwards, sloughed Ripley and was given a major penalty for "unkind remarks" to the referee and the Blues took the break, to pierce the rugged Duke defence for another counter by McElquham, taking the pass from McClelland. Seconds later Bruce Charles again scored for Varsity on a rush of Jimmie MacPherson. Despite the herculean efforts of the Varsity sextet the count remained the same until the final gong finding the score Dukes 7—University of Toronto 5.

Serious Plays Attract Crowds

Nancy Pyper Claims that Tragedy is Just as Popular as Comedy

"To me the theatre is a university and the great dramatists are its professors," declared Nancy Pyper, addressing the Women's Art Association yesterday afternoon.

Refuting the charge of "artiness" so often levelled against the Little Theatre, the speaker declared that the first aim of the amateur theatre, as of the professional, is to entertain, and that in any dramatic group the time and talent of the members should be directed towards holding the interest of their audience.

Mrs. Pyper was vehement in her denial that serious plays are poor box office. "Need entertainment be synonymous with ineffectuality?" she demanded. "The appeal of tragedy is as wide or even wider than that of comedy."

Come and Take 'em For a Ride Our Girlies Aren't Dissatisfied

"Poor girl, she lives in residence," says the freer part of this great world. "We never use up all our 12.30 leaves," says one of Victoria's fair captives.

"I have been able to go out any night I wanted to," says a St. Joseph's damsel.

So what! The Varsity undertook to ferret out the awful truth about the poor girls hedged in by residence rules, and this is what it found. They didn't seem to be suffering much, but they would print more of the specific information disclosed for the benefit of the young men who may be interested.

If you want to take a St. Hilda's girl to a formal dance, you must have her in by 1 a.m., while St. Joseph's must be in by 12.30. You may keep a young lady from Whitney Hall until 12.30 (unless she is saving up her late leaves for someone else in which case she may remain until 1.30 or 12.30, de-

Halliburton Tells of Dining With His Friend H. Selassie

Adventurer Recounts Many Adventures to Crowd at Massey Hall

WANTED TO WRITE

Tells of Swimming through the Panama Canal, Also Hellespont

Mr. Richard Halliburton, renowned author and traveller, recounted two of his latest adventures to a large audience at Massey Hall last night. He spoke of travels in Ethiopia, and of dining with Haile Selassie, and of how he was the only man able to discover who assassinated the last of the Russian royals; namely, the Romanoffs.

Mr. Halliburton is thirty-five years of age, and in his rambles has encountered pirates and lions, has been imprisoned at Gibraltar, spent a summer on Devil's Island, et al. He stated that in his talk he was endeavouring to remove his audience as far as possible from Toronto, "Although," he added, "I have seen much funnier towns."

In an interview with The Varsity Mr. Halliburton told that he was a graduate of Princeton University, at Princeton, N.J. During his undergraduate days he was editor of the Princeton undergraduate newspaper. Previous to that he was editor of his high school publications. When asked if he had always wanted to travel, Mr. Halliburton replied that he had not wanted to travel so much as to write, and travel was (Continued on Page 4)

PHILOSOPHY STAFF HOLD CONVENTION

Representatives of Various Canadian Colleges to Attend Meeting

VISITORS ADMITTED

"We are not attempting to attract a large audience, because the Philosophy Convention is not a convention in any official sense," said Professor G. S. Brett, when questioned as to the program of the Philosophy Convention which meets here on Friday and Saturday. Professor Brett explained that the convention was essentially a private and informal meeting for the purpose of discussion, taking place every year by arrangement with the Philosophy staff at Queen's and McGill. It is not open to the public, but visitors, members of the staff and undergraduates, will be admitted if they apply for permission to attend.

The convention has no set program of speakers; one representative from (Continued on Page 4)

CHINESE ART REVEALS ANIMAL HUSBANDRY OF SHANG YIN PERIOD

A history of the Shan Yin dynasty, one of the oldest Chinese families, was traced briefly Tuesday at the Ontario Museum by Professor W. C. White in his lecture on the art of that period.

The Shan Yin were the first dynasty of which there are authentic records, and their period includes 1766 to 1112 B.C. The cultural centre was the province of Honan in Central China. At present excavation is going on in Honan to discover the exact site of the court. These ancient Chinese kept records of the tours of inspection, weather, wars, famine, hunting and also genealogical tables. The inscriptions were carved or brush-painted on slabs of stone or bone. From these records can be gathered the facts that the government of Honan was patriarchal, that they believed in one supreme heavenly ruler and that ancestor worship was practised by all classes.

One of their main occupations was animal husbandry and its influence is shown in the animal motifs of the contemporary art. Highly stylized figures of elephants, tigers, eagles and others were much used to decorate their graceful wine jars and knife handles.

It is a curious fact that in later periods the art became more naturalistic, which is quite the reverse of the usual movement from naturalism to stylism found in other early cultures.

SLUM CLEARANCE BEING HINDERED SAYS SIMPSON

Order-in-Council 'Insufficient for Compulsory Demolition of Slum Buildings'

WAITING FOR LEGISLATION

That serious legal and financial difficulties have been standing in the way of any concrete action by the city of Toronto on the slum clearing and housing question was the claim of Mayor James Simpson in his talk in Hart House Music Room yesterday. He also touched on the fifteen million dollar sewage disposal plant and the general problem of sewage disposal in the city.

"Every problem involving a great expenditure of money must be approached with cautiousness," stated his worship, pointing out that Toronto's assessment has been cut thirty-three million dollars in the past few years, and that since the city has funded a large part of its relief costs, the limit to its borrowing power is rapidly being reached.

Toronto therefore has to depend on the provincial and federal governments but its hopes of aid from these two sources have not been realized. The federal government's legislation simply aids private builders by enabling them to borrow money at lower interest rates. Little help can be expected from the province, moreover, till the next session of the legislature. Legislation must be obtained from (Continued on Page 4)

REGULATE LIVES ACCORDING TO BIBLE ADVISES SPEAKER

"Do not read the Bible as you would a newspaper," urged Mr. C. Stacey Woods, as he addressed the members of the T.F.C.C.U. at their weekly meeting last night, "rather let the Bible influence and mould your lives." The subject of Mr. Woods' talk was "Bible Reading" and he urged his listeners to read "God's word" every day, not only to familiarize themselves with its text but to draw from it inspiration and guidance.

"The Bible is not just another book," Mr. Woods went on to say, "it is the living word of God and above all must be obeyed." The Bible was described by the speaker as "a progressive revelation of God to man" and one of the members expressed the thought that it was both "human and divine".

Invitation From Rotarians

On next Friday, November 29th, the regular luncheon meeting of the Rotary Club of Toronto will be devoted to International Service. The Rotary Club is inviting all male students of the University from other countries than Canada to be present as its guests. Except for guests representing different countries, invited to the head table, each student guest will be looked after by an individual member of the Rotary Club. Students and Rotarians will assemble at 12.15 p.m. in Parlor "B" adjoining the concert hall of the Royal York Hotel. It is hoped that Dr. Cody will be present. The speaker of the occasion will be Mr. Sam Botsford of Buffalo, New York, an outstanding Rotarian and a leader in the development of better international relations. The meeting will adjourn before 2 o'clock, probably at 1.45.

Lord Tweedsmuir Says University Students Guard Man-kind's Culture

APPROVED BY PRESS

By Ross Munro

In a strangely contrasting atmosphere of pedagogical dignity and undergraduate exuberance, His Excellency Lord Tweedsmuir received an honorary degree of doctor of laws from the University of Toronto at Convocation Hall yesterday. With galleries packed with students and University faculty members and officials assembled on the dais, President Cody presented Lord Tweedsmuir for his degree and Chancellor Mulock conferred it. The former John Buchan just smoothed his hair with his hand and smiled mildly.

Several times during the convocation the "Toronto" yell swept through the Hall and the singing of the Blue and White as the Governor-General was leaving the dais following his address climaxed the vocal welcome of the undergraduates to the new representative of the King.

It was one of the most unique and colourful convocations ever to take place at this University. The Governor-General enrobed in the Chancellor's office and the procession led by the Beadle moved from Simcoe Hall to Convocation Hall. Lord Tweedsmuir wore the same crimson gown which the (Continued on Page 4)

Three S.P.S. men were given penalties for offside playing.

VICTORIA COLLEGE DEFEATS DENTS IN FIRST GAME OF FINALS

WATER-POLO TEAM EARNES SUPPORT OF STUOENT BODY

Within a few days now, McGill University will be bringing down a water-polo team for the purpose of running off with the Intercollegiate water-polo championship.

Whether or not they can do that depends entirely on a group of valiant men who have been wholeheartedly throwing themselves into the Hart House pool and the water-polo practices for the past few weeks.

Few sports require the conditioning which water-polo does. To produce a championship team is a work of no mean dimensions. The Blue and White team this year has had the advantage of very competent coaching—even more so than in former years. Whether or not they can come through as a winning team, depends in a large measure upon the amount of support given them by the students.

For the second time within the space of a week a Victoria team is battling it out with Dents for an interfaculty championship. Yesterday afternoon the Scarlet and Gold soccer team defeated Dents 1-0 in the first game of a two-game series, goals to count on the practice.

Brilliant plays by both teams featured the game which kept enthusiasts on edge throughout. At times Dents exhibited a slight advantage in passing tactics although on the whole the Victoria men displayed a superiority in checking and individual plays which gave them an early lead and allowed them to maintain it to the end.

The opening half began with a series of whirling attacks by both teams and play moved quickly. Mackie and Staple-

Another Graduate

Yesterday afternoon another name was added to the long list of graduates of the University of Toronto. Before a cheering audience of staff and students Sir William Mulock conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon the new Governor-General of Canada in a colourful and impressive ceremony that will remain long in the memories of those fortunate enough to see it.

In the address he delivered yesterday Lord Tweedsmuir proved himself a worthy successor to the many distinguished men who have preceded him in his office. It was the speech of a literary man and of a statesman with a definite political ideal. Democracy for him finds its true home in the University where there is and should be complete freedom of thought.

It is encouraging to the young people of Canada to have as Governor-General a man who has such faith in youth as has Lord Tweedsmuir, a man who believes that youth should speak, even though it be wrong, rather than repeat ideas of recognized merits, but developed by others. Criticism is a sign of life even if it is not entirely sound.

The appointment of a famous writer to this position is certain to give an impetus to Canadian letters. Perhaps we will now make an effort to discover our own genius instead of forcing our authors to go to another country for recognition.

There is no doubt of Lord Tweedsmuir's popularity in the country which is to be his home for the next four years. The crowds who stood in the pouring rain to see his departure from Convocation Hall indicate the regard and esteem which he already commands in the hearts of Canadians.

Last Rugby Remarks

Before football is entirely forgotten we would like to have one last word on the subject. The outstanding event of the year, and the most unsatisfactory, was the defeat of the Varsity team in the play-off game with Queen's. For the efforts of the Tricolour team turned in on that occasion, they must be congratulated. However, without appearing to be making alibis there is much to be said against the entire system, and some light thrown on the probable reason for the defeat of the Blues.

Briefly the situation is this. Queen's were beaten twice this season by teams which were beaten by Varsity. Balmby Beach and McGill both defeated the Kingston squad. Varsity won from both these clubs. Varsity played Queen's twice in their scheduled series, and were not defeated. Then in the third game the Blue team were shaded by a matter of two points and the intercollegiate title went to Kingston. This certainly does not look like an ideal situation.

In the playoff game itself the odds were against the Toronto team winning. Having defeated Queen's once and tied them once, and having completed the season undefeated they were forced into a playoff with a team which had lost two games. Their scoring record against the opposing teams was far superior to Queen's. Then with this behind them they faced a sudden death contest for the title. Obviously it was a case of nothing to lose and everything to win for Queen's. A chance to loaf for the season and atone in the final game. That vague term applied to athletes and known as "psychology" was certainly all in favour of Queen's. This is not an alibi, merely a statement of fact which every sportsman will recognize.

Having won the intercollegiate title Queen's then challenged for the Dominion playdowns. There is nothing objectionable in that. But when the fact that when the intercollegiate playoff system was inaugurated it was specified that this playoff should replace the C.R.U. playdowns, and to all intents and purposes the I.C.U. had withdrawn from the C.R.U. (as a matter of fact they definitely had) Queen's position in the situation appears to be a problem which would stand clearing up. Queen's voted for the playoff system with full knowledge that it presupposed withdrawing from the C.R.U., yet having won the playoff they blandly continued. No one can blame the players for wanting to go as far as possible in the game, but at the same time disregard for the rules which they were instrumental in making is a poor tribute to their sportsmanship.

Had they been the best intercollegiate union had to offer the picture would have been slightly changed. But their record was decidedly inferior to that of Varsity. And their excursion into the C.R.U. field resulted in a humiliating defeat. In fact it was a route. They were beaten by 40 points. While in fairness to the Queen's team we must admit that they were far from their best at Hamilton a difference of 40 points between the intercollegiate champions and the interprovincial champions, cannot do otherwise than weaken the prestige of the intercollegiate union.

For their achievements the Queen's team deserves the highest praise. But before embarking on another season the intercollegiate union would do well to reconsider the system which has led to the present unpleasant situation. Should the season's record not be of more value in selecting a challenger than the result of a single game? Is it fair to have a team which has been beaten three times during a season, win one game from an undefeated team which has faced the same opposition, and then be considered champions? Certainly the assumption that it is has precipitated disastrous results.

Carnegie Anniversary

The centenary birthday of one of the world's most noted philanthropists, Andrew Carnegie, will be observed in the United States and abroad November 25, 26, and 27.

Andrew Carnegie was born November 25, 1835, in Dunfermline, Scotland. He accumulated during the first part of his life one of the world's largest fortunes, and during the last part succeeded in giving most of it away, so that he died a comparatively poor man. His grants to educational institutions have aggregated approximately $80,000,000, in addition to his public library expenditures, which were in excess of $60,000,000.

In the instances of the college appropriations, the money was used for endowment, buildings and various projects in the fields of art and library. By far the largest part of the many millions Andrew Carnegie gave away during his lifetime was devoted to education and scientific research.

Carnegie's interest in education is shown by the following statement, which with other quotations from his writings is being displayed during the centenary observance by Carnegie libraries throughout the English-speaking world:

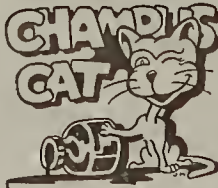

"Upon no foundation but that of popular education can man erect the structure of an enduring civilization. This is the basis of all stability, and underlies all progress. Without it, the State architect builds in vain." —The Daily Texan.

Thinkers vs. Numbers

Is there really a need for a university with an annual enrolment of 10,000? History has taught us that the greatest things have been accomplished by individuals who were thinkers. Full individual growth, special development and rounded mental effort demand room, separation from crowds, self-examination and the self-reliance which solitude gives.

Constant craving for indiscriminate company is a sure sign of mental weakness for any student. The Greater University program has never listed any advantages that a 10,000 enrolment would bring.

What benefit would come from having larger buildings and investing millions more dollars? The university is an institution to train thinkers, not a place to house the population of our state. We don't need higher enrolments. We need an opportunity to develop thinkers.—Oklahoma Daily.

I couldn't take her to Yonge and Slater, so I took her to Bathurst and Bloor West.

C-C

"Helpful" tackled that one up on the notice board for us, and he certainly is. It is the occasional contribution like this that helps to make up for certain others which we receive in larger quantities. However, after reading yesterday's feature on the debate we realize things might be worse. At least Mr. Marshall doesn't send us any of his poetry.

C-C

Friend "Helpful" also called our attention to the celebrations of the 2000th anniversary of Horace which are being planned for Monday Dec. 9th, and after perusing the blatantly enthusiastic advance in yesterday's paper, tucked away on page 3, we believe that we should issue a word of warning at this time.

While yet we are able to take a calm and common sense view of the matter, let us resolve to make this a safe and sane Horatian Bimillennial Year. Let us not have our children maimed and wounded by dangerous fireworks displays during the celebrations. Let us not have our classical professors regretting on Dec. 10th their overindulgence in toasts to the immortal Roman bard.

We trust that the University authorities responsible for the local celebrations will take care to see that the true spirit of this solemn event is kept predominant. No fireworks, no binging, —rather let a quiet evening spent browsing around in the subterranean and dust-drifted stacks of the Library in search of stray Horatian first-editions be the chosen manner of recognizing this occasion.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

This week the Dramatic Club of the University College Alumnae Association present "Ladies in Waiting" by Cyril Campton. The fact that this play was presented by an entirely feminine cast made its choice a wise one. In fact to keep any tempo at all it frequently relied solely upon the interest of the audience as to the identity of the murderers. And even when this was revealed it comes too late, for by the time honoured method of eliminating those most suspected a choice lies between two aged and respectable servants and an equally innocent looking character, who was, sure enough, guilty.

One of the same aged servants aforementioned, played by Margaret Tytler, carried off what honours there were in the line of acting. Hers was a character part, and a difficult one, which was thoroughly convincing in its small way. Una Verity, played by Margaret Donald, was, on the whole, done rather well. As a matter of fact young woman confronted by a horrible situation she is good until she is called upon to drop the matter of factness.

The voices of a feminine east are rather a problem. Three acts of nine females in various degrees of excitement and hence of shrillness, are apt to make one long for a certain alternating bass, purely by way of variety. The play was presented Tuesday night under the auspices of the Kappa Alpha Theta fraternity. Tonight will be the only open performance.

Let's Go Places

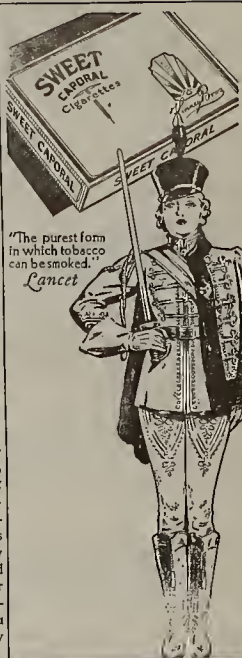

A bunch of the folks were folk-dancing at the Social Science party a week ago last night in the Women's Union, and although that form of amusement sounds a little silly on paper to us modern sophisticated youngsters, it was really quite all right. The dancing was under the guidance and command of Mr. Dick Jones, assisted by Arch Crossley at the piano, and was delightfully violent and intricate. After completing a turn or two of some of those foreign things which the sturdy European peasants do, a glow of self-satisfaction which comes only from doing difficult things steals over the athletic participant.

Here is no sport for sissies who want to stick around in the corner and whisper sweet nothings into ladies' ears; you can't hang on to one girl long enough to get used to her because some guy always hastens at you, ducking and bowing and folk-dancing and running away with your partner.

A skit in which several girls imitated professors by smoking pipes, was put on for those who were in the know about the Social Science faculty, and some very good food was served, after which the party degenerated into ordinary walk-around dancing where you keep the girl you came with. A very fine thing altogether.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George Voir

Yesterday the Scarlet and Gold served definite notice that they are out to eclipse their 1934 standing of four interfaculty championships when the Victoria soccer team defeated Dents 1-0 in the first of a two-game series, goals to count, for the title. The winners reserved their one-goal lead, keeping the ball in their opponents' end for the greater part of the hour. The College Street students fielded a strong defence and at times showed a nice passing attack but couldn't beat Dyke for the tying counter.

Begins to look like the Queen's Park Arts college is a jinx to the Dentals. Last week they upset the dope by defeating Gus Greco's champion Garnet and Grey squad for the Mulock Cup.

A. Cozzi, outstanding softball player who performed for Copland's as utility man this summer, has proven that he is useful on more than a ball diamond. Although never having played lacrosse he donned the pads and played goal for O.C.E. recently. He roared his territory exceptionally well and was called on to make many sensational saves. O.C.E. won 12-8.

The Sarnia-Hamilton fixture at the Stadium this Saturday may possibly be Toronto's last glimpse of football this season and since it promises to be a thriller a sell-out is more than just a promoter's dream. The Tigers are peeved because the game is not to be played in their own backyard. Possibly this may incite them to play the type of ball that saw them smother Queen's and if so the clockwork Sarnia outfit may need winding for the first time this year.

Reports from both squads tell us that the boys are holding regular signal practices and scrimmages. Somewhat different from the American method of grooming a team for a final game. Here in part is the practise schedule of an American university's football squad. Monday the team assembles for a chalk talk followed by a movie of their last game at which attendance is purely optional. For the next three days the squad practices signal drill and formations. Previous to the game a scout has seen the opposition in action and taken careful note of their plays. The second practice them while the firsts work out an adequate defence. Friday a loosening up practice is held but the amazing fact is that at no time is an actual scrimmage held. Tacklers practise tackling and blocking on 75 lb. dummies. It is maintained that physical condition is acquired by the time the first game is over and from then on the work is purely mental. All this goes to show how far the American game has developed as compared to our Canadian brand of football. Across the line practice begins in the middle of January.

VICTORIA COLLEGE DEFEATS DENTS

ton played strong games for Dents and were responsible for several hard drives in the Victoria end of the field.

Mac Pratt, centre forward for the Victoria battlers, drove a hard shot past Cowan for the one and only counter of the game on a fast foray by the winners. Dents opened a strong offensive which repeatedly carried them into the Victoria defence zone but good defensive play by the Arts students held them off the score sheet.

The second half saw the Scarlet and Gold have a decided edge with Simpson, Rutherford and Pratt combining on some nice passing but an obvious inability to score was more than noticeable. In the closing minutes Dents again carried play into the Victoria area but quick work by Ozzie Dykes and his shifty defence kept the score at 1-0.

Victoria: Dykes, Scott, Cooper, Sinn, Simpson, Woodsworth, Pratt, Menzies, Rutherford, Taylor, Campbell; subs, MacDonald, Pacey, Brown.
Dents: Cowan, Ballouf, H. Mason, Brown, Mickel, Weslake, Stapleton, L. Mason, Linkin, McCall, Pon; subs, Rockman, Rourke.

VICTORIA DEFEATS U.C. IN BASKETBALL GAME

Winners Carry Ten Point Lead into Second Set-to of Series

The first game of the semi-finals in the women's basketball series was played last night in the O.C.E. gym, with Vic Seniors finishing on the right side of the score, 28-18. U.C. was leading in the first quarter by one point, but Vic put on speed in an already fast game and took the lead at half time with a score of 12-9. From then on the U.C. guards were disorganized, Betty Robinson being put off for penalties, and Vic had several free shots on the basket, bringing the score up to 24-16 at three-quarter time. Throughout the game there was much battling at the ball and the referees were kept on their toes to call all the rough play. The Vic defence used their "stone wall" policy to good effect and though the U.C. forwards worked hard, they could not get near the basket. Kay Brown, in spite of a strained ankle, made good use of her chances, while Erna Lang for Vic netted a few from right under the basket.

U.C. Seniors: Kay Brown (10), Pat Petlick (5), Joan Romeyn (1), G. St. Aubin, Billy McGarry, Enor Kennedy, Betty Robinson, R. Turner, H. Dewy.
Vic Seniors: Erna Lang (13), Maisie Cowan (7), M. Leslie (8), Louise Pryor, Betty Jenkinson, Hazel Brown, Ruth Leavens.

Referee: Phyllis Griffiths, Marion Henderson.

DIVING POOR

For the third year in succession Trinity College swamped all opposition to come through and take the Junior Interfaculty Swimming Championship. Out of the eight events they managed to walk away with four firsts and one second.

Assuming the lead from the start they were never very seriously threatened; although Victoria and U.C. turned in splendid performances, their weaknesses in certain departments prevented them from becoming serious threats to the Anglican victors.

Judging from the exhibitions of certain of the new swimmers last night, the intercollegiate fixture which comes off early in the new year ought to be a spectacle worth beholding.

However, several departments are decidedly weak and certain improvements will have to be made in the diving, back stroke and quarter mile events before the "Junior" swimmers become serious intercollegiate threats.

The highlights of the meet undoubtedly were the 50 and 100 yards free style events, where close and snappy finishes kept spectators and swimmers alike in doubt until the judges' clocks decided the winners. One heat of the 50 yard event finished in what looked to be a four man tie, and the finish of the 100 yard race definitely resulted in a tie for third position, U.C. and Vic each being given 1-2 point.

A small but enthusiastic crowd greeted every effort put forth by the competitors, particularly in the relays which were very determinedly contested. Trinity College entered two teams in each of the relays, obtaining two firsts and a second out of this venture.

Results run as follows:
Medley Relay: 1. Trinity A team (A. Staples, B. Frazer, H. Kirby); 2. Trinity B team; 3. Victoria.

Vic Seniors piled up a ten point lead last night in the first of the semi-final basketball games. This will be hard for the U.C. Seniors to overcome, in the second game on Friday night, if Vic play as well as they did last night. Their defence was working beautifully, and the U.C. forwards had a hard time breaking through. Vic used all their speed to good advantage, and came from behind to lead in the score from half-time on.

The defence was the weak part on the U.C. team. With Jean Atkinson out of the play and Betty Robinson being put off the floor for 100 many fouls, the U.C. defence went to pieces, and the Vic forwards swept in on the basket, and scored a good many shots.

The next game between these two teams will be a real battle. U.C. will be on their mettle and will be out to do big things, but that ten point lead will be quite an obstacle. Ten points mean five baskets, and if the Vic stone-wall defence holds, Kay Brown, Pat Petlick and Joan Romeyn will have to work hard and fast to break through.

In the exhibition game between St. Hilda's Seniors and the Therapists, the Saints won 31-4. That looks like a decisive win, but it is partly discounted because the two best guards on the Therapy line were unable to play. Also the Therapists did not work quite so hard as they did in their group games. However, the Saints used their floor-play to good effect, and were lucky in their shots, while the Therapists were not. With regard to housing, Mayor Simpson confessed that the Board of Control has not yet approached the problem with any degree of seriousness but that much valuable data on the subject has been collected. The final scores for the various teams are proportioned fairly well; the closest race being between Victoria and U.C. Up until the last event the results looked quite doubtful, but due to the brilliant swimming of Nels Earl, who, after being fouled, came through from behind to beat out U.C. in the final relay and put Victoria firmly in second position.

The scores run: Trinity College, 30 points; Victoria, 19½; U.C., 18½; S.P.S., 9; and Meds 2.

THOUSAND STUDENTS CHEER GOV.-GENERAL

Prince of Wales and his father before him wore when they received their honorary degrees from the University of Toronto. He sat on the dais between Lieut.-Governor Bruce of Ontario and Chancellor Mulock.

Like a member of parliament academically presenting a case or an eloquent professor of political science, His Excellency addressed the assembly following the conferring of the degree, lauding the democratic principle.

"You as students at the University are guardians of the culture of mankind, and the trusteeship of democracy is a vital part of the University's duty," the Governor-General stated as he addressed himself primarily to the students, who listened intently from the galleries. "Freedom of thought and spirit is what you young men and women must most zealously preserve."

The democratic principle is imperilled today from two directions, he said. One the visitor called the "peril of the masses" which led to an inclination to think of broad classes—the workers, the proletariat, the bourgeoisie—and to generalize about them with fatal facility. The second danger was what Baron Tweedsmuir called the "peril of the machine." This tended not merely to blunt the individuality of the human masses but to leave out humanity altogether and to regard the citizen as a mere cog in a vast impersonal mechanism.

"Whenever a mechanical state has been attempted, it has always ended in disaster," he said. "In such cases all freedom of personality was lost and human beings became a disciplined collection of automata."

Referring constantly to classical literature and to works of his contemporary writers, the new Governor-General, with the grim visage which was provoked on several occasions to an almost boyish smile, eloquently set forth the case and the need of a continuation of democracy in a world beset by turmoil and trouble.

"The University of Toronto has striven to live up to the conception of James Bryce, former British ambassador at Washington, in being popular and free," Lord Tweedsmuir said. "An institution might be popular without freedom and free without being popular. The combination, however, means the attainment of the true democratic ideals—equality of social status, a high level of human sympathy and complete freedom of thought."

The mild, artistic man of letters proved himself to be a profound political thinker and the 1000 students in the gallery clapped and shouted their admiration for the academic, cultured vice-regal authority.

Dr. Cody welcomed His Excellency to the University and recalled achievements of Canada's new Governor-General. "The chorus of approval from the press on both sides of the Atlantic reflect the popularity of the appointment," said Dr. Cody. "He is a man of letters, law and insight which appeals to our slow but steady and slightly obstinate Canadian people."

Dr. Cody stated Canadians were intrigued by the title chosen by John Buchan when he was made a baron. "But it is the man behind the title whom we most admire and had he come as John Buchan he would be equally well received. He comes as a friend among friends. His almost incredible career bewilders us. He has just passed his 60th birthday—and yet what a record of achievement is his!"

The president recalled some of the Buchan's most famed characters of his novels and when he came to reminisce about the famous Richard Hannay, Lord Tweedsmuir audibly chuckled at the president's good-natured reflections.

He smiled again as the "Toronto" yell echoed up to the glass dome of the Hall as the students burst forth enthusiastically at the end of the convocation. Even the Engineers, and Trinity and Meds had their yells going strong. The inevitable Toke Oike followed the Blue and White and the more sober of the S.P.S. drinking songs enlivened the gathering before and after the formality of presenting the degree to the Governor-General.

Democracy Thru Education

In this peculiar day when the very mention of Brain Truster is enough to give some of our more righteous citizens an attack of apoplexy, it is not altogether surprising that education has lost some of its former lustre. Much of the growing dissatisfaction with social conditions have centred on a rather general indictment of education as an efficient means toward progress. The reactionaries are extremely worried about the curriculum, and think that colleges and universities should be shorn of their power unless they can teach the "right" things.

Some of this current mumbling seems to have reached the younger generation. It will probably not be reflected in the actual enrolments in colleges this fall. The feeling is nevertheless growing among many that an education possesses only a modicum of value, that college should be entered because it is "the thing to do" but that whatever is learned can be quickly forgotten. Then, too, vocational education seems to be gathering weight among those who are dissatisfied with the "impractical" nature of the average college curriculum. Vocational guidance is satisfactory so far as it goes, but the training is, at its best, limited in scope and usefulness.

In spite of its most obvious and patent faults, a college education is still invaluable to those who want it and know how to get it. To be sure, the instruction is often dead and uninspired. The courses offered for study are not tempered to the constantly changing conditions of our life. Fully 60 per cent of our graduating classes still bid farewell to education with their minds as paralyzed and air-tight as the day they entered. We are, however, very tired of hearing these criticisms, voiced continually by academic experts whose lives are spent in trying to debunk education instead of improve it. We are equally bored by the arguments of those whose experience with education dates back 30 or 40 years, and whose idea of a liberal training is the assimilation of a healthy amount of Athletic Christianity, the collection of a host of friends and the remembrance of Freshman-Sophomore riots.

Education has changed and is changing—which is one fact which some people can never appreciate. And, despite the validity of many attacks from its critics, it is improving too. A reasonable definition of an ideal college education is "one where the student develops the faculties, emotions, the intellectual powers he is going to make use of as a mature adult, and develops them by the subjects best calculated to increase those powers, regardless of whether he uses these subjects . . . in afterlife." But that does not tell the whole story, so far as we are concerned.

Today, of all times, we consider the primary purpose of education to be a proper and liberal training for citizenship, the permeation into the mind of the student of some social conscience and responsibility toward society. And if we use this as a gauge, we cannot deny that education has increased its power. This reformation, still taking place with agonizing slowness, has been attributed to that general excuse for everything—the depression. That is another half-truth. That many more people are working for their learning has unquestionably placed more emphasis on our social and economic reflexes. It has likewise brought with it a more democratic approach toward things in general.

Wealth is no longer so important in measuring a man's capabilities and general "suitability" as a companion.

But perhaps even more important in the slow revolution of college education has been the revolution, on the part of the student, to being a mere well that had to be filled with a certain amount of fact and theories, until the bestowal of a B.A. signified that the well could hold no more. A widening of outlook and an honest attempt to question everything put before him is the distinguishing mark of the new student. Consequently, it is no longer so strange to find that classroom discussions are very often extremely animated, and that professorial opinions are regarded with suspicion and often incredulity. It is an encouraging sign. It is proof that more and more people are casting aside their early prejudices, which have been fostered upon them by their parents and the particular society in which they live, and are accepting facts with a more open mind. Our leadership in many high places, in business and government, is still bankrupt. The country needs, and will continue to need in the years to come, people who are not impressed by catch-words and fetishes, who can criticize the past and plot the future—with independence of thought and action.

Let us admit that education is only about 50 per cent efficient. Let us admit at the same time that education cannot cure all our problems, or lead us to any immediate Utopia. But let us, for once and all, strengthen our resolve that it is necessary to have intelligent people who can lead the intellectual lightweights swayed by our popular demagogues and emotional press. Though some may question how well he carried out his saying, Donald Richberg never offered a truer phrase for public consumption than when he said: "When any man ventures to scoff at the use of brains in government, he should be asked to explain by what part of the human anatomy he believes human affairs should be conducted."

If political democracy is to be strengthened and if economic democracy is to come into being, surely that can come about only through the influence of a discriminating electorate and leaders who can see issues squarely. How these things can possibly be obtained, except through education, no one has yet satisfactorily explained.

The Job-Hunter In South America

Some weeks ago, there appeared, as a news story in The Varsity, an interview with a gentleman on the campus in which he stated that jobs in South America were easy to get and in which he advocated that University of Toronto graduates should make their way south to find them.

Feeling that such a statement might mislead many graduates and ruin many fine chances, we would like to comment upon this statement. Jobs in South America may or may not be plentiful. It is our own personal view that they are not; but that is beside the point. It must be understood—and this is no mere statement of opinion, but a definite fact that we have ourselves proved by bitter experience—it must be understood that such openings as do exist in South America exist right here in Toronto.

It will be absolute folly for any man to pack his bags and leave for South America, no matter what part of South America—if he is not the possessor of an actual contract—and a guaranteed return passage.

Venezuela, Chile, Peru—they are all the same to a job-hunter. Even the consuls of those countries will tell you that the place to hunt for a South American job is here in your own town. The Imperial Oil of Canada is but one of the big Canadian concerns that are interested in the Latin countries. But they, like the others, engage their men in Canada and not in the South. So—go south young man, go south. But go with a contract in your pocket or do not go at all.

There is as much greatness of mind in acknowledging a good turn, as in doing it.—Seneca.

"There is no reason why we should have any poor old people and I dare say the time will come in a few years when this tragedy will be unknown."—Ruth Bryan Owen.

"Let us not forget, in fairness to the Nazis, that they did make a bonfire which burned to ashes a very much boomed book called, 'All Quiet on the Western Front'."—G. K. Chesterton.

By way of a pre-weekend tip, we pass on to you the investigations of one Laribus who threatens to rival the best of our staff investigators for his intrepidity and daring. Mr. Laribus sat in on the recent "Leftist-Rightist" controversy and then went out to seek the true answer to the problem by means of critical experiment. According to his report, which unfortunately we haven't had a chance to publish till now, friend Larry began his investigations with a one evening acquaintance met up with one evening at a local refreshmenteria. She accepted his offer of a drive home, but between you and us and the steering wheel, all his Rightist technique got him was a round-house slap.

Laribus was inclined to conclude that this pretty well gave the decision to the Leftists simply by a process of elimination, but cautiously reserved judgement until he had given the rival system a thorough test as well. This called for the borrowing of an English car, after which the same approach met with the same initially favourable reaction as before. But at the conclusion of the second ride home poor old Larry had received no friendlier caress than that administered on the first trip. S.C.Mer as he is, our investigator was forced to realize that he now had no check to turn, and he was about to admit that there is no sure-fire technique in the gentle art of embrassiez la femme.

But inspiration saved the day and Laribus hied him off to rent a bicycle. Did it work? With his maiden perched on the handlebars and her arms pinioned at her side, he discovered to his joy that she had nary a free fin to slap with.

So now Mr. Laribus S.C.I. (Special Champus Investigator,—we know a good man when we find one) is a confirmed Bethist, and declares that his new third party will sweep the nation. The new technique can't fail, its advocate insists,—but whatever you do, he warns, never let her ride pillow! Then she's got you.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crocker

The coming week-end will be a quiet one for Varsity, athletically speaking. Ace Bailey's hockeyists will not get into action until Tuesday of next week when they entertain the Hamilton Tigers up at the Arena. The Blues are muttering something of repaying the Tigers for that 8-1 reversal they received at Hamilton last week. There are three games of minor importance on the campus. The second game of the struggle for the Arts Faculty Cup will be staged tomorrow. Bailey's T.H.L. Major entry will swing into action tomorrow after a week's lay-off. Then, on the front campus, the Blue and White rugby squad, intercollegiate champions, will play its final game of the season against a picked Toronto squad which will try and mar the Blues' record of no Toronto defeats in two years.

Speaking of rugby reminds us that it is about time that this game received a boost and also the praise that it really deserves. At one of the Varsity-Queen's games this year a rugby game between McGill and Varsity was staged as a preliminary. During the game we sat with friends in the students' section and were amazed to learn how little the students really knew about rugby. This is amazing when one considers that the game really has a wide-spread hold in Canada and that there hasn't been a major change in the rules since they were drawn up fifty years ago. It is interesting to note that there are more rugby football clubs in Canada than there are playing Canadian football. For example in Toronto where there are three major football clubs there are more than twice that number of rugby clubs. In rugby there are only two halves of forty minutes each with only a five-minute rest during which time the players are not allowed to leave the field. There is no time out during halves, no substitution and in case of injury the injured player is removed to the sidelines and the game goes on minus one player. The great difference between rugby and football is in possession of the ball. In football it means everything while in rugby it means practically nothing. The spectator can see the ball at all times because as soon as a player is tackled he must roll away from the ball and someone else picks it up and action continues. Two things result from this. Every man on the team must be able to pass, kick, field and run well so as to be able to advance the ball if called on at any time. Then again play goes on in a sort of perpetual motion. There are few stops. Just contrast this with some of the football games you've seen where five minutes of play require from eight to ten minutes of actual time. There are two more important differences between rugby and football. No substitutes are allowed, doing away with the enormous number of subs who supply atmosphere on the sidelines. The other difference is that all passes must be on-side. Another fact which makes for speed is that the players wear very light outfits. On that Saturday we mentioned nobody seemed to know just how many men composed a team. There are fifteen men on each side, eight forwards and seven backs. The object of both football and rugby is the same, that is, to get the ball over the opposing team's line. In rugby it is the team that thinks more quickly and acts as it thinks that wins. That's why size and weight mean very little. We like r u g g e r if only for the fact that every player must think at all times. Every man is out there on his own. Consequently a team can really be known as invincibles, for example, instead of being called Coach Smith's Invincibles as in football when everything is put on the mentor's shoulders. The coach works out a formula of plays which constitutes his players' Bible so that they will not have to think for themselves unless it is absolutely necessary. We once read somewhere that a player said he preferred rugby because it taught him to think on his feet instead of memorizing twenty or so formulas. There's a lot to be deduced from that statement.

The Big Six, which has dwindled down to a four-team group, opens up tomorrow night when Danforth meets West End Y. Varsity will play its first game either next Thursday or Friday. Mac McCutcheon is at present attempting to get the game on on Friday so as to form a double bill attraction as the girls will be staging their cage final at Hart House on that night. Definite announcement as to the final date will come during the first of next week.

Yesterday's S.P.S. assault at Hart House was a tame affair compared to previous years. The assault lacked that certain something which other School assaults have always had. The Engineers must be getting soft. We hope that this stronghold of spirit on the campus returns to normal in the immediate future.

Thirty cents and coupon number 16 will admit students to tomorrow's Tiger-Sarnia game.

Vic Faces Dents in Contest to Decide Interfaculty Title

TEAMS AT FULL STRENGTH

At 1.15 Saturday the front campus will be the scene of the final game between Vic and Dents for the interfaculty soccer championship.

At the end of the schedule, S.P.S., Dents and Vic were the leaders of their respective groups. Two games were to be played in the semi-finals and finals, goals to count on the round.

Both teams will be at full strength tomorrow, and although opinion is slightly in favour of Vic, taking everything into consideration, it is a gamble to pick either as the winner.

Stapleton has been doing most of the scoring for Dents during the schedule. He combines speed with brainy plays. Cowan, in goal, with Ballauff and Mason as backs form a strong defense to back up the offensive of their forwards.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

Tonight the important second game between Vic Seniors and U.C. Seniors will be played at seven o'clock in the O.C.E. gym. Right now Vic are being picked for the winners by some people, because of their ten point lead, speed and power. You never can tell about these games though, and U.C. are probably planning to surprise the said some people, if they can possibly do so.

So far there has been no hockey news, although the Executive met last week. Very little can be done until the weather becomes colder, and the practices will probably not start till after Christmas.

We were reading the girls' sports column in the McGill Daily yesterday, and the McGill hockey season is getting under way. The girls are also playing interclass basketball. Because McGill is so much smaller than the University of Toronto, they are not able to run the same system of inter-faculty games we do, with all the Arts colleges entering teams. One of the drawbacks of their system is that they have not the same opportunity of discovering and developing good basketball material. However, the team they send up to the Bronze Baby competition is never negligible, and usually compels very respectful consideration.

One thing McGill has, which we have not, is a university badminton team. This team plays matches with some of the teams from Montreal clubs, and last year entertained the Queen's University badminton team, or perhaps it was the other way round. We do not know if Varsity has ever had such a team, but at present financial conditions would probably prevent sending such a team to Queen's or Western. This reminds us to remind you to buy those Yale-Varsity hockey tickets we told you about, and help the Women's Athletic Association make some money.

My critics say I repress freedom. No! I merely give you real freedom by taking from a few the freedom to utter nonsense.—Adolf Hitler.

ed nobody got married, and the population was in danger of being wiped out. The cause of this was that a man could not get married unless he could show his future father-in-law a certain number of heads. The anthropologist's solution was that the government should provide themselves with a supply of heads and hire them out. This was done and found successful.

In the nineteenth century people were of the opinion that primitive society was irrational, stupid and to some extent the survival of an animal state. Every missionary tried to force the primitive peoples to give up their own system and adopt the European. The result was the rapid disappearance of races. This did not satisfy the missionaries because they had nobody to convert, nor the administrators, who had no people from which to collect taxes. The policy was questioned and there resulted a new theory as to the method of dealing with primitive societies. In mandated countries the administrators tried to lead the people to a state where they could manage themselves. Only by very gradual methods are the people urged to adapt their own institutions to a greater approximation of European institutions.

tem, although expressions ranged from the lukewarm to the distinctly hot. Miss P. Naylor, I Arts, considered a new system of administration "to be a very good idea, one of which a majority of girls should be in favour." Several others at Whitney gave evidence of similar sentiments.

Miss Jean Armstrong, II Household Economics, thought there should be certain restrictions for the first year. Some opinions in favour of revision were expressed by women at Victoria. "If we have to have rules, ours are all right, but rules are a terrible nuisance," Mary Carsons stated.

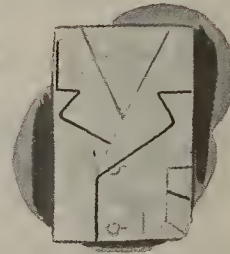

Edith Sanders, when asked if she thought the regulations were too strict, replied emphatically, "I certainly do. Do you want me to sign a petition?" To balance the opinions The Varsity questioned some S.P.S. men on the subject.

"The younger generation must solve the problems of the world which we older men have created," stated Rotarian Sam Botsford, of Buffalo, N.Y., at the Rotary International Relations luncheon at the Royal York on Friday. Over 150 foreign students of the University were present at guests including representatives from India, China, Japan, Colombo, Ireland, England, Australia, New Zealand, Norway and the United States.

Seventeen visiting Rotarians were present, coming from various parts of Canada and the United States. Other visitors included two men from the Christie St. Veteran's Hospital; this being in conformity with a custom inaugurated many years ago of always having visitors from the hospital at the weekly luncheons.

Speaking on the subject of international co-operation, Mr. Botsford mentioned six difficulties in the way of common understanding and goodwill. In the first place there is the language difficulty, the inability of

OUTLINES DEVELOPMENT

Lecturing on "Canadian Painting," at the Grange Friday afternoon, Mr. Arthur Lismer reviewed the artistic development of the last hundred years. "What is painting in this country about?" he asked. There is no allegorical or historical work and little portraiture. Thus Canada's claim to fame rests on landscape painting. Modern Canadian art is not a transitory ghost of the work of other countries, according to Lismer.

Paper

By Helen E. McEwen

Sidney Hermant, B.A., representative of the University of Toronto, who has just returned from an extensive debating tour of the Canadian west, when interviewed by The Varsity regarding statements made in an interview with the Ubuyssey gave his opinion that "the University of Toronto co-eds are like hot-house flowers that wilt quickly—very beautiful but not very substantial. The University of British Columbia co-eds," he maintained, "are more handsome, healthy, efficient, and self-reliant in appearance, than those of the U. of T., mainly because of a lesser indulgence in synthetic pleasure."

Mr. Hermant's chief criticism of the tea dances that take place here, is that they are privately sponsored by clubs and fraternities, and are not for the student body as a whole. He lauds the system prevalent at the U. of B.C., where the Students' Council holds tea dances after the rugby games, for the students and the visiting players, and at the same time regrets that such an

Quadrennial Convention Meets in Indianapolis This Year
Under Noted Leaders

The quadrennial convention of the Student Volunteer Movement, to be held this year in Indianapolis, was the subject of discussion at a tea in U.C. Sunday afternoon.

The convention, occurring only once in a "student generation", is a gathering of some five hundred students from all over North America under the leadership of men of such world-renown as John R. Mott, the Archbishop of York, Dr. T. Z. Koo, and many others. Its aim is to discuss the place Christianity has in the world today among other vital forces as Communism and Nationalism.

By means of large meetings, smaller discussion groups, and particularly exchange of thought and idea with people of widely varied environment, will the students of the convention face the problems at issue in modern times—social conditions, racial strife, the war-spirit.

Another interfaculty championship goes to Victoria College this year, as their soccer valiantly downed Dents by 2-0 on the front campus Friday, and taking the round 3-0, gained possession of the Arts Faculty trophy for the first time since 1927. This game marked the second time in a week that Dents have been forced to accept defeat from a superior team clad in Scarlet and Gold. For the greater part of the game Vic dominated the play, giving the Dents little opportunity to flash an effective offensive. As in the last few games the field was slippery, and the players missed their footing frequently, which was the cause of much mirth among the spectators.

In the first half Vic kept the ball in Dents territory most of the time, but the great defensive work of McCall and H. Mason, along with some nice goal keeping by Cowan, kept Vic from piling up a score. Only twice did Dents have real opportunities to score, and in both cases only slow footwork by the Garnet and Grey forwards prevented a tally. The first goal resulted from a penalty kick. Cowan made a great stop of the unmoistened try but Dents failed to clear and in the merry scramble which followed Cooper bulged the twice to put Vic two up on the round. Vic still continued to press, and their efforts were rewarded by another tally. This one was of the fluky variety. Rutherford kicked an easy one goalwards which Cowan was right on top of. However, H. Mason in trying to clear deflected the leather pumpkin into his own net. It was a tough break for the flashy half back whose long hoists often eased the pressure around the Dents goal.

In the second half Dents started a ganging attack which had Vic on the defensive. However, shots on the goal

SPEAKER DESIRES BOTANICAL GARDENS

Would Aid Farmers and Act

Recreation

POINTS TO BRITISH WORK

In his lecture at Convocation Hall, Saturday night, Dr. Hans Gussow, Dominion of Canada botanist, expressed his belief that a series of national botanical gardens from coast to coast would aid immeasurably in research of economic, industrial and medical problems.

Each year millions of dollars are lost in the west through wheat fungus. Farmers and wheat growers are likewise spending huge sums of money in checking insects and breeding plants. Research for prevention of such diseases and for breeding of insect-resisting plants could be carried on in a botanical garden with much less grief and expense. In this connection Dr. Gussow pointed to the achievements of the Royal Botanical Gardens of Kew, in the case of the rubber plant and the quinine tree.

The layman, however, is apt to overlook the aesthetic value of such a garden; aside from the primary botanic considerations Dr. Gussow conceived of a botanical garden as "a haven of rest and recreation".

Looking far into the future, Dr. Gussow hopes for a fire-proof museum for herbarium which is urgently required before the exploitation of Canadian resources, such as the witchhazel, is complete.

REID WILL DISCUSS ATTACKS ON ENGLAND BY FATHER COUGHLIN

Escott Reid, of the Institute of International Affairs, will lead the discussion at the meeting of the Debates Club of S.P.S. in the Debates Room at Hart House on Tuesday afternoon at 4.15. The topic is to be Father Coughlin's recent attacks on Great Britain such as:

"The League of Nations is nothing more than a nameless, illegitimate child which was cradled in the adulterous bed of the Treaty of Versailles—a treaty that unjustly partitioned Europe and Africa. After this partitioning the League was generated to protect injustice. It became the false front for British domination and the commercial world war." or "Whether you know it or not we are preparing to become cats-paws for saving the international bankers of the British Empire, which Empire, unfortunately, is dominated by the privately owned and controlled Bank of England."

The Debates Club feels itself very fortunate to have Mr. Reid as guest. Admission is by registration card only, and it is hoped that there will be a large and discursive turnout.

Two Cultures Present in Canada

Lord Tweedsmuir, speaking at the McGill Convocation at which an honorary degree was conferred upon him, called attention to a fact which most Canadians are inclined to disregard. That is the immense advantage Canada enjoys because of the double heritage she derives from the culture and tradition of the two great nationalities which are encompassed within her borders.

His Excellency mentioned Marshall Pétain's recent statement that young Englishmen should finish their education in France and that young Frenchmen should finish their education in England, and congratulated Canada on her ability to achieve this admirable curriculum within her own boundaries. The Governor-General will probably be shocked when he discovers how few Canadians take advantage of this opportunity, how few of our ten million inhabitants are truly bilingual.

Ontario and Quebec are particularly happily situated for coming in contact with the broadening influence of two cultures. But the inadequate instruction in French given by the high schools of Ontario will certainly never enable anyone to become really conversant with French language and culture. The teaching of French should be begun in the public schools and pursued in the secondary schools to a degree that will allow high school graduates to read French literature with ease even if they cannot sustain an intelligent conversation in that language.

With the exception of the modern language student and the few who make a special effort to become proficient in French, the average person after four years at university has forgotten the little he ever knew of the language and would be quite incapable of reading a French book. As linguists, we of the New World lag behind our Old World cousins in a most lamentable manner.

A Canadian professor travelling in Italy was struck by the fluency with which his small Italian guide spoke French and questioned him about it. "Why, I go to school," answered the boy in a puzzled manner, for to him the very fact of going to school was synonymous with being able to speak at least one language besides one's own.

World problems would be much simpler to solve if nations understood each other better. The first step in understanding each other comes from speaking a common language and studying each other's literatures. We have a great opportunity in Canada and we do not make the most of it.

Strikebreaking As Profitable Business

Canada has experienced strikes of various natures but to date their existence has not been so numerous as in the United States; and exploiters have not found them so profitable. The situation has been picturesquely illustrated in recent publications, so we will only draw attention to a few of the more interesting factors connected with the business.

As every poison has its antidote so the strikes have generated an antidote. This is known as a Strikebreaking Incorporated. The general idea is that when an employer is faced with a strike he does not call in the law, but merely organizations who find a profitable business in the strike breaking industry.

While this has in many cases produced results, the method in which they are effected is not of a very desirable nature. In fact the organizations are specialized gangsters. And while their specialty is breaking strikes they also engage in a large degree in causing strikes. Merely creating a market for their efforts.

Their methods are quite effective. They merely hire down-and-out labourers and protect them while they operate the mills at which the original staff have gone on strike. This at times gives rise to trouble in which people are killed. One agency has, in breaking up nine strikes, accumulated a casualty list of 52. This number is relatively evenly divided between strikers, strikebreakers and spectators. The general idea seems to be that if the strikers are not terrified at this display of violence, the people will, moved by public opinion, intervene to end the strike.

The manner in which the strike breakers are treated by their gangster employers is worthy of note. They are fleeced at every turn. They are treated as convicts, hoarded together in barracks, made to pay several prices for their beds, cigarettes and meals. This all comes under the head of the gangsters' tribute. The employees adopt a similar stand. They cheat and steal at every opportunity and prove to be expensive tools in the strikebreaking business.

The names under which they function also prove interesting. The men hired to do the actual work are known as "finks". These are usually criminally inclined individuals or shiftless drifters. Occasionally there are drawn to their ranks, unemployed men driven to desperation by hunger. Guards are known as "nobles" and are usually gangsters. The spies used to promote a strike or investigate a strike as the case may be are called "boots".

This is all part of civilization which prides itself on the high standard of living they maintain. Fortunately such organizations are non-existent in Canada. It is very desirable that they remain that way.

Competition Needed

Probably no game is more widely played about the University Campus than Squash Raquets. We doubt if even Rugby has as many adherents as this comparatively new and as yet unpublished sport. It is estimated that over six hundred undergraduates play in the Hart House Courts.

Yet Squash Raquets receives less mention than any other sport in Canada. Even The Varsity, criterion though it be of all matters, pays scant attention to this increasingly popular medium of recreation. Hart House has but three courts where six would be insufficient, the University is disinterested and there are no University Squash teams in the present city tournament. Why, we ask ourselves, this lack of enthusiasm for a game that is played by hundreds?

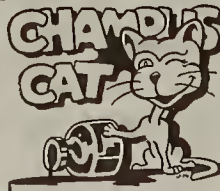

Is it that professionalism has so far overshadowed these other sports that all adherents of them must desire to see their names in print, to hear the cheers of crowds in their ears? It must be for it cannot be a mere superiority in the game. Any squash player will tell you, though he be also the best half-back and the best forward in the University, that this is not so.

However, such is the humility and keenness of these six hundred aspiring squash players that we would like to give them a hand. We would like to see them acknowledged, watched by the crowds, publicized and so on. But for all this there is a committee. The Hart House Squash Committee, elected every spring, does little more than run off a short tournament in the fall. Why have we not a University Squash team? Why do we not play McGill, a university that is interested in this department of student activity? Why do we not have an undergraduate team in the city league? Well, why not?

P.T. for Plants

How long will it be before the University institutes courses in physical training for plants? Scientists have been interested for a long time in the effect of exercise on plants. Dr. C. P. Boner, associate professor of physics (University of Texas) calls attention to an article in the current issue of Science, which has just been received in the Library. It details the results of experiments performed on plants by W. E. Burge and V. C. Wickwire, University of Illinois scientists.

The two men arranged an apparatus to allow a heavy weight to press upon the branch of a plant. When the weight had caused the plant to wilt, a lighter weight was substituted which allowed the plant to resume its natural position by doing a little "lifting". At the end of a period of these exercises—by flexing its muscles, so to speak—the plant had acquired an ability to lift 41 per cent more. —Daily Texan.

What with the honorary degrees flying around so liberally of late, the Cat is daily expecting recognition from the Department of Biology. If the recent interview with the Black Widow spider was not a sufficient contribution to this branch of science, we follow it up with some further investigations in the realm of zoology, with our sainted aunt this time taking the credit.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Hart House String Quartet

The Hart House String Quartet opened their Public Rehearsal series last Friday evening. To attempt to criticize this group is difficult, beyond saying that they play with an air of authority which brooks no criticism, a unity which is admirable, and a musical sense which is still more admirable. There were only two disappointments: first, they did not play the complete program scheduled for the Saturday performance, and second, that they have dispensed with the carefully annotated programs of previous years.

The program opened with Mozart's Quartet in D Minor. Free from the usual cold formality of Mozart's Quartets, the work is intensely emotional in mood. The romantic opening theme is reminiscent of Schubert in its melodic freedom. The minuet, far from the dainty gaiety of most minuets, is (Continued on Page 4)

Editor of The Varsity.
Dear Sir:

As one of those who was present at the 1935 presentation of the U.C. Follies I would like to express my congratulations to the cast. It seemed to me the best production of its kind that I have ever seen.

The only misfortune being that only one thousand were able to see the show. I think it only fair to the many unfortunate who missed it that some arrangement should be made, such as at last year's band concert.

I might add that I do realize the members of the cast have already spent a great deal of time and effort on the show but—they owe it to their public.

Yours sincerely,
Ron Burrows, IV Trim.

In a week of notable screen fare at Toronto theatres, the Imperial Theatre is prominent in that it offers not only an excellent comedy on the screen, but also a vaudeville program that is often highly entertaining. No part of the program is memorable or outstanding, but for a memento value the entire show is decidedly worthwhile.

The most juvenile of leading men, Dick Powell, co-stars with the acid Fred Allen in the political satire, "Thanks a Million", which headlines the program for the week. Admirers of Mr. Powell will find him just about the same as always in the film, while (Continued on Page 4)

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

Vic Seniors won the right to meet the St. Hilda's Seniors in the basketball finals, when they defeated the U.C. Seniors last Friday night in the second semi-final game. The first half of the game was very slow and neither team showed championship form. Phyl Griffiths and Marion Henderson were doing the refereeing, and they were checking up strictly on the travelling and overguarding. Vic were playing more defensively than offensively in this period but nevertheless were leading 10-5 at half-time.

Marjorie Rean must have given the U.C. girls quite a pep talk in the interval, because they came back on the floor full of pep and energy and almost immediately went into the lead and held it until after three-quarter time. Then the Vic girls pulled up their socks, and put in about six baskets in a row, which gave them the lead and eventually the game.

Unfortunately for U.C. Kay Brown as well as Jean Atkinson was out of the game. Kay has a bad ankle, and the team certainly missed her. However, Genevieve St. Aubin played a sparkling game and kept the Vic defence working hard. Billy McGarry and Enor Kennedy gave all they had but were unable to prevent Maisie Cowan and Erna Laing from scoring.

This basketball game is getting rougher and rougher, and if someone breaks an arm or a leg or a neck in the finals, it will be a climax to the series of accidents that has already taken place. On Friday night Hazel Brown of Vic was hit in the face by someone's elbow, and it was feared that her nose was broken. We were very glad to hear yesterday that no fracture had been suffered, but even so it is doubtful whether she will be able to play tomorrow. Hard luck, Hazel!

VIC BASKETEERS WIN SEMI-FINALS

U.C. Girls Unable to Overcome Eight Point Advantage; Succumb 26-20

PLAY IS SLOW

With a final score of 26-20 Victoria Seniors clinched the semi-finals in their second game with U.C. Seniors Friday night at the O.C.E. gym.

Although U.C. held the lead during part of the game they did not have much chance of overcoming the eight point advantage Vic held from the first game of the semi-finals. With Kay Brown and Jean Atkinson off the U.C. team the play was slow and the forwards found it hard to break through Vic's strong defence. P. Pethick and G. St. Aubin played well but they did not receive much support from the rest of the team.

Vic played a very defensive game, but with Maisie Cowan and Marjorie Leslie shooting the scoring was comparatively easy in spite of the close guarding by Helen McGarry and Enor Kennedy.

Vic Seniors: Erna Laing (5), Myrtle Robb, Marjorie Leslie (7), Louise Pryor (3), Maisie Cowan (11), Ruth Leavens, Betty Jenkinson, Hazel Brown, Doris Wagstaff.

U.C. Seniors: Pat Pethick (14), Joan Romeny (4), G. St. Aubin (2), H. McGarry, Enor Kennedy, Betty Robinson, R. Turner, H. Doey.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Frank Lamberti

The sports horizon over the wee-end found the Battering Bengal football squad smashing a precise machine-like squad representing Samaria by 22-3, rocketing to the pinnacle of Eastern Canada football supremacy. Led by Johnny Ferraro, former Cornell star, the Hamilton Big Four champions defeated the 1934 Canadian champions, convincingly avenging their defeat of last fall. Now for the Canadian title with only the Winnipeg twelve impeding the way.

Every season great things are predicted for the Western champions, but they have always been repulsed by Eastern teams for the Canadian gridiron supremacy, and Coach Bob Fritz of the Westerners can be expected to make a valiant challenge for the title next Saturday when the quality of his squad is considered. Russ Rehbohts in his last appearance here two years ago against Argos gave a great exhibition of football and another like performance by him this Saturday should give Winnipeg the necessary punch. However, with the Tigers going so well of late it will take a great team to head them off and prediction for a Western team capturing the title seem a little remote as yet.

The School of Dentistry within a week were forced to concede two inter-faculty titles to the Scarlet and Gold as Victoria College garnered the Arts Faculty trophy as well as the Mullock Cup, gaining thorough supremacy in the field of football, namely the soccer and rugby championships. The Scarlet and Gold clad athletes deserve all the credit due to real fighting champions.

Down in Fort Worth, Texas, two previously undefeated gridiron elephants met and the South Western Conference title went to Southern Methodist University as they turned back the Texas Christian University 20-14, and are now looked on as the possible Rose Bowl contenders. The other undefeated squad in the East was Princeton Tigers, who easily turned aside the Yale Bulldogs.

While on the subject of football one of the peculiar coincidences arising out of the game, its players, and coaches, may be seen in the following. Several years ago two lads who had just graduated from Aquinas came to Toronto and played football with St. Michael's and just recently completed another football season in a blaze of glory with the University of Toronto Big Blue team. In each case, they were under the tutelage of coaches which could be called the "S" dynasty of gridiron tutors, namely Sullivan of Aquinas, Father "Con" Sheehan and Bill Storen of St. Michael's, and Warren Stevens of the University of Toronto. The lads are Joe Connelly and Hugh Marks.

The crowd factor, ever the potent theme in sport spectacles which lend games colour and life especially, in the following established in football has a place of importance also in hockey and the University of Toronto rosters' club will be given the opportunity of proving such tomorrow evening when the Hamilton Tigers meet Ace Bailey's cohorts at Victoria Arena. The addition of a cheerleader or so should help materially to keep interest at fever height and spur the blue clad hockey warriors to greater efforts.

The closeness of competition for third place in the Senior O.H.A. race is very peculiar indeed with Port Colborne, Oakville, and Varsity trailing the field with no wins as yet, while the former two squads have each tied two games and Varsity one, and the battle of third place goes on with Varsity having one game in hand which shows the way for a great season concerning the Blue and White hockey hopes.

Admittedly a great respect is due to one's elders in the realm of sports writing and much more so to Andy Lytle, graphic sports columnist of the Toronto Star, who finally crashed the gate at Varsity Stadium via the Bloor Street entrance last week and with indulgence the following news on Nick Metz is presented. "Red" Metz as he is familiarly known at St. Michael's, although coming from the west, gained most of his hockey lore under the Double Blue colours while he played in the Junior Prep series in the season of 1931-32 under the expert coaching of the dynamic Father J. E. McGahey, and spent later seasons under Father Jack Spratt in Big Six and finally under Dr. Jerry La Flamme before becoming attached to the Toronto Maple Leafs.

The battle between the Blue and White hockeyists of Canada and the Blue and White of the famed Old Eli, will take place on December 12 w Varsity meets Yale at Varsity Arena on December 12. Keep that date open.

VIC WINS ARTS TROPHY

were few and Dykes coolly handled any that were. Towards the last Vic pushed the tiring Dents squad back to their own end of the field, holding them there until the final bell.

For Vic the playing of Woodsworth and Pratt stood out. Both were important goes to the offensive while the former got Vic out of trouble many times by his steady blocking. Cooper was a trifle inconsistent but at times played smart football. For Dents Pon played a star's game on the forward wall. His passing was accurate, but the rest of the forwards gave him little support, which obscured his brilliant display.

Vic: Dyke; Cooper, Scott; Simpson, Simm, Woodsworth; Taylor, Campbell, Pratt, Rutherford, Brown; MacDonald, Menzies, Pacer.

ened and at half time Varsity were driven deep into their own half of the field.

After the interval the all-stars returned to the attack and were finally rewarded when Carter fell on a loose ball behind the Varsity goal line. Matheson got the convert to make the score 11-5 for Varsity.

The Blue forwards, led by Magner, then began another series of dribbling and passing rushes. Slowly they forced their way into Toronto territory. Then from a line-out, Prowse plunged through the opposing forward line to score Varsity's fourth touchdown. Shortly afterwards a Magner to Egan lateral pass resulted in another try. For the rest of the game the play saw-sawed up and down the field but neither side could score.

For Toronto, Murdie, Holden and Murray played well while Stohart, Magner and Outerbridge, all in their last year, were the stars for Varsity.

Dr. Gussow urged the Department of Botany of the University to persuade the authorities or generous citizens of this city for the necessary principal and land, of which many excellent spots, such as Humber and Don Valleys, are available. Examples of the type of botanical gardens throughout the empire were exhibited by the doctor in a series of slides.

BEAVERS SUSTAIN SECOND DEFEAT THIS SEASON

Lose to Postmen in Game Featuring Brilliant Plays by Miller and Shipman

SCORE 3-1

Varsity Beavers underwent their second defeat of the season Saturday night at the hands of the Postmasters in the Varsity Arena by a score of 3-1.

The score indicates the trend of the play in that the Post Office was somewhat the stronger team in single man power while the Beavers combined to produce a better brand of team play. A large crowd of non-partisans were present but real Varsity supporters were totally lacking.

The first period opened with a lack of organized offensive. Miller of P.O. made a great solo rush from his own defensive zone, outskated the Beaver forwards, circled the defence and drew Shipman out of the net to slip the puck past him.

In the second period Post Office carried the play into Beaver territory and rifled shots at Shipman from all angles. Shipman played a remarkable game and was a big factor in saving the team from greater defeat. Miller again outwitted the Beaver defence and came right in on Shipman, giving very little chance to save. When Sharpe of P.O. was given a penalty for an illegal bodycheck the Beavers put on a strong power play but they just couldn't beat Worters.

After about 10 minutes of play in the last round Wallis counted another for the Post Office, McLean getting the assist. Creasy succeeded in beating Worters for Varsity's first count. Heartened by this goal the Beavers pressed hard with all men forward but the speedy backchecking of the opposing team kept them under control until the final goal.

Beavers: Goal, Shipman; defence, Sissons, Brown; forwards, Stavart, Disher, Creasy; alternates, Boddington, Galaway, Burchell, Driscoll.

institution does not exist in Toronto. "A comparison of the two papers is invidious to start with, for there is no basis for a comparison, but judging individual issues of the papers, I consider the Ubyssay to be the better of the two," said Mr. Hermant, when questioned regarding the statement about the two papers which he made in a recent interview with the Ubyssay. He pointed out that the U. of B.C., with its 1800 students, is scarcely larger than U.C., and so, with little difficulty in contacting the students, the Ubyssay can be a true "newspaper" which would be impossible at the U. of T., where because The Varsity is the only connecting link between the 7000 students on the campus, the paper must serve primarily as a bulletin board.

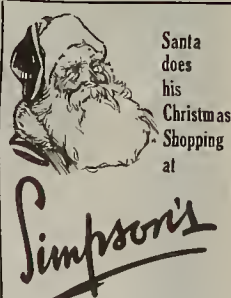

The team of which Mr. Hermant was a member, won six out of seven debates. "It was a great thrill," he said, "to visit the west as the representative of the U. of T. and the alumnae in the different cities added a great deal to the enjoyment of the trip."

POPULAR SWIM COACH GOES TO HOSPITAL ABSENCE IS FELT

The coach of the Varsity intercollegiate swimming team, Roy H. Lowndes, was taken to the hospital last Friday morning for a tonsil operation.

Mr. Lowndes has been ill for some few weeks, and it is hoped that his operation will put him well on the way to permanent recovery. His absence has been severely felt by the intercollegiate swimming club which has been forced to go through its practices and prepare for the interfaculty meet without his capable coaching.

Many thanks are due to Mr. W. Winterburn, Hart House swimming instructor, who has filled in the breach during Mr. Lowndes' absence.

U.C. AND VIC JUNIORS END HOURS EVEN IN VOLLEYBALL MATCH

Jr. Vic and Jr. U.C. split two games of an interfaculty volleyball match Friday afternoon in the upper gym at Hart House.

Vic took the first game 15-13 and U.C. took the second 16-14. The teams were very evenly matched and because of the long drawn out games were unable to get the third game in before five o'clock. Vic won the first game in spite of a determined attack on the part of U.C., who drew up within 2 points of Vic's score.

The second game was a see-saw affair with U.C. finally clinching the game after trailing Vic for most of the time. Vic: Ward, Bennett, Laid, McKinnon, Scott, Macdonald, Wallace and Downard.

U.C.: Savlor, Rose, Tepperman, Spring, Holt, Soren, Yankoo, Lokash and Nott.

a thing of breath-taking sadness. The finale, based on an ancient dance form, is one of the loveliest things that Mozart ever wrote.

The Quartet in E Minor, by Beethoven, is one of three which he composed for Count Golschinsky, after whom they were named. The work belongs to Beethoven's so-called Second Period, when, having passed the imitative stage, his own powerful personality asserts itself. In the first two movements, rather profound in character, Beethoven obtains a rather interesting effect by contrasting E minor with E major. The allegretto that follows is a wistful movement, in the midst of which, somewhat incongruously, sits a trio based on a Russian folk tune—presumably inserted as a compliment to Golschinsky.

The players gave two encores: Mendelssohn's graceful "Canzonetta," and Tchaikovsky's well-known "Andante Cantabile," whose pensive beauty, it must be confessed, was the most appealing number of the evening.

ing intended chiefly to illustrate all the contrapuntal devices used in Bach's larger works.

A surprisingly large audience turned up, but it is suspected that they were more attracted by Guerrero than by Bach. However, even Mr. Guerrero's excellent interpretation of the Inventions could not alleviate entirely the monotony of the program. But it is better that the Friday afternoon recitals be more educative than entertaining.

Toronto Symphony

The "Scheherazade Suite" of Rimsky-Korsakoff, performed by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra on Saturday afternoon at Massey Hall was neither conventionally exotic or voluptuously languorous; it was full of the vitality, the fire, the colour and the cruelty of a young and unspoiled civilization; it was representative of the East of Genghis Khan rather than that of Mustapha Kemal. Based on the "Thousand and One Nights," it is romantic in character; Rimsky-Korsakoff was no realist, seeing only the dirt and degradation of the Orient; but it is far from being banal or lifeless. In it, the composer has exploited every resource of the orchestra, with an unusual and skillful use of the percussion instruments. Saturday's performance was adequately spirited and vigorous, although the fourth movement seemed a trifle beyond the orchestra's capacities.

The total effect was that of Cole-ridge's "Kubla Kahn" or of a series of Persian miniatures. Without a doubt, Rimsky-Korsakoff has given us one of the most attractive and comprehensible pictures of the East (even though it be a "fairy-tale" East) in this fine work.

Second in importance to it on the program was Wagner's magnificent conclusion to the "Ringgold"—the Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla. In the opening section, depicting the rainbow bridge across the valley to the palace of the Gods, moments of sheer ecstatic beauty were achieved; but with the despairing cry of the Rhinemaidens the spell was broken, and the subsequent final climax was disappointing.

Cecile Chaminade's concertino for orchestra and solo flute served admirably as a contrast to the splendour and exaltations of Wagner, and proved conclusively the inadequacy of women as composers. The performance of the soloist, Walter Whitaker, was facile, but the music reminded one of nothing so much as a group of women conversing, with one member out-talking the rest. The feminine temperament would seem to be adapted to interpretation of music rather than to its creation. Certainly a comparison between a performance by Myra Hess and this concerto of Chaminade's leaves one with that opinion.

others will welcome Mr. Allen as a very effective antidote to the boyish charm of Powell. The idea of the story of "Thanks a Million" is indirectly derived from that ace of satires, "Of Thee I Sing". Allen, Powell, Ann Dvorak, Patsy Kelly and others appear as a group of vaudevillians, stranded in a small town. They take refuge from the rain in a hall, in which there is a campaign meeting for governor of an unidentified state going on. When the candidate, played very effectively by Raymond Walburn, begins his campaign speech, the crowd is so bored that it walks out on him. This gives Mr. Allen the idea of using his vaudevillians as a come-on entertainment unit to lure the people to the meetings. This is very agreeable to the bosses of the party, so the troupe finds itself with a job. Complications ensue, enough of them to make a lively and pleasant picture.

The fun poked at politics is light-hearted, not bitter, but is none the less effective for that. Mr. Powell sings well and Ann Dvorak is a capable heroine. Patsy Kelly is responsible also for some of the brighter moments and Raymond Walburn is at his best as the candidate for governor. As for Mr. Allen, his screen debut is an auspicious one. Let's hope he brings Portland Hoffa along the next time. Rubino, Paul Whiteman, Benny Baker, Alan Dinehart and others complete the uniformly fine cast.

The vaudeville unit, entitled "Rhapsody in Rhythm", is a colourful hodge-podge of expert comedy, dance teams, and singing, with the world's premier cellist thrown in for good measure. All in all, it's a good week at the Imperial, both in stage and screen.

people to understand each other, even among those apparently speaking the same tongue.

Another factor in the problem is the exercise of democracy in many countries of the world, when instability and uncertainty is caused by the inability of national representatives to speak for their country with final authority. Then too, there is the increased complexity of the world structure until now there are many facts which we should know and don't, with an increased inability to understand problems fully.

President Cody, an honorary member of the Rotary Club, in thanking Mr. Botsford for his address, stated that in his opinion Canada stood in a unique position in world affairs today. On the one side she is the closest neighbour of the United States, while she is still an integral part of the British Empire. In this way she offers a means of understanding between the two greatest nations of the world, already in close kinship through common culture and development.

NEWS OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

Ottawa: The federal capital is agog today over Canada's disavowal of her delegate's initiative in proposing the extension of sanctions to include an oil embargo against Italy. It is construed as disclosing a wide open breach in a hitherto unbroken front which the Empire has maintained at Geneva.

Rome: Canada's refusal to co-operate in an oil embargo is taken in Rome to indicate a wedge in the sanctions front and as such is heartily welcomed by Mussolini.

London: In common with Geneva, London is disregarding Canada's stand and is proceeding with plans for an immediate operation of the oil embargo.

London: Princess Victoria, sister of King George, died early today following a gastric hemorrhage.

Toronto: It is believed in government circles that Premier Mitchell Hepburn will carry on indefinitely as Ontario Premier and Liberal Leader.

VICTORIA PRESENTS CANADIAN PREMIERE OF RUSSIAN DRAMA

Scarcely one hundred tickets remain to be sold for the presentation by Victoria College Dramatic Society of Maxim Gorki's "The Lower Depths". The play will take place in Hart House Theatre on Friday and Saturday evenings.

Banned in Russia when first written as being unfavourable to the religious beliefs of the old regime, Gorki's play received little acclaim until after the revolution in that country. Even to this date it has been produced only at the Russian Art Theatre of Moscow, and in New York. Its showing here marks its first appearance in Canada.

"The Lower Depths" is the thought-provoking type of play, filled with subtle philosophy, grim humour and intense drama, Rex Boyd said yesterday. Great care has been taken in creating authentic costumes, settings and characters.

STUDY INCREASES CREATIVE ABILITY

An Eye for Beauty and Colour is not Innate but Can be Cultivated

"Creative power can be increased by a study of the principles of design," Miss Hamilton, the head of Eaton's Interior Decorating Department, said yesterday in her lecture at the Museum. One does not necessarily have to be born with an eye for colour and beauty—it may be cultivated.

Miss Hamilton pointed out that there are two types of design: structural and decorative. Structural design is simple while decorative design is a luxury, and intensifies the structural design.

Miss Hamilton used as an illustration of decorative design, the odor of University College.

The great beauty of modern furniture lies in its extreme simplicity. It is suited to its purpose, the material is suitable to the making, and all parts have a definite use.

There are two motifs in design: those inspired by nature and others which are abstract forms. But when designs are taken from nature they must be conventionalized. Harmony in interior decorating may be accomplished by lines. A repetition of lines in the same direction, or contradicting lines (Continued on Page 4)

MATTHEWS LAUDS MISSIONARY WORK

Believes that Our Generation Must Reject Superficial Form in Worship

KAGAWA FEARED IN JAPAN

The opinion that this generation must rediscover an integral Christianity instead of the superficial form so often found today, was expressed by Basil Matthews, of Oxford University on Saturday, in an informal meeting at Victoria College.

In refuting the charge so often made that the Church should rehabilitate itself at home before sending missionaries to other lands, Mr. Matthews claimed that the missionary spirit is inextricably bound up with true Christianity. Then too, the western countries often gain as much religiously from the sending out of missionaries as do the eastern countries to which they are sent. Kagawa, for instance, who is at present performing great work on this continent in evangelization, is himself a native of Japan and is a result of the efforts of missionaries from this country. So we have developed a (Continued on Page 4)

"Maidens Lead the Primrose Way. Confine Them" Big Bruisers Say

By John C. Dent and John F. Peterson

Apparently we stirred up an oversized hornets' nest last week by writing a story on rules in Women's Residences. Our idea was simply that boys got along without a leave system, why couldn't girls? It was quite a shock to have residence girls tell us off the next day, and insist that their leaves were quite adequate.

Next we heard a rumour that, from the male point of view, the system was much too loose. After scouting around, we unearthed an organization known as "The Anti-Outings-for-Whitney Society. Its platform is as follows: "We feel that the girls in residence are a menace to the youth of the University, leading them from the straight and narrow path. Their actions, especially in the evenings, are not conducive to serious study by our young men. They hover like birds of prey around neighbouring bean-and-bun-shops, ready to pounce on the unsuspecting male. . . . Therefore we demand that all residence girls be confined strictly to their own houses after 8.30 at night, WITHOUT EXCEPTION."

Secret Society

The president of the society expressed himself in this manner: "We are a secret society, and the names of the executive must not be revealed if the movement is to function efficiently. We are intensely in earnest, and will do all in our power to obtain our objective."

The vice-president added that he considered this the greatest constructive movement since Hart House was built.

HOLY BLOSSOM CLUB SPONSORS LECTURE BY ANGELL TONIGHT

A group of the most distinguished men of this country and of Europe, will discuss politics, psychology, foreign affairs, religion and social and economic problems in a series of monthly lectures commencing tonight under the auspices of the Holy Blossom Men's Club. "What must we pay for peace?" is the subject of the first of these lectures to be given by Sir Norman Angell at the Holy Blossom Forum at 115 Bond St. at 8.30 p.m. tonight.

The first lecture is expected to be of unusual interest since the speaker has just arrived from England, possessing first hand information of the existing European situation. Moreover, his extensive travels, his election in 1929 for the British Parliament and the fact that he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1933, gives him a suitable background for a sound grasp of his subject.

Girls in Whitney Lead a Life Ideal For The Perfect Wife

By H. H. Clarke

In an exhaustive survey carried on by yours truly, several heretofore unknown facts have come to light. Believing ourselves to be well in the know, our fond dreams were rudely shattered when in the course of running down a story, a crude insinuation was made. Resolving to put to route such ideas that cast aspersions on the integrity of the undergraduate mind, the following facts came to light.

It is a well-known geographical fact that that stronghold of feminine pulchritude, Whitney Hall, is femininely abode of the Salt of the Earth, Trinity House—which leads to complications, at once tragic, and to some, disastrous. The archives of Trinity fail to give the exact statistics on the percentage of failures in each section of the building, but it is rumoured that the east wing leads by at least 40 per cent. The reasons for this were not at once apparent to your reporter, but a bit of quiet investigation soon cleared up the difficulties.

A short time ago, the price for rooms in the house was at a uniform rate, but, so rumour has it, about a year ago, prices for east cubicles suddenly rose, and the rooms were still filled first. Then we discovered that a thriving business had been going on by the occupants of these rooms, namely: unletting. And the secret of all this lies in the noble edifice on the opposite corner.

When a freshman (worm to you) arrives at Trinity House he takes up his residence on the second floor. As a matter of self-preservation he makes the acquaintance of his fellow-worms, the better to withstand the attacks of the sophs. That is their story. But, by a queer coincidence, all these meetings take place in a St. George St. room. And, if one were to pass by this room from about 8 bells on, he might hear (Continued on Page 4)

ATTITUDE OF JEWS CITED BY AVUKAHS

Jewish Students More Tolerant to Gentiles than Businessmen and Professionals

ANTI-SEMITISM VALUED

Students at the University are much more liberal-minded and tolerant than the business and professional classes, according to the results of a recent survey on "Anti-Semitism" which were presented by Helen Pivnick at the Avukah Society meeting yesterday evening. At the meeting, too, David Newman, B.Com., in his talk on "Anti-Goyism", showed that throughout the ages the attitude of Jew towards the Gentile has always been one of tolerance and equality.

Miss Pivnick, referring to the claim of the Rev. Mr. Silcox that Jewish students capture more than their share of scholarships, quoted the answer of Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath as expressed in the Canadian Student, "Why classify and categorize? Why not ask whether the Baptists are winning the prizes provided by Anglicans, or whether the scholarships donated by Torontonians are carried off by students from Owen Sound?"

Quoting from Wasserman's "My Life as a German and Jew", the Mosaic code and the Talmud, in addition to Jewish poets as Heine and Bialik, Newman gave a comprehensive survey of the attitude of Jew to Gentile from Biblical times to the present day. He showed that the attitude has been as described in the commandment, "love thy neighbour as thyself."

SOME CO-EDS CAN REJOICE

Possibly the strangest and most inconceivable notice ever posted on the Lost and Found Board in Hart House, is being viewed by amazed students at the present time.

Beside it appear other items which might at other times seem pathetic, ridiculous, humorous, tragic. There are notices to the effect that one gym sock (white) has been found; also one slide rule (white). A pair of ear-rings awaits some claimant. An optimist advertises the loss of a one-dollar bill. No description is given. Another has lost a diary, between Hoskin Avenue and the Dental College.

But this strangest of all notices dwarfs its fellows into commonplace insignificance.

It says, in short, LOST: Moustache; DESCRIPTION: Small; black hair. In the vicinity of Hart House, November 15.

Students loitering in the corridors of the House are carrying about a puzzled frown. It is the mystery of the hour. No theory even remotely approaching plausibility has been brought forward. Not even the fact that it was the night of the Hart House Masquerade seems to offer much enlightenment.

In an attempt to present the case of Fascism as a true Fascist would do it, Mr. R. G. Riddell, of the History Department, surveyed the subject from its origins in central Europe to its manifestations in Canada, at an open meeting of the Social Science Club yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Riddell, although introduced as a "real, live Fascist", immediately refuted the claim by saying that if he were in a really Fascistic state, he would probably be a "real, dead something else". He found himself in the position of having to put forward the best case for Fascism when in reality he was out of sympathy with its views on many points.

U.C. LITERARY SOCIETY PRESENTS GOLD KEYS

Three graduating members of the U.C. Literary and Athletic Society will be presented with gold keys, when that society meets tonight in the Junior Common Room at 8 p.m. The members are W. W. Seecombe, G. T. King, and A. W. M. Kirkpatrick.

Principal Wallace will address the society on "Impressions of a Visit to Greece". A large turnout is looked for by the officers.

Radio Ads Becoming a Nuisance

The patience with which citizens of Canada and the United States tolerate some of the abominations of modern society has amazed more than one observer from other continents.

The peculiar abomination we have in mind right now is the matter of disgusting drivel which passes for advertising on the radio networks of this continent.

The merits of coffee and clothes; refrigerators and roadsters; jewelry and jellies—and so on down the entire line of things we eat and wear and ride in and enjoy—are throbbled into our ears by enthusiastic announcers between musical programs and speeches.

But the paradox is that there is scarcely a person in the entire country who likes to listen to the bamboozle and fourflushing advertising which is the parasitical growth in modern radio development.

Yet it is tolerated with a placidity and complacency which appears to be a feature of North American life on such matters.

Canadians and Americans have enjoyed radio entertainment for a decade and have been irritated and exasperated by advertising propaganda on the air. A program of symphony music is mutilated by the sponsor blatantly urging listeners between selections to be sure and eat So-and-So's savory sausages.

The whole idea of radio advertising has been carried to a ridiculous length. Advertising, as a feature of distribution in our economy, has its place and that place is in the magazines and the newspapers of America. Printed advertising has become an art and the majority of the ads which grace our publications today are a credit to their sponsors.

The British people have realized that advertising merely destroys the educational and entertainment value of the radio. Under the British Broadcasting Corporation, a public utility trust, broadcasting is transformed into a medium of cultural advancement.

There is NO advertising on British programs. British listeners read their newspapers and their magazines to find out what they should buy and the integrity of the radio as primarily for education and entertainment remains intact.

The disadvantages of radio broadcasting of advertising assuredly outweigh the advantages.

In Canada the Canadian Radio Commission has been somewhat of a compromise between national control of broadcasting and private enterprise in the field, financed by advertising. But we have not gone far enough.

However, next year the fate of broadcasting in Canada is to be decided and an opportunity will be given Canada to lead the way on this continent towards that enviable goal attained by Britain—a non-commercial system of broadcasting in which advertising on the air is prohibited.

And it would not necessarily involve government control—so distasteful to many Canadians. The B.B.C. in Britain, along the lines of which Canadian broadcasting should be developed, is NOT government controlled but is operated by a Board in the public interest.

Efforts Made For Botanical Garden

Dr. Hans Gussow, Dominion Botanist, speaking in Convocation Hall recently, put forth an argument in favour of Botanic Gardens for Canada.

Canada has not yet a Botanic Garden. Yet a person does not have to travel far on the continent to find numerous gardens of splendid beauty and interest. In the British Empire, there are Botanic Gardens in South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, the British West Indies, and British Guiana, as well as in the British Isles.

Why the dearth in this country of Botanic Gardens? Is it that we Canadians have been so set on getting quick economic returns, that we have gone straight after them and have sacrificed fundamentals in our haste? A Botanic Garden is a centre of botany, where a study may be made of growth, nutrition, disease and breeding of plants; a centre of horticultural plants and trial grounds; a centre of landscape gardening with unique facilities for the training of gardeners; a centre for systematic introduction and testing of plants from abroad, as well as for the preservation and utilization of native flora.

Thus Botanic Gardens are the crowning institutions of everything to do with plants, attractive for their beauty and full of wide and varied interest. In aesthetic appeal they are on a footing with the fine arts, music, painting, poetry, sculpture, equally deserving of encouragement. When, however, we add to their importance, in education, in horticulture and agriculture, and in pure scientific work, we have a type of institution that is worthy of a place in our Canadian national life.

The impression derived from seeing Dr. Gussow's illustration in natural colours of Botanic Gardens of the British Empire, is that each garden is different from the others and has a beauty all its own. The reason for this difference, when the main purposes of Botanic Gardens are the same, can be traced to the choice of the site, some natural beauty spot. Toronto with its natural ravines and streams has numerous areas where a Botanic Garden could be situated. In the development of a site, everything is done with a view to conserving all the natural beauties and enhancing them.

At the present time there is a committee, headed by Sir Robert Falconer, working on the proposal of a Botanic Garden for Toronto. This is a project to which every citizen should lend support. We have the natural areas, and we have the authorities who can promote such a park. What we need most is a greater realization on the part of the people of Toronto of the need for a Botanic Garden.

Even Aldermen Not Too Old to Learn

On receipt of a letter from the University of Toronto Extension inviting him to attend classes on Public Administration, a certain member of the city council was indignant at the suggestion, that he, with so much business experience should require such education. However, if examples of the sessions of the City Council serve as any criteria on public administration, it would appear that a little training would serve a useful purpose. The City Council has a tendency to be a tinder box of conflagration in which members denounce each other in no uncertain terms, all at the expense of the Taxpayer.

For example, the leader of the City Council becomes involved in controversies which at times are of no concern to the chief magistrate, and usually end up in renewal of racial religious prejudices, acts which are simply for the acquisition of votes. It is questionable whether a man in a high position should declare himself outside of his office, except on issues dealing chiefly with public administration, which in turn should be conducted justly in the interests of the public as a whole and not in those of a certain group.

Typical of a scene in City Council session, we find an assembly all poised and ready to pounce on any slight discrepancy of the chairman, then a personal conflict ensues, while the august and portly gentleman in the chair takes time to engage in the repartee without bringing about order. Imagine the dignity of board members venting itself in school-boy phraseology as in the example of the retort of a member to the chairman, "You are full of bull." This indeed is a magnificent way to conduct public affairs. That is to be expected of street corner urchins engaged in debate but not of city fathers.

Therefore the indignant alderman who received the letter from the extension course should have felt very flattered that possibilities of his scholastic ability in a course of Public Administration were recognized, and the axiom that no one is too old to learn should hearten the entire City Council, with such an opportunity made available by the University of Toronto Extension Course.

The University of Alberta paper, The Gateway, is the first Canadian college paper to issue a roto-gravure section. The editors promise to make it a regular feature, if popular. The Varsity has at times considered such a section, but the University Press has not the necessary facilities for such an undertaking.

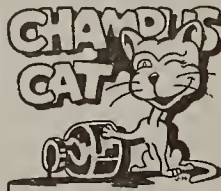

Grist for the Mill

By The Chaff

We notice that the vociferous director of the newly dubbed Vincent Massey Playhouse, has been very definite in maintaining that she will not have an arty theatre. We wonder what particular fear Nancy Pyper has for art.

When the High School Editors convened hereabouts they were told many things concerning poetry which appeared in High School journals. One speaker said that a major proportion could be classed under four general titles: The seasons, the time of day, Nature's beauty and getting up and going to bed. This criticism of Nature as a poetic subject rather upset some of these writers. One replied that after all Nature was about the only thing that one could really consider as beautiful. We would like to take this young fellow down to the eastern waterfront one night to view the oil refinery with its lit up towers and the lights brilliant before a background of dimly defined structure. Or we would like to show him a locomotive with its huge shiny black wheels and the beauty of an engine's intricate design. And many other inspiring sights of our mechanical world are certainly as effective as Nature if you look for them.

ON THE WRITING OF CATS

We have already indicated more than once that the fairly constant flow of contributions to this department has this year been more than gratifying. It is, in fact, our chief delight. We never know when the morning mail will provide us with a surprise package, or more intriguing still, when some retiring bard will dart stealthily into the office or the press, pin his little bauble to the board, and as silently depart. And on the other hand we have no way of telling when all such sources are going to fail and we shall have to sit us down and write a Cat ourselves. As in the present instance.

While the stream of Loc Cits, Jelsabots, Webble Eppes and Psyches, who insist upon remaining anonymous even to us, was at first rather disconcerting (on account of such wits are handy to have on call when you need a column in a hurry), we have become accustomed to the irregularity of their non the less welcome appearances. And even the ever present chance that the next juicy plumb which we reach up to pluck off the notice board will prove to be sour grapes, as unfortunately some do, we appreciate the ambition which prompts them, and look forward never a whit the less to the next mysterious appearance.

Sometimes, however, the task of editing this department is very nearly as worrisome as writing it,—in which (Continued on Page 4)

Hollywood Theatre

The last double bill of French movies for the season presented us with two risque films—one sophisticated and good, the other sentimental and mediocre. Le Chanson de L'Adieu seemed to have improved; it is one of the few films we could see repeatedly without becoming bored. Its highlights are the perfectly orchestrated Chopin music, the restraint in costumes and sets, and the superb cast.

Jean Servais caused the usual fluttering of female hearts which respond to his every smile, but the orchids go to Lucille Le Marchand, whose George Sand was exquisite. She is blessed with a thrilling vibrant voice that makes of her least line an important speech. Most of the co-eds around us wept bitterly as Chopin sent Constanca home but our only feeling was one of envy for the man who managed to win the glamorous novelist for his mistress. Constanca was sweet, devoted, and a self-conscious actress; Chopin and (Continued on Page 4)

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Hart House String Quartet

Saturday's concert by the Hart House String Quartet was a repetition of Friday evening's program with the addition of H. Waldo Warner's Moods. Mr. Warner was the violist of the disbanded London String Quartet whose leader is the new first violin at Hart House.

Moods is a musical account of half a dozen temperamental phases. The names of the moods—Hysterical, Amorous, Conceited—suggest the nature of the music which is sketchy, light-hearted and superficial. It is the English equivalent of Richard Strauss' sophisticated violin and piano sonatas. The quartet seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly though the audience regarded the work with that suspicion always shown toward something new and not patently serious.

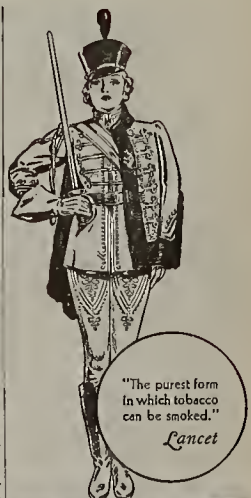

In repetition the Beethoven and Mozart quartets were even more smoothly performed and the contrast more striking. Mr. Levy has clearly made the quartet direct more attention to the composer's intentions. G.H.R.

The Hart House String Quartet will play the following program at 9 p.m. in the Great Hall on Sunday next: Moods Opus 42 ... H. Waldo Warner

VARSITY SENIORS PLAY HAMILTON AT ARENA TO-NIGHT

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By M. D. S.

We hope to see lots of fans out tonight at 7.30 for the big event in Hart House gym when Vic Seniors and St. Hilda's Seniors clash in the first game of the Interfaculty Basketball Finals. Vic Seniors won their position on Friday night when they defeated U.C. Seniors for the second time in the semi-finals. The Saints held a bye, so it is these two squads who will meet tonight for the first time this year. In spite of it being a busy time just now for both colleges the teams certainly would appreciate supporters to encourage them in this important game. So how about turning out and giving your team a hand?

Vic has a strong dependable team and it is sure to be a close and exciting game well worth watching. The Saints have not got as good a team as they had last year but they have done well in their group and have showed lots of fighting spirit. Unfortunately Ellie Wilson hurt her leg at the last practice and will not be playing tonight, which is a tough break for the Saints, but we hope she will be able to play in the second game on Friday night. It is also doubtful if Hazel Brown will be playing for Vic. She got hurt in the semi-finals on Friday night and narrowly escaped having her nose broken. It's hard luck for both teams being disorganized at the crucial time, however, here's hoping both these players will be out again for the last game. This year has been a particularly rough one in basketball with all sorts of minor casualties and we won't be a bit surprised if some other accidents happen tonight.

Tonight Vic is meeting the Medley team in a baseball game at the Little Vic Gym. This year the schedule has been very mixed up and not many games have been played off yet. Both the teams are good, and it promises well for a fast game, so why not go over to the Little Vic Gym after the basketball game now that you have the opportunity of watching a good baseball game?

HAMILTON TIGERS TO MAKE DEBUT IN VARSITY ARENA

Ace Bailey's Sextette Promise Formidable Opposition to Invaders

VARSITY NEEDS WIN

Will Meet Hamiltonians in Fixture for Chance of Third Place

The first appearance of the Hamilton Tigers Senior O.H.A. hockeyists at Varsity Arena will be made tonight as they meet Varsity in a scheduled hockey fixture. With only three games to date the Blue and White puckchasers are within one point of third place and a win over Tigers would more than place Bailey's Boys in the charmed circle.

Last Tuesday night the Varsity cohorts went down fighting before the heavy Toronto Dukes squad after demonstrating some keen competition and only a repetition of such would offset the Tiger attacks. In their last encounter with Hamilton Varsity was decidedly off colour and incurred a bad defeat. However, the Big Blue puckchasers will undoubtedly prove that it was all a mistake when they step out on the ice surface tonight, at least Hamilton will find a formidable opponent.

Of late the University of Toronto sextet have come on immensely, and their fast breaking attacks are finding good results, much to the regret of the opposing goal keepers.

With "Ace" Lenahan coming into his own as pivot man flanked by MacPherson and McClelland, the Blues have gained plenty of drive in their offensive forays, while McIlquham is gaining speed every time out, giving his wings, Valiquette and Ripley, some neat passes, improving play all around. The defensive chores are well looked after by Charles and Jeffery, assisted by "Chuck" Driscoll, while Shipman guards the Blue citadel.

Within sight of the charmed circle in Senior O.H.A. standing the Blue-clad lads are in an aggressive mood for tonight's struggle, and the Hamilton sextet will be ill advised to take their tasks lightly.

O.C.E. OVERWHELM FORESTRY ENTRY

Winners Dominate Throughout to Deliver a Crushing Defeat

O.C.E. swamped Forestry's entry in the interfaculty lacrosse schedule by the overwhelming score of 20-4 in the big gym yesterday afternoon. The O.C.E. dominated the woodcutters, all the way and only the brilliant work of McDonnell in goal stopped the score from assuming greater proportions.

Led by Allison and Coulter the teachers put on a beautiful passing attack which had the losers bewildered. Repeatedly the winners passed the ball around in front of the nets in order to get an open shot and their system worked well as the score indicates. Coulter and Allison turned in some brilliant solo attacks while Greer turned in a good performance against his old team-mates. Mundy got a two-minute rest when he wrapped the stick around Coulter's ear.

O.C.E.: Cozzi, Coulter, Allison, Calderone, Harwood, Laneaster, Greer, Forestry: McDonnell, Mundy, Larson, Cowan, Dargavel, Powell. Referee: Burchell.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George C. Vair

Tonight Ace Bailey's senior hockey crew play their first return engagement with Hamilton Tigers up at the Varsity Arena. On their first trip over to the busy industrial city the striped cats tried to emulate their champion smashing rugby machine and administered an 8-1 defeat to the tackweight Blues but the students maintain that things will be different when they cross sticks tonight.

The presence of a cheerleader might help to organize the small but loyal band of supporters who have been losing their voices rooting for the Blues. Anyone who has seen Ace's men in action will guarantee that nothing is certain in the way of final results until the 50 minutes' playing time is up and a wide-open game is assured. After that plug all you stay-at-home hockey fans should drop in to the Arena and see what you have been missing.

After glancing at interfaculty standings one would think that Victoria College is running a trophy a week campaign with the ultimate ambition of tacking their name on as many cups as possible. With the Jennings Cup and Little trophy already in their possession the Scarlet and Gold lads are out after the Daffoe trophy, emblematic of lacrosse supremacy on the campus. Tomorrow they play their first play-off game with Pharmacy in the big gym with the return game fixed for Thursday. The winner will meet either O.C.E. or Jr. S.P.S. in the finals. The Victorians are hoping to revenge their 1934 defeat when Jr. S.P.S. nosed them out by 1 goal in 3 games last season.

Despite the weather major rugby promises to be the centre of attraction for still another week while the minors threaten to play until the snow gets so deep they will need snowshoes. Hamilton look to be the team for the Canadian Crown after the way they folded up the champions last Saturday. It is all right to play a gentleman's game on the field but it didn't get Sarnia far against the hard tackling Tigers. Ormond Beach made the only really hard tackles of the day for the losers while the Tigers had more than one of the Oilers wobbling after bringing them to a one-point landing on the frozen field.

Southern Methodist University have accepted Stanford's invitation to meet the Stanford Indians in the annual Rose Bowl on New Year's day. This is the first time that a team from the southwest has represented the east against the west in the game of games. Rather a unique situation but the Southern Methodists undoubtedly deserve the bid since they have won 11 consecutive games—rolling up 264 points against 32 for their opponents.

The Hamilton-Winnipeg championship game is to be held in Hamilton, according to the latest reports. A clause in the C.R.U. rules which states that the eastern team can hold the game in their own backyard whether the challengers like it or not is said to be the reason for the decision. Since when was Toronto called hogtown? The 'Peg bosses stated they would prefer to play in Toronto while a bigger gate is a foregone conclusion. However, if you haven't had your fill of rugby drop in at the Stadium Wednesday and see St. Mike's play Peterborough in the O.R.F.U. interscholastic playdowns. The Gaels were forced to come from behind to eke out a 23-22 win over the Peterborough lads on Saturday so the return tilt looks to be a toss-up.

Nearly thirty-five University magazines and newspapers are received by The Varsity, the Exchange Editor said yesterday. The Hungarian Student, printed in four languages, The Nusus, published by the South African Federation of students, The Sydney Recorder, from Australia, The Wellington Reporter from New Zealand, are a few of the papers on exchange from distant places.

From the United States are received The Stanford Daily, The Southern California Trojan, The Daily Texan,

The Minnesota Daily, The Harvard Crimson, and many others.

CANADIAN POETS

HIGHLY COMMENDED

 Scott, was reviewed by Mr. A. E. Jones. "Duncan Scott writes in a clear straightforward manner. His best themes are those in praise of his native land." Mr. Jones quoted Duncan Scott's opinion of his own country. "It is an exquisite fragment of the universe." This collection of poems includes every type of poetry and an atmosphere of peace and solitude pervades the whole book.
 Mr. French made what he called "a literary map" of Canadian fiction from coast to coast. He read a piece of vivid description from "Reindeer Trek" which portrays the struggle of man against the elements of storms, privation and wild animals, in northern Canada.
 A detailed criticism of Cecil Francis Lloyd's collection, "Landfall", was given by Mr. Kingston of Bloor Collegiate.

a confused hum of voices, and once in a while a sudden exclamation—"Hey, look at three on two", or, "Gee, there's a new one, minus four on three." "Gimme those glasses quick, you louse. You've had them long enough." Curiosity overcoming the proprieties, one pushes the door open quietly, and peeks in. And there, sprawled on beds pushed under the windows, lie the cream of the freshman crop, and in their hands the most motley collection of field, opera and spy glasses ever to be collected under one roof. Tactful questioning elicits the following facts:

That the co-eds are catalogued according to their location. Two on two would indicate second floor, second room to the right, numbering from the outer door. This would tend to a more scientific approach, in keeping with the objects under inspection.

That there are some extremely nice samples of maidenhood in Whitney.

That the ladies are very lax re drawing the blinds.

That the lads in Trinity appreciate it. That Llamenes are practically nonexistent, more frilly things being preferred.

Next we find that this pastime is not confined to first year, but is just as popular with the rest of the House. The men as a whole are ardent supporters of the Anti-Leave Society, denouncing bitterly a system that allowed the objects of entertainment, and education, to disappear for hours at a time.

EXTENSION COURSE ATTENDANCE GROWS

ceeded by three or four thousand. The primary function of the Department of University Extension when founded in 1874, was to send members of the staff to various societies and organizations throughout the province for the purpose of lecturing on topics of current interest. The next enterprise was to establish the Teachers' Course, which enables them to take an Arts degree without giving up their profession. Those who live in Toronto and the surrounding district attend evening and Saturday afternoon lectures. Others may attend the summer session after having taken the preparatory correspondence course. Fifteen years ago there were thirty taking this course. Today the registration is over a thousand and includes people of all professions.

Evening classes are open to the general public and demand no entrance requirement. These courses do not lead to any degree. The lectures embrace such subjects as accounting, advertising, economics, industrial and business organization, journalism and the study of languages. In some of the courses enrolment is so large as to necessitate four separate classes.

There is a correspondence course for prospective accountants and for those who take secretarial work. Two year diploma courses in Occupational Therapy and Physiotherapy are conducted by the department. These are growing in popularity and provide new and relatively uncrowded careers for women.

Mr. Dunlop's department also sponsors a weekly radio program consisting of a book review given by Professor J. F. Macdonald of University College. The Publicity Department supplies articles on University topics to magazines and periodicals. Supervision of advertising also comes under their jurisdiction.

There were many factors connected with the rise and strength of Fascism, Mr. Riddell continued, the most important being nationalism. To the Fascist, this is the logical answer to the economic problem. There must be intervention in the interests of all individuals, not any one class in particular.

CHAMPUS CAT

We think old Ignatz will agree. For the critical and revisory faculties of this ex-associate have been interrupted in the midst of an essay more than once this fall (we fear it has been the same essay, now, for quite some weeks—or has the Lamb at last been shorn?) to assist us with the task of deciding what to run and what to hold. Contributors are obliging but not always accommodating. The chief difficulty is the matter of length. Inspiration, as well we know, comes in flashes embarrassingly brief, and a bit of really good verse is more likely to extend for eight or twelve lines than twice that many. But managing editors like Cats to pussyfoot along for at least a third of a column and preferably more,—with the exception of Fridays and Mondays, so when the contributory toddle in by inches we are faced with the task of padding. While this process is sometimes known as giving the copy-proper "a build up", the opposite effect is more often the result.

One of our chief discouragements is the perfectly brilliant idea that comes along dressed up in rhyme decidedly disjointed. It takes an Ogden Nash (or a Mundvult Decipi, doggone his elusive hide) to throw together that peculiar brand of verse which is without sense, metre or reason—without anything, in fact, except an amazing knack of achieving a chuckling good result. The rest of us must scribble doggedly along and make the syllables come out right by sheer will power and an ability to count,—the result, of course, being pure doggerel. By striving for more perfect rhythm and finish, and by packing two or three short bits into the same envelope, voluntary Caters could do a lot to ease the Yorkers' burdened brow.

Finally, there is the touchy question of what is humorous and what isn't. Professor Stephen Leacock has written an entire book on the subject, and while we are looking forward to reading it with enjoyment someday, we doubt whether we will be able to tell you the answer even then. As you may have concluded before now, our slogan in this regard is You never can tell, or When in doubt, try anything once.

George Sand were gloriously alive. Black Eyes was well larded with anachronisms. No young girl of pre-war Europe would have been allowed out of the house in anyone's company without a chaperon; she would be dressed in the simplest of clothes; even piano lessons would be attended by some older person; and no one would think of parading the streets without hat and gloves. Aside from the improbability of the plot the film was entertaining enough. Although a combination of Age of Innocence, Rigoleto and Long Lost Father, its warning probably escaped our sub-debs who yearn more for R.M.C. cadets than the greying banker. Its only effect will be to upset the peace of mind of some strict parents by showing all the pitfalls that bestrew the adolescent's path. General sympathy seemed to be with Tania; we felt that it would have been a pleasure to spank her. The story revolved around Harry Baur, who played the lead with his usual skill. The only really sympathetic character was the music teacher whom Tania marries. We often wondered what a young Adonis of the staff would do if one of his fair pupils threw her arms around his neck and kissed him and we were greatly encouraged by Tania's success with this technique.

mutual missionary exchange. In referring to the work of Kagawa in Japan, Mr. Matthews stated that his work was looked upon as the greatest force undermining the power of Japanese imperialism today, but that officials could not touch him for fear of the terrible cry it would raise in the western world.

Mention was also made of missionary work in India, and in this connection Mr. Matthews spoke against the common idea that there is discrimination between Christian and non-Christian students at Christian universities in that country. If such were the case, an outward adoption of the principles of Christianity would mean the least expensive way of getting a good education; but rumours to this effect have no basis in fact. On the contrary, the conversion to Christianity often entails great sacrifice when the converted one becomes an outcast from his former social group.

ST. MICHAEL'S BACK MODERN ADVERTISERS

Government Falls Before Koerner Forces, but Only by One Vote

GULLIBILITY STRESSED

The government of Premier Scollard was defeated by one vote last night at a session of St. Michael's College Parliament. Contending "That Modern Advertising is Exploiting the Public," the government leader denounced the psychology used in advertisements. By using enticing leads manufacturers force the public to purchase unnecessary and useless products. He cited the cosmetic and drug trades as industries producing goods which do not accomplish their advertised benefits. The premier then referred to public bewilderment at the multiplicity of advertisements claiming individual articles to be the best of their kind.

Opposition Leader Koerner stressed the freedom of the consumer to choose his purchase despite advertising pressure. R. W. Baker, speaking for the government, pointed out that modern advertising took advantage of the consumer's gullibility. Succeeding speakers for the Opposition maintained that ad-

How about it, girls? What do YOU do when you want to have a quiet smoke, in a spare 15 minutes? Do you have to withdraw into a dingy common room, away from all the rest of the masses, or, to show your independence do you just light up wherever you chance to be? A brand new society is speedily gathering momentum on the campus. The Society For Co-ed Common Rooms. The object of this movement is to provide suitable camping grounds for those couples who, having a few moments to spare, wishing to indulge in a weed, and not willing to break up a serious discussion on the last lecture, could retire to one of our rooms, and continue the chat in comparative comfort.

League will be Force in European Politics if it Survives Present Crisis

FALLACY OF ANNEXATION

Education of the Common Man to See Things Clearly Is World Hope

By B. H. Walker

Yesterday afternoon The Varsity's reporter went down in fear and trembling to interview Sir Norman Angell, world-famous advocate of peace and exponent of difficult things in simple terms. Sir Norman, who had just completed an address at the Canadian Club on the simple teaching of practical economics, made, however, no objection to this intrusion on his time, and was very patient with the reporter's somewhat hesitant questions.

The famous author and lecturer, who is at present on a lecture tour of North America, speaking on international affairs, has an astonishing ability to explain the most complicated problems in terms that a child could understand. This clear simplicity is, to quote from a booklet on his works, "an essential part of his philosophy of politics." If anything stable and sound is to be made of the modern world, the common man must be taught to see things clearly, to look at facts as they are, and by reasoning soundly from them to arrive at the truth. This sound statecraft must be based upon sound education; education lies at the root of social security.

Lacking Sir Norman's peculiar gift of clarity, it is almost impossible to explain his theories in a few words, but his comments on several of the present situations can be given. "Do you believe that the League of Nations will continue to be an influence in European affairs?" we asked. Sir Norman (Continued on Page 4)

Residence Lasses Resent Insinuations

Anti-Outing Organization Is Unanimously Rebuked by Co-eds

BETTER THINGS TO DO

The Anti-Outing-for-Whitney-Society, which sprang into existence during the past few days, received a terrific blow to its prestige last night when a canvass of Whitney Hall led to indicting and derogatory remarks being hurled at the executive of the new organization, by the inmates of the august women's residence.

Lury Jane Grabbell, prominent actress and critic, said: "Just another society, the boys have to have some way of inflating their egos, and getting publicity. The Society of Militant Misogynists last year was an example. Residence girls don't make advances to men—they don't have to."

The society seemed rather pointless to Molly Stevens. Its charges were unfounded in the first place. Residence girls as a class do not go out after 8.30, she said. "Why should we, when we have so many more interesting ways of spending our time? Early in the evening the girls don their pyjamas and have cocoa parties, often with the (Continued on Page 4)

'FOLLIES' REPETITION DURING NEXT TERM

The Performance will be Especially for Alumni but Students May Attend

RAE ENTHUSIASTIC

The University College Follies—"the greatest show since the Barber of Seville," according to Bernie Shaffer—will likely be presented again in January in Hart House Theatre, it was learned last night.

This hilarious production of Sauvage and all his histrionic aides at U.C., with its chorines and "take-offs" on the faculty, will be sponsored by the Alumni Association specifically for graduates but there is a possibility that undergraduates will be allowed in to see the show of the year, Dick Bell, chairman of the Alumni committee looking after the arrangements for the second production of the Follies, stated. "Our plans are still very tentative but we have high hopes of holding the show again in January," Bell said. "And we hope we will be able to include students of the University as well as the graduates for whom it will be primarily presented."

Saul Rae was enthusiastic last night at the possibility of presenting this year's Follies on the campus again. It had been rumoured for several days that the tremendously successful production would be again shown here and sponsorship by the Alumni Federation solved any problems that faced the Follies executive.

STUDENTS FAVOUR CO-EDUCATIONAL SMOKING ROOM

A Few Dissent from General Point of View in Some of the Colleges

ST. MICHAEL'S FAVOURABLE

Possibility Foreseen of it Being Detrimental to Studies of Students

By John Springer

There has been a rumour around the campus during the last couple of weeks about the coming institution of a common room for members of both sexes, where the men and women could gather together between classes and after school hours as the men do now in their own Hart House Common Rooms. With this in mind, The Varsity's inquiring reporter went out on the campus inquiring at random. The opinions expressed were as diverse as they were frank.

Clarice Hughes, Larry O'Connor, Leslie Brennan, Midge Shaw, Elizabeth Leitch, Jack Minsky, I. Grandstein and Thelma Thompson, all of U.C., were wholeheartedly in favour of the room. Miss Hughes and Grandstein, however, thought such a room would be detrimental to studies. The temptation of such a room might be too great to resist and attendance at the library would fall off. However, (Continued on Page 4)

Wallace Describes Modern Greece

Revolutions a Natural Feature Though Rather Like Comic Opera

POOR CONDITIONS IN CAIRO

Characterizing the recent Greek revolutions as "comic opera affairs," Principal Wallace of University College, speaking at the U.C. Literary and Athletic Society last night, gave his observations of modern Greece and the remnants of the old culture he saw in a recent visit to the eastern Mediterranean.

"The governments of Greece are generally corrupt and revolutions seem to be the natural state of the country today," Principal Wallace stated. "But there is a certain comic atmosphere about these revolutions which flare up every now and again."

"If you gentlemen have any doubts you are not the pampered children of fortune visit the near east and see the condition under which thousands of people there are living," Principal Wallace said. "In Cairo there are innumerable humans living without housing accommodation and sufficient food."

WOMEN'S PRESS CLUB HOLOS WORK MEETING

Poems ranging in subject matter and style from delicate lyrics on love, to an imitation of the metaphysical school on the death of Charles Kingsford-Smith featured the work meeting of the University Women's Press Club yesterday afternoon.

The recent five piano recital was described in a light musical way, but the highlight of the afternoon was the outpouring of a jilted feminine heart on the theme—"Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned."

PROFESSOR MORGAN ALSO AGREES CANADA MUST WATCH HER STEP

Question of Peace or War Ought to be Decided by Those Affected

ONLY "RIOELL" PROPOSAL

International Importance of Canadian Action Must not be Exaggerated

Mr. Escott Reid, a member of the National Council of the League of Nations Society in Canada, said he found it somewhat embarrassing to comment on Mr. Lapointe's declaration since it meant he would be intervening in a controversy between the immediate past-president of the Society, Mr. Lapointe, and the present president, Sir Robert Falconer. On this occasion he was on the side of the practical politician, Mr. Lapointe.

"Let us be careful not to exaggerate the immediate international importance of the Canadian government's action. It is perhaps significant that Mr. Lapointe's statement did not reach the front page of yesterday's New York Times. It was relegated to three-quarters of a column on page twelve."

"Secondly, before anyone gives his opinion on Mr. Lapointe's statement I think he should ask himself whether he is in favour of Canada participating in the application of military sanctions against Italy today or Germany tomorrow. If he is opposed to Canada's participation in military sanctions or in war overseas then he should give general support to Mr. Lapointe's statement, though he may criticize the Liberal Government for its failure to make the statement earlier or to make it more precise and unequivocal once it had been given."

"Up to last Sunday Canada was drifting into participation in the next war. Apparently neither the general public nor the Canadian government realized it. Mr. Lapointe's statement has changed all that. It has increased the possibility of our remaining out of (Continued on Page 3)

Economically Oil Embargo of Little Importance to Canada

NO POSITIVE EXPLANATION

Liberals Wish to Support League but Must Think of Quebec

The repudiation by the Canadian government of the oil embargo against Italy as proposed by Dr. Riddell at Geneva, can be viewed only as a development to which no positive explanation can yet be offered, according to Dr. L. T. Morgan of the Economics Department.

Any discussion concerning the justification of the move is based on the assumption of a common interest and while economically, the oil embargo means little to Canada, from a political point of view the application of sanctions is not regarded with a uniform attitude in this country. Obviously Quebec, which desires no participation at all in European political movements, and which strenuously opposed conscription during the war, is not in favour of the oil sanction proposed by the Canadian representative and does not wish to become involved where a danger of war exists. The fact that the new government has six cabinet ministers who are French-Canadian, will mean much in keeping Canada from any entanglement in military (Continued on Page 3)

EXODUS OF HEBREWS DESCRIBED BY CURRELY AT ORIENTAL SOCIETY

Introduced by Dr. Winnett as a "ghoul," Dr. C. T. Currely in his lecture to the Orientals Society on "Sinai" last night at Knox College, discussed the exodus of the Hebrews from Egypt and the characteristics of the country through which they passed.

Of the many theories as to the date of the Exodus, Dr. Currely prefers that of Dr. McCurdy, late professor emeritus of the Orientals department of University College. According to this theory the Hebrews left Egypt during the Philistia invasion which may be poetically called plagues.

Mighty Males Debate Divorce Let The Fair Sex Join Discourse

Rumours about the forthcoming debate of the U.C. Parliament seem to indicate a very interesting session, with the subject just a trifle risqué. Hart Buck obliged with the following information regarding the female question. "Not only is it possible that women will be admitted," stated Mr. Buck, "but it is also possible that members of the W.U.A. will be given a chance to express their opinion on the question of freer divorces and more restricted marriages that will be before the house."

After hearing this, it was up to your reporter to find out what the fair sex thought of tomorrow's debate. What's the cause of all the hub-bub? Well, at the U.C. Parliament tomorrow the motion before the house will be "Resolved that this House favours freer Divorces and Restrictions on Marriage," and already rumblings are being heard of the storm which will probably break out at the meeting.

"Does E. M. Shortt, the prime minister, intend to recommend an increase of companionate marriage? (tsk, tsk)—does he intend to make a Reno out of our fair and respectable city (goody goody, or oh horrors, depending on who you are)—and what does he mean by 'Restrictions on Marriage'?—Will the presence of women hinder the parliamentarians from expressing themselves?"

These and many other questions are being asked around the campus as the student body eagerly expects one of the most colourful debates in U.C. history. Meanwhile there is a rumour circulating that the parliament will be addressed by a noted authority on the question, probably Peggy Hopkins Joyce.

Wanted--Support

We are proud to refer frequently to our University as "the largest in the British Empire" but there are times when size becomes a distinct disadvantage. Our activities are so many and so varied that we are unable to give any one of them the support it deserves.

This is a fact most strikingly illustrated by the reception given by the various Universities to the Women's Intercollegiate Debate which is taking place this week. In the smaller Universities this debate is one of the big events of the year and everybody attends it. The debaters are made to feel that they are working for the honour of the college just as much as does the Rugby team, and they are confident in the whole-hearted support of their fellow-students. In Toronto the participants in any debate, intercollegiate or otherwise, are greeted by a pathetically small audience consisting chiefly of their own friends.

Even the Hart House debate held last week, which if any debate is interesting, should have been of great interest to the whole student body, was very poorly attended. Votes were cast by little more than a hundred men and the total attendance, exclusive of the women who were so grudgingly admitted, was not much more. Such an attendance in a University of this size is a disgrace.

A display of indifference like that is particularly unfortunate when another University is involved. It is discouraging when our own activities are not supported, but when representatives from other Universities are witnesses of our apathy it is not only discouraging but decidedly detrimental to our reputation.

Criticism is frequently levelled at the women for their lack of interest in political matters. In the forthcoming debate they are about to prove that they are interested in the government of their country. If all the critics come out to hear then there will be a capacity audience in Trinity College Library Friday night. But the critics are invariably the ones who stay home.

The difficulty of having several functions at the same time is impossible to obviate in a large University. There are, however, a great many people who never support anything. It is time they woke up if only to vindicate their University in the eyes of the outsiders who are watching us.

Prophets We?

The following prophetic editorial appeared in The Varsity last February when C. R. Ellis was editor-in-chief. In view of the subsequent developments which are forecast in the editorial we take the liberty to reprint it.

Abyssinia is the only country in Africa today that is wholly independent of foreign control, although even now Europe is nibbling at her borders. Liberia claims to be a black republic, but unfortunately she has had to sell out to rubber interests in order to bolster her exchequer; while Egypt is fretting under a nominal independence that does scarcely more than say it, for England still feels she must control affairs as long as she has her interests in the Suez.

Recent events have shown that on some pretext or other Italy may try to gain a further foothold in this part of Africa, not being content with Eritrea and Somaliland, where both Britain and France have ceded territory to the aspirant nation from the Mediterranean. There may be two reasons for this advance: Italy wants to expand and give vent to national feeling in acquiring this empire that defeated her so ignominiously a few decades ago; or she is taking the brunt of the feared Japanese advance into this part of the world.

However, we are not immediately interested in Italy's motives, but rather in the affair as it presents itself from Abyssinia's point of view. Supposing that again Italy were forestalled in her aspirations? Even if not, she would still have a seething nationality under foot, ready to boil over at any moment. But if there is an invasion, and Abyssinia should rise to repel it, what then?

Ethiopia has a long and glorious history, and a history partly made of legends is even more dangerous in the hands of a people than one cut and dried like those of modern Europe. Africa is awakening, awakening from a drowse of centuries to find her hands tied. Here is one great nation still not conquered, having the banner of freedom thrust into her hands. Will she take it?

Nominally Christian, Abyssinia has sufficient Moslem population to be significant. All Islam is chafing that the chosen of Allah should be in bondage to the infidel. Once given a cause hopeful enough and the fire would sweep over the Soudan to all Africa north of the Equator with strong possibilities that it turn south as well towards and past the Congo.

For Europe such a conflagration would be awful. Europe has not been a kind master and should be a little sorry now. Perhaps nothing will happen after all, but yet there is the possibility that it may. But there are only the alternatives of either absolutely helotizing the continent, which is well nigh impossible, or of being kinder, of being rather partners than slave drivers in this vast region that is just beginning to rub its eyes and wonder if everything is all right in the world about it.

Pharaoh's Curse

"Dr. James H. Breasted, famed Egyptologist, who exposed himself to the so-called 'curse' upon violators of Pharaoh's tomb, died recently from a blood infection of a kind hitherto unrecognized by the medical profession". This item tucked away in the corner of one of our daily papers was given the attention that people believe it deserves. The reaction of the general public to this bit of news—those who read it—was the same as it always has been. King Tut's Curse has again been called "newspaper nonsense", "Bold balderdash", or "typical tommyrot". Know-all humanity, sure of its position, has challenged that which the senses cannot perceive.

The history of King Tut's Curse is too well known to be again related. Many who have answered the ancient challenge have died strange and mysterious deaths. Natural explanations are sought and apparently cannot be found. The possibility of supernatural influence is pooh-poohed. Yet all who enter the ancient crypts depart from this world as if an invisible hand has withdrawn them from mortal existence. The inhabitants of the ancient district steer shy of this inexplicable reality. If they have an explanation they do not admit it, and some daring soul goes down into those mysterious depths, sojourns 'twixt eerie walls from which emanates the ghostliness of mythical memory, and ascends to the light of day, doomed to death or destruction. And we wise ones, thousands of miles away, throw out our chests and say, "He would have died in any case."

Professors at Harvard have formed a union. There are forty-one members, headed by Professor J. Raymond Walsh of the economics department. The purposes of the organization are "to reduce the segregation of teachers from the rest of the workers, to preserve and extend academic freedom; to oppose discrimination on the grounds of race, or of social, religious, economic, political opinions or activities; and to resist all efforts to reduce the amount and quality of education in the country."

Finding that he was unable to take notes as fast as the professor talked, a student at Loyola University in New Orleans brought a stenographer to class with him and had her take the lecture in shorthand.

The head of the zoology department at St. Mary's is conducting a fervid hunt for lice, in order to continue research studies. What is more, the lice must not be of the "human" variety, but must be collected from the bodies of bats.

GRIST FOR THE MILL

By The Chaff

Did you ever stop to think that after a dance in Hart House the place is clean and normal next morning? After the Follies last Friday night which ended at two o'clock the staff of Hart House shifted all the furniture back, changed all the fancy lights, swept all the floors and generally had the place looking calm by the time we arrived Saturday morning. We think they deserve a big hand.

We highly resent the reticence of our professors. They refuse to give out their ideas on pertinent questions after a hard working reporter has trailed them all over the campus. After all they are supposed to know considerably more than most other people on a great many questions and their opinion is awaited by a large number of interested students.

We tacitly assume that the Bohist propaganda will gain little credence in the minds of intelligent males with no other grounds for argument than the inability of an inexperienced, presumptuous youth to get to first base.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Victoria Dramatic Society

The Victoria Dramatic Society produced C. Morley's "East of Eden", directed by Frank Hemingway, at Hart House yesterday afternoon. It was good entertainment chiefly through the comedy of the dialogue. The arrival of a baby in the household of Cain and his wife Jenny (short for Genesis) comes as a considerable shock to both them and Adam and Eve, and provides the audience with a good deal of amusement. No attempt was made apparently to vary the tempo of the play. It gave the impression of leading up to something that didn't happen at all. (Continued on Page 4)

IN DEFENSE OF RADIO ADVERTISING

Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir:

Many editorials appearing in The Varsity have expressed points of view on which I did not agree but I take particular exception to the article of Tuesday, Dec. 3rd, in which it is advocated that our radio system should be developed along the lines of the B.B.C. rather than the commercialized American networks.

The author apparently looks with favour upon newspaper, magazine and billboard ads but turns his nose up at radio advertising. What good do we (Continued on Page 4)

EXHIBITED FOR SALE

His etchings are real pearls and some of his portraits attract us by the wonderful charm reflected in the treatment of the faces.

Journal de Bruxelles

The style of this young master contains the richness of different ancient schools but never abandons the clear manner of composition of that great Hungarian realistic school the representative master of which is Munkacsy, master of bituminous half-light and heavy velvet tonalities. But Hornyansky paints his portraits in that everlasting style of Renaissance masters; the purity of his line, the dramatic accent in opening wide the background of his canvases are according to classical traditions. HARD HITTING HAMILTONIANS OVERWHELM BLUE PUCKSTERS

Tigers Splurge in Last Period to Crush Varsity Hopes with Third Defeat

McCLELLAND STARS

Game is Featured by Close Checking and Rather Rough Play

By Frank Lambert

A hard checking, fast skating Hamilton sextet thwarted the Blue and White senior hockey endeavours for third place last night by gaining a 9-4 verdict over the hapless Blue team at Varsity Arena. Outside of a few brilliant plays, one of which was the stellar effort of the night when the peerless Jimmy MacPherson baffled the whole Tiger squad to score a beautiful goal on Teno, the game was featured by close checking and wild altercations between players, turning the senior hockey fixture into a rousing bout.

Throughout the game the Hamilton sextet took full advantage of scoring chances and made very few mistakes in parking the rubber disc into the Varsity nets, while the Blue men were a little erratic in getting scoring chances away, although their fast passing plays were well in evidence. The final canto saw six goals go by the rival citadel guardians with a grand total of thirteen markers scored for the game.

At the very outset the Big Blue team went on the attack and within one minute McClelland netted on a pass from Ripley, beating Teno neatly. Hamilton sent up a three man passing attack and gave Shipman many anxious moments until Williamson scored the first counter for the Tigers. Not satisfied the Hamilton squad kept up the pressure and slammed two more past Shipman before the Blue men made a comeback. On a brilliant rush Charles closed right in on Teno and a fast past from Lenahan to MacPherson resulted in the second Blue score. "Gooney" McGowan, Hamilton centre man, saved a perfect Blue scoring chance when he tripped Jeffrey who had Teno at his mercy. Although Hamilton were playing a man short they were able to turn aside the Varsity threats.

The middle stanza found Hamilton still pressing hard, keeping the Varsity offensive thrusts well in check and even when Teno lost his stick, the Varsity attack around the Hamilton nets was well covered. The close checking tactics of the Hamilton team made play rather drab at times. Right after Chisholm and "Red" Farrell scored for the Bengal squad Varsity tried hard to come within hailing distance

VIC BASKETEERS DOWNED BY SAINTS

First Game of Finals Series Settled to Close Tune of 14-12

PLAY TRIFLE SLOPPY

In the first of the final games of the women's interfaculty basketball series, St. Hilda's Seniors managed to better the other competitor for the title, Victoria Seniors, by a score of 14-12 last night at Hart House. Both teams fought desperately throughout the game but play on both sides was sloppy, especially in the latter part. St. Hilda's was without the services of Ellen Wilson, who was slightly injured at the last practice, and who has been doing outstanding work for the team all season.

The play in the first half of the game was sloppy and rather slow, with neither squad being able to break away from their checks. The Scarlet and Gold aggregation seemed to have the edge on their opponents at the beginning, although at the end of the period the score was a tie. The passing of the Vic team was excellent, and was far superior to that of the Blue and White squad. The Saints couldn't get near but to no avail. Normie McClelland made a clever rush, laying a pass in front of Teno, but no score resulted and Varsity went off the ice trailing by 5-2.

Freshened by the rest the Blue team came out fighting for final hostilities, presenting a new citadel guardian in Owen, and within two minutes of play Ripley put on the red light behind Teno. However, Hamilton again countered with Chisolm and Primeau combining. The best rush of the night was made by "Gentleman" Jimmie MacPherson when he pivoted by the Hamilton rearguard to easily beat Teno. From then on the Hamilton sextet began to show no favour to the new Varsity goal tender, bombarding the net, and they rang up three more scores from the sticks of Apps, McGowan and Mackie, and they skated off the ice with a 9-4 win over a valiant Blue squad.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crockower

Acc Bailey's pucksters are still looking for their first victory m'lads and unless they use different methods they'll not be rewarded. You really can't score that extra goal or two which means victory unless you first learn to shoot. Poor shooting cost the Blues many goals last night and unless they find the range pretty soon they're going to repeat last season's performance. Then again some of the lads might help those fellows on the squad who really are in there all the time and giving their best if they'd pass the puck to open wings.

Due to yesterday's cold spell there was a falling off in attendance but the faithful kept up the cheering in remarkable fashion. The Engineers were particularly boisterous last night, even going as far as trying to steal the press seats. However, a few persuasive words, coupled with quite a number of hearty shoves saved the day for the reporters.

Just a few rambling notes . . . Play started lightning fast . . . before anyone could get settled comfortably McClelland took McIlquham's pass to score the first of thirteen counters . . . Blues playing tight defensive hockey . . . Chisholm waltzed through Varsity's defence but Shipman made a nice save . . . Ripley obliged Williamson by batting in the latter's rebound to tie the score . . . Primeau put the red light on with a shot from the side, Shipman looked weak on that one . . . Mackie bounced right in a few seconds later to get Hamilton's third counter . . . Charles, on a nice rush but Teno outguessed him. MacPherson batted in the rebound though and Teno is forgiven . . . Farrell off for tripping Ripley. Blue power play fails to dent Tigers' stonewall defence . . . Charles sailed into Hoch and the third echoed and re-echoed through the Arena . . . McGowan off for tripping McClelland and Teno plays beautifully to keep the Blues out . . . end of period, Hamilton 3, Varsity 2.

Second period . . . Williamson to Chisholm pass opened the scoring . . . Shipman didn't cover himself with glory on that goal . . . Blues palling 'Teno without results . . . McGowan to Farrell scored Tigers' fifth goal . . . Hamilton bottling up the Blues inside Varsity's blue line . . . Hedges, the ref, is pretty lenient . . . Charles boarded Farrell right in front of Hedges and received no penalty . . . Hamilton using a very effective short passing system . . . too much checking and as a result game getting to be like shinny . . . Charles boarded Radke and still no penalty . . . Jeffrey sailed into Chisholm and sent the Tiger star sailing through the air and still no penalty . . . Chisholm deliberately tripped MacIlquham with Hedges looking on and still no penalty . . . end of period, Hamilton 5, Varsity 2.

Third stanza . . . McClelland battling hard. What a team we'd have if we could find seven or eight more McClellands! . . . Ripley shot home McClelland's pass . . . 5-3, there's some hope left . . . fans urging the Blues on . . . Shipman and Mackie played around with the puck for one-half minute or so before the Blue netman decided to fall on it . . . Primeau passed the bootheel through the Blue defence to give Mackie a clear shot which made the score 6-3 . . . pretty hopeless now . . . MacPherson sailed through the Tiger defence and beat Teno . . . oh boy 6-4, come on Varsity! . . . Radke looked bad on MacPherson's goal and was yanked immediately . . . gosh it's cold in here, burrrrr . . . Farrell sent off for tripping MacIlquham but the Blues' power play was just a joke due to very weak shooting . . . Apps sailed past Charles to beat Shipman . . . McClelland on for Charles in a last-minute attempt . . . as a result Blue defence goes sky high and McGowan and Mackie rap home two quick goals . . . 9-4 . . . what a night for Shipman.

Varsity Beavers will have the opportunity of chalking up the first Blue and White hockey victory of the season when they meet the Hinde and Dauch squad in the second game of tonight's T.H.L. Major series double-header. Both squads are victorious to date. In the first game Tely Royals and Royal Yorks, both undefeated as yet, tangle for the group leadership.

With the regular interfaculty lacrosse schedule completed last week the play-offs get under way this afternoon when O.C.E. and Jr. S.P.S. meet in the first of a two game series for their group leadership. The second game will be played on Friday. The semi-finals, also a two game series between Vic and the Jr. S.P.S.-O.C.E. winner, will get under way next Monday.

Contrary to previous reports there will not be a senior basketball game at Hart House on Friday. The Blues were originally supposed to meet Broadview Y on Thursday but decided to shift the game to Friday to build up the attendance for the girls' basketball finals which were scheduled for that evening. However, Broadview refused to play on Friday as the schedule calls for them to play on the following day at Broadview Y. Consequently the opening of the basketball season at Hart House has been postponed until next Tuesday.

OTTAWA'S OIL STAND SEEN AS WAR CHECK

the next war—though it is still highly probable we shall be in it up to our necks. In other words, Mr. Lapointe's statement has checked the speed with which Canada was drifting into war.

"The Canadian government—both this present one and the preceding one—are apparently anxious that Canada should not become involved in military sanctions or war overseas. It was therefore highly dangerous for the impression to get abroad that the Canadian government was proposing an embargo on coal and oil. That embargo may provoke Italy to war. If Canada is responsible for its imposition the Canadian government would, to say the least, be in a somewhat embarrassing position when it declared that it was not going to participate in the military sanctions of the League made necessary by Italian military reprisals against the League embargo on coal and oil.

"Canada, if she wants to keep out of military sanctions or war, ought to sit in a back seat at Geneva when economic sanctions are being discussed. "The Canadian government is to be congratulated on its announcement, but it should be censured for not making it a month ago when Dr. Riddell first made his proposal. It should have been made clear from the beginning that Dr. Riddell was acting solely in his personal capacity as a member of a League Committee and not as representative of the Canadian government. For the action of the Canadian government on Sunday has been misinterpreted just as Dr. Riddell's action of November 2nd has been misinterpreted. The latter has been incorrectly called a "Canadian" proposal, when it was only a "Riddell" proposal. The former has incorrectly been called "re-pudiation", when it is merely "clarification". Many people have misinterpreted both these actions out of their ignorance. Others have done so deliberately for reasons of politics—international and national.

"I really must apologize for saying anything at all on this subject. I have a strong feeling that when an issue concerns in any way Canadian participation in a future war, the only people who should be allowed to express their views are those liable to conscription under the Military Service Act—single men, between 1, think, nineteen and thirty-four. I count my lucky stars I am not a member of this class of unfortunate."

sanctions.

Dr. Morgan believes that the Liberal party wants Canada to remain a member of the League of Nations without war and that military sanctions will not be supported without ratification by parliament. The proposal of an oil embargo brings Canada to the fore in League action and this might be interpreted as a warlike act and as a support of military measures. It is no new thing for the Liberal party to oppose war complications and before the recent election both Liberal and Conservative parties insisted that Canada should not be involved in war without consent of parliament.

Dr. Riddell's proposal of an oil embargo was regarded by Dr. Morgan as being consistent with Dr. Riddell's position as a member of the Council of Eighteen and not as a statement of Canadian attitude. As Dr. Morgan termed it, the resulting situation is a "tempest in the tea-pot".

U.C. AND KNOX VOLLEYBALL VICTORS

U.C. Defeats Teachers for Fourth Straight Win;
Wycliffe Routed

University College took their fourth straight volleyball victory at Hart House yesterday afternoon, trimming the College of Education team by 15 to 6 and 15 to 11 scores. In an earlier match Knox, by noosing out Wycliffe 15 to 10 and 15 to 13, remained in the running for their group championship.

The smartly uniformed U.C. team coasted to a 15-6 victory in the first game when O.C.E. failed to disorganize the red and white's methodical play. However, there is a different story to tell of the second encounter, when the college was forced to recover from a listless start to top the teachers 15-11.

Captain David, with his well-placed drives, and Damsky stood out for U.C., while Doug Lancaster's peppery play led the O.C.E. drive to stave off elimination.

At three o'clock the Knox College crew defeated Wycliffe in two straight games by the close margins of 15-10,

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By M. D. S.

The first game of the interfaculty basketball finals was decidedly disappointing. The play was slow due mainly to the many faults called and neither team showed up well. The Saints just managed to pull through with a 14-12 lead and judging by the play last night it looks as though the final game on Friday night might go to either team. In the first half the shooting was wild, ending in a 3-all tie. The play speeded up in the second half and the Saints piled up a 13-6 lead which they were unable to hold in the last quarter when Vic began piling up a score but they were not able to draw ahead of the Saints' small advantage.

Many points were scored more by luck than good judgment and the free shots for the fouls helped both teams to score. Edie Ardagh and Mary MacDonald each got 7 of the Saints' points and were quick on the passing, though close checking on the part of Betty Jenkinson and Hazel Brown did not give them much opportunity for shooting. Erna Laing starred for Vic on the forward line, scoring 5 points, and Maisie Cowan was right in there all the time though she found it hard to dodge Kay Grubbe, star guard for the Saints' team.

The dancing classes at the Lilian Massey are coming on well and everyone is showing great enthusiasm, especially in practising tap dancing at odd moments in odd places. The baseball game between Vic and the Medley team was cancelled last night but will be played off eventually in the near future.

15-13. Knox and the Emmanuel theologs will meet on Thursday next, with a victory for the United Churchmen bringing the group championship.

Senior School defaulted to the undefeated Medical Seniors, the latter having previously clinched first place in their division.

George Johnson, as Adam, hobbled about the stage in a truly grandfatherly manner. One of the better moments was when he subsided on a stump, remarking that he was having trouble with his Rib. Leith Fergusson, as Cain's wife, did well in the part of the respectful, little daughter-in-law. The play did not attempt to explain the problem of exactly where Cain found a woman to marry. Good acting was also evident in the parts of Eve (Helen Carscadden) and Adam (Rex Boyd). I.J.G.

SIMPLICITY STRESSED FOR ALL EDUCATION

man replied that the Italo-Ethiopian conflict has put the League to the test. If it succeeds here, he said, its influence should become increasingly strong but if it fails, its power is ended. In connection with the Italian problem, Sir Norman stressed the fallaciousness of the universally accepted doctrine that the annexing of colonies or seizing of other property can in any way benefit the taker. There can be no actual transfer of property; one cannot take over trade or markets by the mere fact of conquest; yet this theory is so firmly believed that it sends nations to war.

Asked whether he considered that popular problems, Social Credit, to be economically sound, Sir Norman smiled and commented simply: "Well, I notice that the people in Alberta don't seem to be getting their twenty-five dollars a month." Which seemed fairly conclusive.

Sir Norman's power of making truths which no one has ever, apparently, noticed before, seem absolutely obvious, is rather awe-inspiring, but it certainly carries conviction. We came away determined to read every one of his books, and convinced that, the books once read, all the social and economic problems in the world would be solved, like the acrobat's feat, "with the greatest of ease."

STUDENTS FAVOUR SMDKING ROOM

Grandstein added that it would be the best means of getting rid of the Date Bureau, where one can't see who he is getting.

Jocelyn Ritchie, A. Zaldin and Kitty Guest, however, are definitely not in favour of such a place. Miss Ritchie has a good time as it is, and supposes her attitude arises from being at a private school before she came to U.C. Zaldin says the girls have their own rooms and the men don't need the company. Bill Bowlen said it would be a swell place to sleep.

At Victoria, the students were very coy about giving opinions, but of the few that would commit themselves, R. Taylor, Evelyn Campbell, Mary Harshaw, Miriam McCormack, Bill White and Bruce Howell were in favour. Both Miss Taylor and Howell thought that such a move would be the end of the Date Bureau and of Diana Sweets on Bloor Street. However, White thought that it would be likely to keep many from their work. Howell thought possibly it might bring the campus, which is so spread, closer together.

The idea of such a common room was widely favoured at St. Mike's, both on the men's campus and at St. Joseph's. Joe Connolly says, "There's no telling what a thing like that might lead to." Nonie Hallinan agreed with him. Hugh Marks says, however, that as far as he's concerned there's no need for such a room. Dan Egan says such a common room would be an "uncommon idea", but much better than hanging around back porches.

At Trinity, the only Saints to speak their mind were Eunice Green, Celestine Lowndes and Veronica Caldwell.

CORRESPONDENCE

get out of printed advertising? It is true that it does serve the purpose of the advertiser and some ads are even made artistically attractive but I am sure that very few people get real enjoyment out of printed advertising. In the other hand every cent spent in radio advertising goes toward providing entertainment for the listening public and only if the entertainment is sufficiently good to build up and maintain a large listening audience is the advertising continued.

Canada stands half-way between England and the United States in the field of radio. Anyone who has compared the programs of England and of America would without a doubt advise us not to forsake commercial radio in favour of government-provided entertainment. The programs of the American airways are of much higher calibre than those of England and this is witnessed by the fact that the radio is far less important in England, for fewer people own them and even those who do not use them half as frequently.

There are many spheres where I think government intervention desirable and even necessary but certainly not in the field of entertainment. The commercial programs of this continent have brought to the listening audience a wealth and variety of talent such as a government unit could never produce. In addition the commercial continuity is more and more shortened and woven into the program so that there is less cause for irritation on this score.

It is a well known fact that several only average Canadian entertainers who could not make any headway in the U.S. were absolute hits in England. The reason for this is apparent—the entertainment of England is not as satisfactory to the radio listeners as that of this continent.

I realize that the consideration of what is "good" entertainment in a controversial one, but I do not believe that the programs of the American networks were coarse or lowbrow. All programs are very carefully censored by the networks.

If we let radio in Canada remain commercialized we can always be sure that advertisers will compete to provide us with the very finest talent available presented in the best possible manner—and if it becomes a government unit, well, I can still listen to entertainment from across the line.

acquired that name after the Arab conquest, which was accompanied by the removing of the relics from the old monastery to that of St. Catharine, near the present mountain at Gebel Musa, the speaker indicated.

The country in general is desolate and mountainous. The natives are for the most part uninclined to work very hard. They wear garments which resemble a "nightie" with sleeves reaching to the ground. A sheepskin with the hind legs tied around the neck is shifted with the wind.

tin Board. We have heard this statement from a lot of people but funny as it may seem they are all people who: 1. have never worked on The Varsity; in fact, who do not work much at all; 2. have done their best to get publicity for themselves but have not always been able to get favourable publicity. There are other reasons but we will not print them. The Varsity is the most important unifying factor on the campus. That is a bit hackneyed if you can hackney the truth. But the fact remains that the daily paper has a most important function in this University, college and faculty ridden as it is. This is true, to be sure, and a point fully realized by most of the University, at least all those who count.

their diaphragm, the tumultuous centre of emotion and sentiment has invariably been found on the left side—and that is the crux of the matter.

When the gentleman encircles the fair one's form with his right arm, its just a hug. But when his left hand steals around the maiden's waist and she feels his heart pounding madly against her right shoulder blade—where, oh where, breathes the maiden could resist? (With due allowances for time, place and temperature).

We are reminded of a certain boxer who won an intercollegiate title with a straight left who never got anywhere with his girl friend until he developed a left hook around the waist. He proved a right cross to be of practically no use but found the absence of a referee gave him untold liberty in the clinches.

There is something to be said in favour of Neitherrism but this method necessitates a lot of road-work which prevents it becoming popular.

With regard to the Bathist plan, we very much doubt the feasibility of riding a femme around on the handlebars of a bicycle—especially since the streets have become slippery. Firstly, it puts the girl in an embarrassing and uncomfortable position, and secondly, no girl wants to look like a messenger boy's sweetheart.

Anyway its against the law, and the Tely's Sideliner contributes the following:

"Daisy, Daisy, look where you're going, do, I'll go crazy if they get the law on you; We haven't yet got a million so we can't afford a pillion, And we'd look swell in an iron-celled cell

For a bicycle ride by two."

However, with the football season nearly over, this pedalling idea is a godsend in the matter of sales-talk to the purveyors of la—ees.

enough to ball to be at all effective. In the final half of the tussle, Edie Ardagh and Marg MacDonald of St. Hilda's went on a scoring orgy and piled up eight points in a row, while the Victorians lagged away behind. At three quarter time the St. Hilda's players were seven points ahead of their rivals. In the next quarter it was Vic's turn to be brilliant, and Marge Leslie managed to break through the strong defence of St. Hilda's and score two pretty shots, in practically as many seconds. However, very little time was left for Victoria to rally completely, and when the final whistle blew St. Hilda's was two points ahead of the Scarlet and Gold, with a score of 14-12.

St. Hilda's: Edie Ardagh (7), Marg MacDonald (7), Isobel Wallbridge, Kay Grubbe, Mary Dignam, Helen Burnham, Jack Whiteside, Kay Hayes, Laing (5), Marge Leslie (4), Myrtle Victoria: Maisie Cowan (4), Erna Robb, Louise Pryor, Betty Jenkinson, Hazel Brown, Sheila Brown, and Ruth Leavens.

HYPNOTIC COURSE

During a recent psychology lecture at Emory University, an instructor hypnotized a student for demonstration purposes and afterward was unable to bring him out of it by normal treatment. Exercises and activity were prescribed for the victim, and after three days of being walked around the campus and taken for rides, he suddenly blinked and asked what had happened.

Let's Go Places

Loew's—

For three weeks we have been seeing trailers of "Mutiny on the Bounty", for the last week we have been reading advertisements about it, and last night we saw the show. It was worth seeing and so many other people also seemed to enjoy it, yet by the time they have all sent their friends to see it, it will probably have been held over for a second week.

In "Mutiny on the Bounty" Hollywood has undertaken to film an "epic" and while they have done remarkably well with it, the producers give themselves away in at least one respect. In true Hollywood "epic" tradition the picture lasts for two full hours, before the conclusion of which the Dunlop cushions become a trifle uncomfortable. In spite of the powers of modern science, there is a limit to human endurance.

Perhaps this is the fault of the story itself, since it is based on fact, like most true stories does not confine itself to the usual ingredients of the formula—build-up, climax, and fade-out.

The laurels must go to Charles Laughton for performing with his usual unrelenting bitterness the role of the tyrannical captain of the Bounty, so that Clarke Gable, hard-boiled but humane, can lead the mutiny to the full justification of his character and the satisfaction of his fervid fans. He is well supported by Midshipman Francisco Tane both in his adventures on the high seas and his amours in Tahiti. Q.G.

The annual dance of the Trinity College Athletic Association was held in the College last night. It proved to be a hanner event with many interesting innovations adding to the delightful atmosphere. The college was bedecked in red-and-black, intermingled with the St. Hilda's colours.

A large crowd swayed to the rhythm of Nels Kelly's Campus Cats, who performed in their usual entertaining manner. The dance was attended by a large number of St. Hilda's in addition to the usual Trinity students.

NEW PROBLEMS SEEN BY LEADERSHIP GROUP FOR GIRLS IN "TEENS"

The environment of the teen-age girl has changed greatly in the last fifty years and the conclusion that they set down definitely the factors for each adolescent was reached by the Leadership Group under Miss Eunice Tyhurst yesterday.

Dollar down and dollar a month, modern prepared foods, radio, movies, unemployment, are things which enter into teen-age environment now which did not enter at the time of our grandmothers.

Even those forces which were always significant, the school, the home relationship, social life and community life have new aspects. Community life usually had an even tenor but today the force of unemployment blocks the teen-age.

BUREAU TO HOLD 'DATE PARTIES' HERE IN NEAR FUTURE

GROUPS OF TWENTY

Operator Looks for Unprecedented Enrolment by Students

The Date Bureau operator last night informed The Varsity of a new and startling innovation being planned by that department. Date parties, to which are invited only students officially registered on the Bureau books, are to be held in the near future, he said.

"A limited number—say twenty—of men and women," he said, "will be invited to attend a Date party. They will come separately, and will in this way have an opportunity to pick the member of the opposite sex who is most to their liking." The operator explained that the greatest trouble in the past has been to bring together couples who are congenial. "By means of Date (Continued on Page 4)

CO-ED DEBATERS MEET QUEEN'S HERE

Toronto will Contend that Canada is Over-Governed

ON FRIDAY NIGHT

The year's biggest event in women's debating takes place on Friday night when representatives from Toronto and Queen's meet in Trinity College Library to discuss the subject: That in the opinion of this House Canada is over-governed.

In accordance with the rules of the Women's Intercollegiate Debating Union a debate on the same subject is held on the same day in each of the four universities in the Union. These are at present McGill, Queen's, McMaster and Toronto.

A political subject was chosen for the debate in an effort to prove that women are capable of taking an intelligent interest in politics, explained Miss Marion Ridout, president of the Women's Debating Society. The Toronto team will support the affirmative side (Continued on Page 4)

PHILOSOPHY OF "BEING" DISCUSSION IS HELD

Dr. Phelan, of the Mediaeval Institute, chose three passages of St. Thomas Aquinas, concerning his philosophy of "being", in his address to the Philosophy Club at Burwash Hall Tuesday evening.

Dr. Phelan proceeded to comment upon these passages and to summarize briefly the thought contained therein.

Following Dr. Phelan's address, an interesting and interested discussion arose which was continued more informally after the official closing of the meeting.

NEW FRENCH MOVIES FOR COMING YEAR

Hollywood Theatre Plans to Show Sequel to Three Musketeers

DOUBLE FEATURES

Due to the success of the current series of French movies just completed at the Hollywood Theatre, a new series is being planned for after Christmas, according to Mr. Ray Allen of the theatre. One of the pictures that will probably be presented is "Milady", a sequel to "The Three Musketeers", which was shown with great success this fall. Mr. Allen reported "Maria Chapdelaine" as being the best-received of all the films, which, however, were all very well attended.

Miss Macdonald, of the University College French Department, when interviewed by The Varsity, expressed satisfaction at the high calibre of the moving pictures shown, and also emphasized the high educational and cultural value to the students of attending these movies which were started mainly for them. Miss Macdonald feels that any French student cannot afford (Continued on Page 4)

UNIVERSITY ORCHESTRA PLANS SECONO CONCERT

One of the most active of the organizations on the campus, the University Symphony Orchestra is undertaking a very ambitious program for the coming season. At the second of their annual concerts which will take place sometime in February, the members of the orchestra will feature two numbers rarely attempted by amateur organizations.

They are both well known numbers, the Peer Gynt suite and the Mozart G. Major Symphony. Work is progressing very favourably the director stated yesterday. Over thirty capable (Continued on Page 4)

Organization Meeting Probably on Tuesday; Place Undecided

For the first time in the history of Canadian universities a communist organization has come out in the open. Club or the Liberal Club.

The aims of the Communist Club have not as yet been fully stated but it is supposed that it will try to further communist policies among the university students. The organization meeting will probably be held on Tuesday, the place as yet undecided. All communications and correspondence have (Continued on Page 4)

No One But a Freak Dances Cheek to Cheek

Evidently the ecstasies of "dancing cheek to cheek", tangoing and indulging in other such modern ballroom contortions are becoming blasé—at any rate they are being displaced by the milder joys of the more vivacious art of folk-dancing. The fad is creeping into the most unexpected corners. We find folk-dancing prescribed as an option on the Physical Training courses of University and Victoria Colleges with classes overflowing in enthusiasm and needless to say, energy. Moreover, sororities are featuring it and the Social Science Club includes it at their parties. What can its fascination be? Perhaps our young moderns like an excuse really to stamp their feet; or, again, they may be taking seriously the propaganda regarding its relation to grace of carriage, slowness of figure and the creation of other feminine charms.

And the craze extends beyond the limits of the University even. There is in existence a group claiming the august name of "Toronto Folk-Dancing Society" which lately gave an exhibition of its talents at the Art Gallery. So we ask again—what can its fascination be?

PLAY FAST AND THRILLING GAME AGAINST HINDE AND DAUCH TEAM

ISOTOPIC CHEMISTRY SUBJECT OF LECTURE AT WEEKLY SEMINAR

Isotopic Chemistry, with special reference to the isotopes of hydrogen, was discussed by Mr. F. J. Webb of the University of Western Ontario, at the meeting of the Chemistry Seminar on Wednesday. The main isotope of hydrogen, deuterium, was discovered by experimenters at Columbia University by the fractional distillation of liquid hydrogen. It has also been obtained from Heavy Water which has been synthesized by the electrolysis of ordinary water. Mr. Webb went on to discuss the various properties and general characteristics of this isotope and of Heavy Water.

Blue Team Dominates Play Throughout Entire Game

Brilliant Goal Tending of Cunningham Outstanding for Opponents

Displaying a fast, thrilling exhibition of hockey, the Varsity Beavers played to a 3-3 draw with the husky Hinde and Dauch men at the Arena in their scheduled T.H.L. game last night. With the exception of the first few minutes the Beavers dominated the play and only the spectacular goal-tending of Cunningham prevented them from running up a high score.

At the end of the second period Varsity was leading by 2-0 but with only 3 minutes left to play in the final period the boxmakers had a 3-2 lead over the Beavers. Here the students displayed their most aggressive hockey. With Landrey on the penalty bench for chopping they skated the opposing team off their feet and were successful in scoring the tying goal.

Draws a Major

In the overtime Sissons got a major penalty for handling the puck when he had lost his stick. But by persistent back checking they held the H. and D. men under control.

At the drop of the puck H. and D. pressed the play into Varsity territory and held it dangerously there for some minutes. Heyd came down on a nice solo rush, past the defence, with only the goal keeper to beat. Owens sprawled across the mouth of the net and succeeded in snaring the puck in his (Continued on Page 4)

It's the Sponsor Who Pays

There is something to be said for that manufacturer who pays for radio programs and whose listeners do not wish to hear about the product he is selling. This unfortunate sponsor is only the man who pays, like that great American character, Paw, who takes a beating from every person in the family, yet still must pay the bills at the end of every month.

When a business concern adopts the medium of a radio program for its advertising projects, it is not going to a lot of trouble for what may be called, the good of its health. It is trying to sell its product, and the only way in which it can be aided by radio is in having the name of its product spread about the country so that when people are buying, they will buy from among manufactured articles whose trade names are familiar. Although it is too bad that people who are interested only in what the performers on the program are doing should be forced to listen to a man discreetly suggest that perhaps his product is a little better than some one else's, we who are used to adversity and who are accustomed to taking most of our pleasure with a little pain just listen to the announcer talk and then go out and buy the same tooth-paste we have been using for eight years.

And of course, there is always the alternative of the twisted dial. If you don't like the man's advertising, you don't have to listen to his program.

There have been many cases too, where the advertising has been quite well done. Radio announcers of the better class no longer hit their listeners over the head with the name of the product to be advertised. On the contrary, in programs like those of Jack Benny, Fred Waring, Phil Baker and others, the publicity writers carefully disguise their advertising in the body of the program, so that the listener may hardly know that he is being inveigled into buying anything. For carefully restrained radio advertising we need look no farther than the last World Series broadcast, where it was quite a mystery as to who the public had to thank for its excellent services.

Method of Approach To Fees Problem

The ad hoc committee, appointed to report on the twenty per cent increase in fees, has apparently ceased activity and it may be appropriate at this time to examine the committee's approach to the problem and suggest a method of procedure which may produce better results.

It seems clear that because of the lowered government grant the University had no alternative but to raise the fees in proportion. With regard to the fact that the increase covered also an overdraft from last year—that too can be justified since obviously the University must maintain itself in solvency.

The cause of the rise in fees can therefore be traced solely to the Parliament Buildings. But even here we find "extenuating circumstances" worthy of the most sympathetic consideration. With the tremendous increase in government relief costs one can scarcely expect that the educational grant remain at a constant percentage of the total expenditure. In this point lies, we believe, the fundamental weakness in the approach of the committee to the whole question, for there is no reason to believe that expenditure for higher education should vary in direct proportion to the growth of population or to the total expenditure. Once buildings are constructed and lecturers appointed it makes little or no difference to the cost of university administration whether the classes are increased or decreased by small numbers. The initial cost is the greatest cost and thus it is quite useless to claim that the university grant should be maintained at a constant proportion of all expenditures.

Still, the fees have been increased, and the increase has brought hardship to some and inconvenience to all, students. Since it is useless to present elaborate historical analyses describing the trend of grants and so forth, it behooves us to alter our method of approach. It is obviously more important to supply food for a starving family than it is to provide education for a student hungry for knowledge. One cannot therefore place the two needs on an equal level. Education, however, has an important place in the life of a civilized community and thus our first line of approach should be to stress the value of University training—both to those who directly receive it and to the country at large. Secondly, we should point out that many excellent students are prevented from attending the University because of the necessary paucity of scholarships and the inadequacy of bursaries. Our plea should be a humanitarian rather than a statistical one.

The first term is rapidly approaching a close. Soon some of us will be receiving letters with the bald statement that if our fees are not paid by such and such a date our registration will be cancelled. Some students may have to drop out because of the increased fees. And it appears that nothing can be done about this year. But a new provincial budget is now in the process of preparation. And we are firmly convinced that if influence of the right sort is exerted with the provincial government the latter will increase its grant to the University next year.

But there must be no protest meetings, demonstrations or petitions. We would be insulting the intelligence of our cabinet ministers if we were to resort to such soap-box tactics. And we would be conveying a false and uncomplimentary impression of the intelligence of college students. We believe that the college grant should be restored. We believe that the ministry of education will give more favourable consideration to the University question than last year.

The ad hoc committee should make every effort to point out the hardships being involved. But the present government has shown that it is not frightened by manifestations such as noted above. More will be accomplished if we credit it with sufficient perspicacity to see the rightfulness of our claim for a restoration of the grant. The government could probably provide more figures in a day than the ad hoc committee has compiled in two months to show why the grant should be restored. But there are many things to be taken into account. Yet it is to be sincerely hoped that the government will realize the seriousness of the twenty per cent increase to most students; and that it will include in its next budget a restoration of the grant.

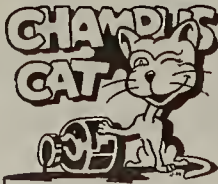

Mussolini as Humane Conqueror

While we do not pretend to countenance offensive warfare under any circumstances, it seems only fair that the much maligned Mussolini should be given credit for the fact that he seems to be conducting his campaign in a humane manner. Certainly, with the facilities at his disposal, he could bomb all Ethiopia's important centres, even Addis Ababa itself. Yet he is content to use bombs to terrify the natives into submission rather than to exterminate them. In his advances thus far there has been very little actual bloodshed among the unresisting natives.

And he has treated his conquered foes in a model manner, distributing grain among the natives and offering them the services of the army doctors. So if the world has not yet managed to abolish war, at least from an orgy of pillage and slaughter, invasion has become a firm seizure of the desired object sustained by the imminent threat of arms to which is not even formally attached the degrading name of war.

As to my candidacy for the presidency—I would not have it or any political office. I don't want to have anything to do with politics and I don't want politics to have anything to do with me.—Henry Ford.

"The Jews have boasted publicly that they always have had their fingers in the breeding of wars. When the present fight is over the Italians will find the Jews were behind it."—Julius Streicher, Nazi Party leader.

In checking over the files last night we uncovered a note from some gentlemen in 378 who, faced with the same problems which other first years have faced, decided to do something about it. They had a good idea, but in their excitement made a rather doubtful stab at it—"It" being a parody on a bit of verse from the pen of Mr. Wm. Butler Yeats. We took the matter in hand and a stab (also doubtful) at revising it, to this effect:

DOWN THE AISLE FROM INNISIE

I will arise and go now, and go hear Innisie,
And a few notes will take me, of fish and chipies made;
Nine byboaters will I have there,
some Spanish and Portugee,
And, sleeping, dream of the deep sea trade.

C-C

The original has three verses and the idea here suggested has additional possibilities, but being a trifle weak on our knowledge of the economical technicalities involved, we'll leave the other two for someone else to go to work on who has the cause at heart and the data in mind. It's a tough poem to parody, we will admit: as our correspondent suggested, that's the Halibut.

The Drama, Dept.

On Tuesday afternoon of this week Mr. Frank Henningway's Victoria S.C.M. Group in Biblical Drama met in Hart House Theatre at 5 p.m. The feature of the program was the presentation by a few of the members, of a play dramatizing early Biblical events and entitled, East of Eden, or The Lower Depths. A Puritan interpretation of the theme was strictly adhered to throughout, and the tense and tight-lipped air with which the audience received this piece of Genetical drama, was sufficient tribute in itself to the superb sense of dignity which characterized the entire production. The atmosphere which completely gripped the Victorian spectators was truly Miltonic. Well, it was as good as a tonic anyway.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

The H.C. Players' Guild

"Just Two Men", yesterday's production by the Players' Guild, was a dialogue effect in the worst Victorian traditions of melodrama and heart-break. Yet, despite impossible lines, the actors carried much conviction in places, and would have produced excellent work if given a proper opportunity. As the lines stood some of the most emotional scenes caused a titter among the audience; a judicious use of the shears might have prevented the worst of this sort of reaction.

The lighting was very poor; it was impossible to distinguish the features let alone the expressions of the actors. The scenery, however, though extremely simple, was effective and conveyed the desired impression.

UNIVERSITY OF ALBERTA TURNS DOWN BROADCAST

Trouble has arisen over broadcasting of university functions over a local radio station CFRN, Edmonton radio station, has agreed to give its facilities for about half an hour a week for broadcasting of various university functions, as a gesture of goodwill towards the university. Arrangements had been made through the student extension department. Permission has now been refused by Dr. J. M. MacEachran, Provost of the University, to broadcast any of the regular Saturday night dances. Dr. MacEachran stated that the type of publicity obtained by broadcasting dance music is unfavourable to the university. Music from certain of the formal dances may still be broadcast.

A FRESHMAN IS AMAZED

Editor, The Varsity.
Dear Sir:

I was amazed today to read the editorial in The Varsity entitled "Pharaoh's Curse", in which the author endorses his belief in the curse which is supposed to be fatal to anyone who as much as enters King Tut's tomb. This opinion seems to me to be the essence of paganism. The author virtually allies himself with the "native inhabitants of this ancient region" who, he declares, steer clear of the so-called curse; and he cannot deny that the natives' superstition is the product of immedicated and unchristianized minds.

Nobody living in this age would believe in such absurd fiction, unless he were the type of person who would never dream of opening an umbrella in the house or of walking under a ladder.

The other night Lowell Thomas explained the "curse" as originating in the mind of a reporter who was not allowed in the tomb when it was opened, and, in his anxiety for a "scoop", thought up the curse and wired the story of it in his paper. As a result the gullible believed it and the story has been revived every time someone who had anything whatsoever to do with King Tut's tomb has died.

In conclusion, let me state that my

Educationists Win From Junior School In Lacrosse Fixture

Numerous Passing Plays Baffle Losers; O.C.E. Never in Difficulties

O.C.E. kept up their winning ways by defeating Junior School 16 to 6 in their scheduled interfaculty lacrosse game yesterday afternoon. The teachers started off on the right foot by scoring in the first few minutes of play and they kept up a constant pressure for the rest of the game, peppering Russell in the S.P.S. nets with shots from near and far.

Allison and Coulter were the spearheads of the attack for the pedagogues and worked in well on the numerous passing plays which seemed to baffle the Engineers. Repeatedly one of the O.C.E. forwards would draw two School guards to check him and then pass to his unprotected teammate who promptly scored.

The game was fast and at times a few butt-ends crept in but there were no displays of ill-temper. Late in the last period the Schoolmen put on a belated rush and clustered around Cozzi in goal for O.C.E. but his brilliant saves kept the score down. Unfortunately, in one of the scrambles about the net, he received a nasty crack on the head and was forced to retire. Grier, an alternate, donned the pads and played goal for the rest of the game.

Brakey and Bala were two constant threats for School but could seldom break past the stonewall defence of O.C.E. and set up in the person of Calderone.

O.C.E.: Harwood, Coulter, Allison, Grier, Calderone, Lancaster, Cozzi. Jr. S.P.S.: Brough, Douglas, Robinson, Broughall, Brakey, Russell, Bala and Wheaton.

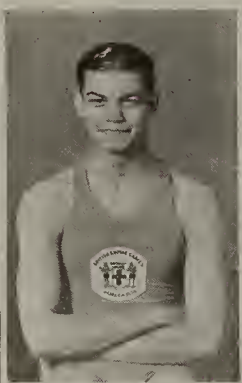

VIC DEFEATS ST. MIKE'S IN VOLLEYBALL GAME

Victoria College defeated St. Mike's in a volleyball game held in the main gym yesterday afternoon by a score of 15-12. Although Victoria led by a big margin in the first game, St. Michael's brought the lead down to 3 points in the second. In both games Victoria led all along, and at no time was their lead in danger.

Victoria: Lang, Bennett, Scott, McDonald, Ward, Affleck, McKinnon, Hurley and Stickland.

St. Michael's: Biske, Egan, Hogan, Noble, Marling, Hartford, Power, Kavanagh and Grace.

Referee: D. Wise.

CRESSY McCATTY

Brilliant waterpoloist, whose absence will be sorely felt by the Blue and White team at McGill on Saturday night.

Garton Musters Water-polo Hopes

Well-Coached Machine is Ready for McGill Saturday Night

McCATTY BARRED

The official waterpolo series gets under way this week-end, when the Varsity team travels to Montreal and undertakes to humble the McGill ball-tossers.

Prospects look increasingly bright as the Blue and White team is working itself into a capable machine which should find itself well up on top at the end of the season.

Much credit is due to Coaches Garton, Smith and Leary, who took the team over in mid-season and have worked it into a well-oiled unit which has proven its worth in practice games.

McCatty is Barred From Waterpolo

Consternation was raised in the waterpolo camp yesterday when it was learned that Cressy McCatty will be barred from playing waterpolo this year. Cressy has been one of the most sensational players in intercollegiate waterpolo since he came here some three years ago. His loss will be felt particularly this year. The reason for his exclusion from playing is rather vague. There seems to be some doubt concerning his academic standing.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Jim Tiller

With the Canadian rugby final only two days away, Winnipeg now claim that their regular kicker, Joe Perpich, will be able to hold his own with Welch and Turville of Hamilton in the kicking exchanges. It's all rather confusing when one remembers the cry that went up a few days ago to the effect that the Winnipeggers were particularly weak in the hoofing department. Of course, it may just have been a story circulated by the Western team's supporters to get better than even odds for their money. Or again, it may have been one phase in the sportswriters' campaign which now announces the squad from the Prairies to be the most powerful and most versatile team that ever came out of the West.

Funny how these rugby finals are always played up as outstanding athletic events although the Western teams have fallen before the Easterners for so many consecutive years one wonders why they still keep trying. Still, the Winnipeggers' line-up boasts a number of star American imports, and they may turn out to be the wonder team heralded for so many years. If they can twist the Tiger's tail, they will be wonderful indeed.

Speaking of Tigers reminds us that they gave Sarnia Imps, Dominion champs, a worse trimming than they handed the crippled Tricolour team, which gives the I.R.U. an equal rating with the other senior rugby loops.

The basketball opener with Broadview Y tonight has been postponed for a week but a consolation game has been arranged for Friday night, between the seniors and the intermediate cagers. The seniors will be out to demonstrate just why they are seniors, while the second will be striving to convince Coach Stevens that he guessed wrong when he selected the first team. It's an age-old rivalry.

Connelly, Marks and Gold, star performers on the championship team of a year ago, form the nucleus of this year's team, and what a nucleus. Newman, shiftest of forwards, is also back and looks better than ever. Himel, Sullivan and Krakauer, who carried the intermediates to the intercollegiate title last season, have made the jump to senior company and seem to be measuring up. Three of Western's former players, Fletcher, Garrett and Whitewill, and Dempster of West End, give the team an added strength that should carry it far towards the title. Sullivan's kid brother, McGregor of last year's juniors, and Matthews, a freshman, complete the senior line-up. The second team is comprised of members of last year's intermediates and juniors.

Included on the same program is the women's interfaculty basketball final between Victoria and St. Hilda's. The Saints will carry a two-point lead into tomorrow's game but the odds are quoted as even. The cagettes are said to exhibit plenty of style and action, and, well, if you like basketball, send yourself around to Hart House tomorrow night.

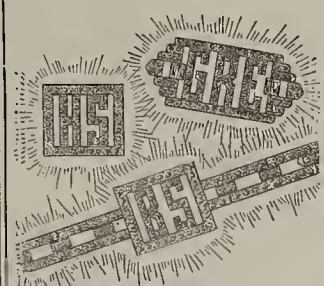

Don't forget the junior assault next Tuesday and Wednesday. This is when the boys of as yet unrecognized ability make their first public appearance in the corded square. It appears now that there will be a goodly number of bouts in all three branches, boxing, wrestling and fencing. The lighter weights usually draw the most competitors, but this year Frankie Brown reports several entrants in the 175 lb. boxing. H'm. Sounds interesting.

Interfaculty sport will soon be over for the fall term with both volleyball and lacrosse completing their schedules this week. The lacrosse play-offs promise to be real engagements with all group winners stronger than ordinary. O.C.E. look like the winner of their group after the way they outplayed Jr. S.P.S. 16-6 yesterday, although the Engineers were very potent at times. The Teachers displayed a very pretty, and very effective passing attack. However, we call the Scarlet and Gold squad to annex the lacrosse title because they have more and better substitutes than either O.C.E. or Pharmacy, neither of whom have much power on the sub-line.

This Indians' game is certainly thrilling to watch, and the boys who play it sure can take it. Banged on the head with a rival stick, yesterday afternoon, O.C.E.'s star goalie very nonchalantly removed his pads and walked off the floor leaving a trail of red behind him. Greer, who replaced him in front of the net, got so excited he forgot he wasn't playing forward and rushed all the way up the floor before he remembered he was supposed to be tending goal. Some game, this lacrosse.

Varsity's water-poloists will invade McGill this coming week-end for the first of the home-and-home games with the Redmen. The Blues have lost out by narrow margins for the last two years and are rather set on winning this season. Unfortunately, Cressy McCatty will not be able to play for Varsity due to some screwy academic ruling, "Curly" Stratton will be out of the game due to illness. However, the return of Bradshaw, after an absence of three years, compensates to some extent for the loss of the above-mentioned star performers. The Blues think much more of their chances against McGill since they held the Broadview Y team, present Dominion champions, to a 4-4 tie sometime last week. The return game will be played a week from Saturday.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

With the interfaculty basketball season just about over, most of the girls are thinking of getting down to work, so for the next few weeks there will probably be little participation in athletics, except by ambitious individuals. We haven't been saying very much in this column about swimming, but the pool is still there in the same old place, and quite a number of girls have been in it every week, either for fun or for practice. Swimming needs more and better condition than any of the other sports, so if you want to do big things in the swimming meet, better practise doing little things now.

Betty Clement, the president of the University Badminton Club reports that so far no arrangements have been made concerning the interfaculty tournament which is held every year. The colleges and faculties are running their own little badminton clubs, and are having a lot of fun out of it. Meds have a little get-together in the Lillian Massey gym every Tuesday night, and give each other the bird, so to speak. St. Hilda's are playing at St. Paul's Anglican Church, usually in the mornings, and occasionally in the afternoons when the courts are not being used by the St. Paul's Club. Vic also have an enthusiastic badminton club, and with Ruth Leavens in their midst, they should have a strong team.

DEBATING ABILITY DOUBTED BY MEN

Mr. A. D. B. Marshall, II University College and a speaker in the recent Hart House debate, said that he had not talked to many women about politics but that he thought as a whole they were not interested. "Of course there is a group that is," he said, "but it is a very small one. The apathy of the women was shown by their small attendance at the last Hart House debate; their allotment of tickets was by no means exhausted."

Women's place is in the home; their physical and emotional make-up render them incapable of filling administrative positions effectively. This in effect was the statement made by Mervin Minsky, III U.C., a member of the Hart House Debates Committee. He believes that women's participation in politics should be limited because although they are members of the community and are taking part in the economic situation, the interests they have at stake are not as great as those of men. "Women attend debates out of sheer curiosity or because they are personally interested in one of the debaters," he concluded.

Miss Joyce Arnold, president of the Women's Undergraduate Association of University College, found that in her experience girls are interested in politics when they concern present day affairs, but that when people start delving into the past and into obscure theories, they do become a trifle bored. "But," she continued, "I do regret the apparent lack of enthusiasm shown by women toward debating."

There is no lack of interest in debating among the women of Victoria College, it seems. There the Parliamentary Club is open to, and is attended by as many women as men. According to Miss Helen Babe, associate president of the Victoria College Union, "As far as their interest in politics is concerned, they certainly know as much about it as any of the men. Often before the debates they hold forums to discuss the question under debate," she said.

The excitement caused by the fact that those women in residence have no vote in Toronto and the interest shown in the straw vote held at Annesley Hall after The Varsity's straw vote indicated that many of the girls have definite political views.

Mr. B. A. Peglar, president of the Wycliffe Literary Society, thought women should be encouraged to discuss politics. Some women are interested in politics, but they are often inclined to make extravagant and not well-thought out statements. Wycliffe College is attempting to negotiate debates with some of the women's colleges as has been done in the past. These debates always received the whole-hearted support and approval of the women.

It is evident that the Caput has given permission to the Communist Club to invite Tim Buck, recently released from the penitentiary where he served as a political prisoner charged under the infamous Section 98 of the Criminal Code.

In an interview with a prominent member of the organizing committee, The Varsity learned that the letter from the Caput said in effect that the Caput never made any organization an "official" organization, but they would look upon the Communist Club as expressing the views of the communis-

The parties, which will be started in the very near future, he explained, will be held at regular intervals. They will be held in small dancing places, which may possibly be rented by the Bureau.

"The registration (of the Bureau) has fallen off of late," he said, "but not more than can be expected at this time of year." He asserted that the Bureau has this year been even more widely used than it was last year, when it was first organized. "And by these coming parties," he said, "we expect to have an enrolment far beyond anything anticipated even when the organization was first thought of."

In the belief that the new "Date Parties", to be sponsored in the near future by the Date Bureau, will bring a flood of applications for membership, The Varsity is today publishing the application form for the convenience of its readers.

UNDERHILL FAVOURS CAREFUL POLICY

These causes are not political or territorial, but economic. The economic opportunities of European countries are proportionately unequal, and present conditions will remain unchanged unless the economic situation is improved.

Mr. Underhill viewed with distrust the sudden appearance of ardent League enthusiasts. The same government which ignored or even opposed the League only a few years ago, now strongly supports it. This is British imperialism in a new guise. There are many who regard the League as an alternative to the Chamberlain policy, and British diplomats are catering to the new trend. It is a certainty that whatever steps Britain may take, whether in peace or in war, she will succeed in representing her diplomacy as League diplomacy.

musicians are turning out for the weekly practices.

The two pieces mentioned have long been favourites of concert-goers; both require careful production. The Peer Gynt suite was composed by the Scandinavian Grieg. Its different parts portray scenes from Ibsen's play of the same name. The Mozart symphony is notoriously difficult for certain sections of the orchestra—many professional groups hesitate to produce it.

The University orchestra seems to be fairly complete in all departments. There are openings for more strings, however, especially 'cellos and basses.

pads. When Edwards was sent down for cross-checking the Beavers put on a strong power play but Marshall and Heyd doggedly kept their plays disorganized. A few minutes later White went to the bench for chopping Fremes on the head. Another power play was cut short by the gong at a very dangerous moment.

Get First Goal

Shortly after the opening of the second period Sissons scored the first goal for Varsity on a solo effort. Burchell led a fast rush which resulted in another counter for the Beavers, Lindray and Craig getting the assists.

Varsity Lose Lead

After about five minutes of play in the last period, Wright of H. and D. came down on a fast solo rush to beat Owens for the first counter of his team. Edwards, the sturdy defenceman, added another when he netted the puck from a scramble. Then they rifled shots on Owens from all angles and Garrett finally beat him with a shot from directly in front of the net. With 3 minutes to go Creasy netted the tying goal.

Carr and Wright led the H. and D. men in offensive play and were a very dangerous pair. The Heyd brothers were speedy back checkers and contributed much to keep Varsity play disorganized.

Owens, replacing Shipman in the Beaver net, played a remarkable game. Brown and Driscoll were merciless in handing out stiff body checks and peculiarly always managed to do it legally. Creasy proved very elusive for the opposing defencemen and was ever a dangerous threat for the H. and D. men.

Exhibition Game to Take Place of Scheduled Fixture with Broadview Y.

Varsity's senior and intermediate cage teams will play an exhibition game in Hart House Friday night, by way of consoling the cage fans for their disappointment due to their scheduled game with Broadview Y being postponed a week.

The same evening, on the same floor, St. Hilda's and Victoria's cagettes will meet in the women's intercollegiate basketball final.

Connelly, Marks, Gold and Newman, of last year's championship squad, form the backbone of Warren Stevens' basketballers. Sullivan, Krakauer and Himel have been brought up from the intermediates to help out the cause. Dempster from West End and Fletcher, Garrett and Whitwell, who played for Western last year, materially strengthened the team. McGregor, a former junior; Matthews, a freshman, and Sullivan, younger brother of "Sully", complete the line-up. The intermediate team is composed of some of last year's seconds with some promoted juniors.

His ability was well illustrated last week when they held the Broadview Y.M.C.A. team, last year's Dominion champions, to a 4-4 tie, in a hard-fought struggle which might easily have produced a score much more favourable to the Blues.

Two of the best players are not able to play, "Curly" Stratton due to illness and Cressy McCarty due to a misunderstanding concerning his academic standing. Their loss will be severely felt, but will be compensated to a certain extent by the acquisition of a brilliant player of some three years ago—namely Bradshaw, who turns in a consistently good game at forward.

IMPROVEMENT SEEN IN STUDENT BODY SAY PROFESSORS

Less Rowdiness, More Honesty

CIVIL AND WELL MANNERED

Havelock Thinks Staff Should Examine Selves Instead of Students

Believing that it would lead to a closer understanding between the student body and the members of the faculty, The Varsity interviewed various professors to find out what they thought of the undergraduates and what they liked or didn't like to have them do.

"As fine a bunch in manners and civility as I have ever seen," was the opinion offered by Dr. E. J. Pratt of Victoria College. "There is none of the rowdiness that was a feature fifteen years ago."

Professor John Satterly at the Physics Building, also believed that the classes were less rowdy than formerly, and added that students were more honest now—electric bulbs, thermometers, and towels, not having the same tendency to disappear that they had twenty years ago. Mr. Satterly, however, objects to the chewing of gum in classes, and the wearing of hats in laboratories, and woe betide the culprits.

"My pet peeve is caused by people who quote Proust or Joyce's Ulysses. Also those who think that Omar Khayyam was a hedonist," was the comment made by Dr. F. H. Anderson of University College.

In Baldwin House a very friendly feeling prevails between student body and the staff. "I find the students very polite, responsive and hard working," was the statement given by Professor D. G. Creighton, and the same view was expressed by Professor A. Saunders. Mr. Saunders, however, admitted that he had been the target of snow-balling in previous years but as yet had not been hit. He also intimated that it is necessary he might do some snow-balling himself.

Opinions that the undergraduates were a fine bunch also came from Professors Kennedy, Smith, Sisson and Lazier, with Professor E. A. Havelock of Victoria College stating that the professors should examine themselves for faults, not the students.

NEWS OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

Toronto: A shouting crowd of radicals and anti-Nazis created a near riot last night in front of the Royal York Hotel, as they attempted to picket the hotel in opposition to Werner Haag, representative of the German Government, here to open an office for the German State Railways which is to be headquarters also for the organizing committee of the Olympic Games.

Hull, Que.: Paul Lafleur, companion of the slain Armand Nadeau, was yesterday taken under armed guard to Montreal for further questioning.

FEE PAYMENTS UP NUMBER PAID SAME

New System not Working Much More Hardship Than Old, Claims Bursar

SOME ACCOUNTS UNPAID

Payments of fees at Simcoe Hall to date this year have been remarkably good, Mr. F. A. Moore, Registrar of the University said in an interview yesterday. Actual figures are not available for publication but The Varsity was assured that a good percentage of the students have paid their general and Student Council fees, with Hart House does not far behind.

Asked if the increase in fees this year had made any difference in payments, Mr. Moore declared that he could observe no change. Actual payments in money this year are "far ahead" of the corresponding period of last year, while the number of students who have paid their fees on time is about the same as usual, the increased levies explaining the greater amount of money paid in.

As far as can be ascertained, the new system is working much less hardship than was formerly claimed. However, it is likely that the students who have not yet settled their accounts are the ones having the most difficulties; and not until all returns are in will an estimate of the effect be possible.

Mr. A. B. Fennell, Registrar of the University, stated that the usual procedure in regard to late accounts will be in effect this year. Warning, or "reminder" letters will be sent out as usual, setting a deadline for payments. After that time, those who have not settled their accounts will have their registration cancelled.

GERMAN CLUB

The "mystery meeting" of the German Club last night turned out to be a tenuous fattering, whose only mystery was the non-appearance of Professor Lange, who was to have played a prominent part in the program.

Professor G. H. Holt sang several German songs, accompanied by Professor J. G. Anderson, of the French department. After the first group, Professor Anderson played a Mozart sonata in three movements, followed by several more songs. Both professors were enthusiastically encored. The meeting closed with community singing.

Students interested in swimming will be pleased to hear that Roy Lowndes, popular coach of aquatic sports, has recovered from his illness and will be back in action next week.

For the past month a group composed of about 50 members, under the aegis of Mr. Albert State, has been at work in an effort to rouse interest in Yiddish Drama, which is at present dormant in Canada. The group holds its meetings each Tuesday and Thursday in the Y.M.H.A. Camera Falls From Off Its Place As It Looks In Parliament's Face

The University College Parliamentary Club had its picture taken yesterday in the junior common room—but the episode took 45 minutes to complete.

Some 75 debating enthusiasts arrived at four o'clock and then they started to line up for the momentous picture. The prime ministers and the ex-prime ministers of the last couple of years lined up in front like the Fathers of Confederation—grim and determined, with important, blasé countenances.

Speaker Mirsky was elevated above the proletariat of the House when the Speaker's chair was set up on a dais. Clerk Buck, enrobed and legal looking, was set in the centre of the group. The members of the House surrounded him like spectators at a murder case in court.

Then the photographers, Woodley and Kemp, arrived from the Camera Club. They set up their tripod and it fell over—and kept on persisting to

"I am opposed to a bureaucratic censorship," stated Professor W. S. Wallace, head librarian of the University Library, when interviewed by The Varsity with reference to the current library censorship agitations. Recently, an appeal was made the Police Commission of Toronto by the Community Welfare Council of Ontario for some means of controlling the class of books issued by lending libraries.

At a recent conference of librarians held in New York, which Professor Wallace attended, he was unofficially informed of the activities of racketeers in the field of pornography. The spread of indecent literature, according to rumours, has become a gangster racket in the United States. Forbidden to peddle such literature through the mails the racketeers now sell from trucks. Stories were told of the bombing of drug stores which refused to carry this type of book. Moreover, it was said that American publishers refused to accept manuscripts submitted to them (Continued on Page 4)

U.C. Parlt. Decides that Marriage is too Easy and Divorce too Difficult

DEBATE IS VERY HEATED

In a stormy debate which dragged sex and kindred matters out of the cupboard of conventionality, the University College Parliamentary Club yesterday endorsed freer divorce laws for Canada, coupled with more restricted marriages.

The motion "This House favours freer divorces and more restricted marriages," was upheld by the government of Prime Minister Shortt by a vote of 28 to 22. It was the best attended and most successful debate of the current year in the junior common room.

The marriage laws of the Dominion were given a terrific mauling by Perry Millar, the first speaker for the government, who hails from Weyburn, Saskatchewan. His speech was as eloquent as his fellow-townsmen, Jack Graham, who attacked him later in the debate.

Opposition Leader McCann maintained that divorce laws were absolutely necessary. "It is not the laws today which cause the difficulties in marriage. It is rather the economic conditions and the lack of security in the world which endangers marriage," he said.

One speaker for the government went so far as to advocate companionate marriage. He disparaged the marriage formality. The debate even included the reading of a poem, composed on the spot by Poet Laureate Weinstein of the law department. The last line of the classic which he read to the house was: "Connubial bliss is a dandy thing."

Francesco Molinaro, the bilingual expert of Hart House debate fame, arose and read from a lengthy and prepared manuscript. "What right has society to determine the relationship between man and woman by legal enactments?" he read, in speaking for the government and freer divorces.

A motion of no-confidence in the government was frustrated at the close of the debate.

Two Years, will again Have Strong Squad

Varsity's Blue-capped waterpoloists will meet the McGill splash-balls in Montreal tomorrow in the first of the home-and-home games with the Redmen for the intercollegiate title and the Hershorn Cup.

The Redcaps have held the aqua-ball title for the past two years although the scores on the round were remarkably close, and with a little luck the Blues may recover the Hershorn trophy which they have held five times in the last nine years.

The McCatty Bros., Wince and Cressy, who have been Varsity's leading scoring threats in recent years, are not playing this season. Wince has been unable to find time to practice due to academic pressure, while a technicality in the academic ruling of Trinity College prevents Cressy from playing for Varsity.

Varsity held the splashers from Broadview Y. Dominion champions, to a 4-4 tie in an exhibition game last week and so are optimistic of their chances against the McGill Redmen tomorrow.

Tonight the Big Blue team pick up their equipment and journey to Port Colborne for a senior hockey engagement and their fifth game of the season. By a victory on the Sailors' home ice this evening the Blues can pass them in the senior O.H.A. race. The Oakville sextet sent Port Colborne down to a 4-1 defeat this week and the Sailors are in no pleasant frame of mind, which promises a very warm reception to the Senior Blues.

In their game here at Varsity Arena Tuesday night the Blue and White sextet gave a fair performance but their goalward thrusts were ineffective around the nets. In the practices during the week "Ace" Bailey has the lads shooting right on the nets and "Dinty" Moore will be a busy man if he hopes to stop Varsity.

UNIVERSITY MEN AGREE CO-EDS CAN'T DEBATE WELL ON POLITICS

Most men of the University seem to agree with the leaders of the men's political clubs in the University that women have little ability to conduct intelligent debates on any political question.

However, two of St. Michael's crop of freshmen, Jerome O'Mara and Frank Grescoviak, did admit that women can debate on a political subject.

W. Howison, II Victoria, opposed this statement with the remark that, "Women are quite capable of carrying on a discussion of this kind, and every day, women are playing a more prominent part in politics." (Continued on Page 4)

Would the Mail Like a Scandal?

A front page news story in today's Mail and Empire, in which the University of Toronto is envisioned as evoking governmental wrath for permitting the existence of a Communist Club appears as the most recent and absurd attempts of a newspaper to secure readers by saying something romantically absurd and startling. Clothed in terms of a delightfully vague nature, the story hints at the "remote possibility" of disciplinary action being taken against the University—for such a serious offense as being sane and reasonable in conducting its affairs.

The story is certainly that of an alarmist, probably doing some wishful thinking. True, there is nothing definite stated in the account, other than that the matter has been discussed. But that does not prevent the Mail from going into a pipe dream and emerging with something it fondly believes to be delicious scandal containing the germ which, if properly nurtured, may produce something by way of sensational news, a very acceptable gift at a time when news is scarce. And should this "possibility" materialize the Mail will no doubt modestly refrain from admitting that they first brought the glad tidings to their precious public.

For years Communist meetings have been held throughout the city, despite the fact that they were banned by law. In the University of Toronto there are Communists—less than 150 of them—from a registration of approximately 7,000 students. The straw vote which polled 4,000 votes, (counted under official observation) and which the Mail ran the next day without question, indicated the presence of 128 Communists. Of the total number of students who voted, 3.5 per cent supported the Communists. This would certainly indicate that the student body would suffer little indeed, if they were granted the privileges unofficially allowed the other members of the party. The difference would appear to be that they could at least conduct them in an honourable manner.

The Communist party gets little if any sympathy around the campus. True, there are the usual number of students, unfortunately found in all colleges, who believe that eccentricity is the first requisite of a genius, and take this manner of being different. But as a body the Communist party is insignificant. They are men, and if they insist on meetings why not let them have them? Why arouse sympathy for an organization by showing it in the light of a persecuted minority?

The story in the Mail may serve to stir up ignorant opposition to the University. It may serve to provide front page news of a doubtful nature. But it is not likely to prove a prophecy when we realize that the leaders of the government are still intelligent and are quite capable of reaching a sane and reasonable answer to a problem without the help of the paper which did its utmost to prevent their election.

Figures Don't Lie Just Misrepresent

The poor struggling college student who is attempting to make his way in the University and in life generally is apt to be deceived on every side by figures. There are many ways in which a person can juggle statistics so as to convey a totally false, and often absurd, impression. The following extract taken from the Manchester Guardian illustrates this point quite clearly.—

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM ON THE STATE OF THE NATION

Population of the United States reported as	124,000,000
Deduct those eligible for old-age pensions under the Townsend Bill	30,000,000
	94,000,000
Deduct persons working for Federal, State, City and other Governments	20,000,000
	74,000,000
Deduct those ineligible to work under Child Labor Laws	60,000,000
	14,000,000
Deduct number of unemployed in nation	13,999,998

No. remaining to produce nation's good

Just You and Me—and I'm Getting Tired.

This is, of course, an extreme example and we think sufficiently highly of the average run of college student as to be of the opinion that only about half the engineers and co-eds would be led to believe that there are really only two people producing the national income of the United States. But sometimes even intelligent people are deceived by misinterpretation of figures. For instance, a well-known American politician once claimed that he could prove that the tariffs of the United States were actually lower than those of other countries. And how did he do this? Forsooth, he found that the duties paid by goods entering the country were lower than those elsewhere. Which sounds fairly logical until one is reminded of the vast categories of goods which are completely kept out of the country by prohibitive tariffs.

The ordinary male student is, therefore, deceived by figures. This statement is true of all students in the University with the exception of those who take accounting and statistics. A student in the commerce department of our University once confidently said to us, "I can detect the phoney figure every time." Figuratively speaking, this may be true, but we strongly suspect that he had other than written figures in mind.

Rugby Postscript

As the 1935 rugby season draws to a close it might be of profit to review the unsatisfactory play-off system in the Intercollegiate Union which has been the source of so much criticism and caustic comment during the past season. Most of this criticism has, of course, come from Varsity, and rightly so. We do not wish to detract from the achievement of the Queen's senior team. After all, it won its title under the present rules and it certainly cannot be blamed for adhering to the rules which were adopted two years ago. But we do believe that the play-off rules, as they now stand, are extremely unfair.

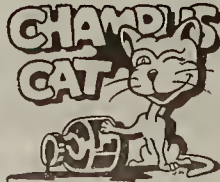

Varsity did not lose a single game in its Intercollegiate schedule this year and, according to the law of averages, was plainly the better team. Queen's on the other hand, lost two games and yet was able to emerge, because of one lone game, with the Intercollegiate title. It is a commonly accepted fact that a team's merits can not be judged by a single performance, yet the play-off idea fosters this illusion, and for no other reason than to enhance the gate receipts of the Union.

For two years Queen's has profited under the new system. Naturally, then, it is in favour of this plan. But, in the spirit of fair play, we believe it would be advisable for Queen's to support Varsity in its stand against the one-game encounter for the title. A team whose claim to the title is constantly under criticism loses much of its glory. It would be much better to establish superiority during the regular schedule of games than in an extra play-off game promoted solely in the hope of increasing gate receipts. Queen's is clearly entitled to championship honours, both this year and last, since they played according to rules laid down by the Intercollegiate Union, but we suggest that they could aid in changing those rules in the future in the interests of greater fairness.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Friday Afternoon Recital

Florence Richardson and Kathleen Irwin (pianist) will be the artists at today's recital to be held at 5 p.m. in the Music Room when the following program will be given:

I.—Sonata for Violin and Piano, Delius, slow, andante scherzando, lento.
II.—Sonata for Viola and Piano, Bax, molto moderato, allegro energico, molto lento.

Eaton Auditorium

The second concert in the Music Masters' Series was a two piano recital played last night in Eaton Auditorium by Josef and Rosina Lhevinne. The program proved to be first interesting and substantial than a first glance at a program of Schumann, Chopin and Debussy would lead one to expect. While the literature of two-piano music is certainly scarce, it contains work of a more lasting worth than that which we are accustomed to hear.

The highlight of the evening seemed to this reviewer to be the very vital and capable handling of the Debussy "Fetes". Here the responsibility was equally shared but elsewhere there seemed a tendency for Mr. Lhevinne to follow his wife. For this and other reasons the playing was on the whole inclined to be flat and not very stimulating.

The solo numbers were not the poetical and imaginative work associated with Chopin but the Etudes were handled with dexterity and taste.

Victoria Dramatic Society

We can congratulate the Victoria Dramatic Society for their recognition of the fact that Hart House was designed as an experimental theatre. "The Lower Depths" by Maxim Gorki, although not too unworthy a production, failed to elicit any co-operation from the audience. The experiment might have been more successful had they left the Lawrence translation unchanged, or chosen one that did not need censorship. The net result tended to burlesque—Gorki philosophy in Noel Coward dialogue.

The play is an exposition of the Russian dramatist's doctrine that man must have ideals to survive, and it demonstrates this through the character of Luka (ably played by J. B. McDiarmid), the voice of idealism crying

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crookover

We'd like to correct a statement which was smeared all over the sports page of yesterday issue of The Varsity. Cressy McCatty is not "barred" from competing in tomorrow's waterpolo game at McGill. Cressy stepped from an honour to a pass course and there is a ruling at Trinity College which says that that constitutes the loss of a year. Due to this ruling Cressy is ineligible for intercollegiate athletics.

While on the subject of waterpolo we remember an amusing story. It seems that at the beginning of the training grind the coach appointed for the waterpolo squad declined the honour, claiming lack of time compelled him to refuse the post. Forthwith two other gentlemen were handed the job and they accepted. However, since somebody had neglected to inform the first gentleman that his services would not be required after all, he changed his mind and returned to the fold to accept his post. This sort of muddled matters, what with three different coaches trotting around on three different nights. However, we understand that everything has been straightened out satisfactorily.

Contrary to press reports this lad Dinnick who is to fight at the Gardens' amateur boxing show tonight is not a Varsity boxer. Dinnick was around Hart House two years ago as a 175-lb. boxer and now is a member of the Primrose A.C., under whose colours he now fights.

Sometime last week, during the course of a little talk with Warren Stevens and Mac McCutcheon we asked Steve why Varsity didn't send more boxers to fight in the city's amateur boxing shows. We argued that the Blue fighters would gain valuable experience by taking part in these exhibitions, experience which would be of great use during the intercollegiate B. W. and F. matches. Steve countered with the statement that the club promoters usually overmatched the Blues and expected them to take a lacing for the edification of the crowd. This gave us an idea. We asked why Varsity didn't stage a show or two of its own, either up at the Arena or down at the Gardens. This would enable Varsity to pick its opposition and at the same time guarantee the Blue boxers that they would not be overmatched. Such bouts as a return match between Lenny Stein and Charles Pocius or Braddock and Burke would be sure to draw. Milson and Smith could be used to provide entertainment in two more bouts. As a matter of fact nine good first-rate bouts could be lined up. It now seems that this suggestion has been looked into. Of course nothing is definite as yet but the thing may come about. In the meantime we'd like to say that should the show be put on the students will be expected to get behind it wholeheartedly.

Blue basketball fans will be given their first opportunity of seeing their pets in action today when Stevens' Seniors engage McCutcheon's Seconds at 9 o'clock. The game will be played after the St. Hilda's-Victoria affair which will get under way at 8 sharp. Steve will have Connelly, Gold, Marks, C. Sullivan, Matthews, Krakauer, Newman, McGregor, Dempster, Himel and Fletcher. Since Garrett, Whitwell and Stroud haven't the time to turn out they will be lost to the team. Bedford and Powers may be moved up to the senior squad. Mac will send out Hogg, McLaughlin, Barron, Peters, Green, Cooper, Daugherty, Denne, Kinsey, Harlock, Marling and McGivern. The game should serve as a prep for the official opening next Tuesday. The Blue eagles will start the first half of the annual U.S. tour at Buffalo next Thursday when they play the Canicus squad. On Friday they engage Cornell at Ithaca, N.Y., and the following day they meet Niagara University at Niagara Falls, N.Y.

Tonight Ace Bailey's squad will again be looking for that elusive first victory. This time it will be at Port Colborne. The Sailors are always hard to beat on their home ice and tonight will probably be no exception.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

There will be three basketball games tonight in the Hart House gym, and two of these should be particularly interesting to the girls. The major one is the second final game between Vic Seniors and St. Hilda's Seniors, to decide the interfaculty basketball championship. The Saints have a small lead of two points, but it's anyone's game.

and the betting is even. The Saints have held the championship for the last two years, but the Vic girls are out to add yet another interfaculty title to the long list the Scarlet and Gold college has piled up this year.

This game will begin at eight o'clock but previous to it, there will be a grudge game between the U.C. Freshies and U.C. Seniors, which will start at seven o'clock. There has been a great deal of controversy in U.C. basketball circles all fall, between the freshies and the seniors, as to which has the better team, and this question will be settled once and for all tonight.

There will be a small charge of twenty-five cents for these games, and they should be worth it. Those who wish to stay and see the men's game between the Varsity seniors and the intermediates, may do so without further charge.

Perhaps the only characterization that was thoroughly Russian throughout was that of G. B. Johnston as Buhnov. While some of the rest gave the impression of American stars, Buhnov stood out as one of the scuffling unfortunates Gorki knew so well.

Also worthy of mention are Oliver J. Joyce, in the difficult role of the Tartar, and Brian Barclay, a lock-smith. Amongst the women in the cast, we cite Iris Matthews as showing promise and Alice Paltry for good work in a small part.

The group at present is working with plays ranging in scope from pre-Shakespearean to modern times, and is constantly on the lookout for new plays. It is interested in the presentation of Jewish plays, and its greatest handicap is that translations now available in the city are either badly done, or are of poor plays. There are many openings in the movement for people interested in writing or translating plays. Mr. State issues an invitation to all Jewish students of the University to attend their meetings, and believes that a definite contribution can be made to the development of Anglo-Jewish culture to an extent in Canada such as exists in the U.S.A. today.

unless the author allowed the interpolation of obscene passages in the text; however, Professor Wallace continued, these statements were all hearsay, and are not to be regarded as absolute fact.

"When the thing gets into the gangster class, it is time for the police to step in," Professor Wallace declared. He was of the opinion that such offenders against public morality should be tried and convicted in the ordinary way, but in general to avoid an official censorship was more advisable than the adoption of strict governmental supervision.

"This does not apply to us at all," was the statement of Dr. George Locke, Chief Librarian of the Toronto Public Libraries. "What these people are trying to get at are the 2 and 3 cent a day commercial libraries," he continued.

"But I am not a seenger; I am comedienne," the vision in blue velvet kept repeating. Miss Lucienne Boyer was giving us the brief moments of the entre-acte and assuring us that we were being bamboozled if we believed she could sing. "I haf leetle voice—very verrry leetle," and she carefully formed thumb and forefinger in a small zero to show just how verrry leetle she meant.

Having only three odd French words to hand we were afraid any attempt at contradiction would twist itself into an insult, so held our peace but were not convinced. The we is neither royal nor editorial plural; a venerable reporter from the Tely supported me—figuratively speaking.

In spite of linguistic difficulties the odd fact was culled. The lady had the usual strenuous training that a foreign artiste must undergo—three years bal- (Continued on Page 4)

The party will begin at 7.30 p.m. with a medieval Christmas play under the direction of Lucy Jane Grabbell. This will be presented in scenes to give a tableau effect, and Christmas carols will be sung between scenes. Anne Fromer, Margaret McKay, Enor Kennedy and Mrs. English will fill the leading roles.

After the singing of some Christmas carols the guests are invited to dinner at which Sir Wm. Mulock, President and Mrs. Cady, Professor and Mrs. Wallace, and Sir Robert and Lady Falconer will be present.

DR. BURTON MOVES THANKS

Speaking on "Physical Science in the practise of Medicine" last Saturday in Convocation Hall, Dr. Raymond C. Dearle urged greater co-operation between physicist and physician. He told the members of the Royal Canadian Institute of recent advances in physics in relation to medicine.

Various devices for measuring fatigue, recording the impulses of the heart, and eliminating human error from medical tests were described. Professor Dearle outlined the evolution of the stethoscope.

Dr. Dearle foresaw the day when the doctor will come to the physicist with problems for solution. Often the discoveries of physics are foreshadowed by phenomena observed by the medical men.

Dr. E. F. Burton, in moving a vote of thanks, regretted that many brilliant medical practitioners were prevented by the necessity of earning a living, from carrying on physical research.

TRINITY DEBATERS OPPOSE LIQUOR ADS

Burrows' Opinion

DRINKING NOT SIN, CLAIM

"Resolved that in the opinion of this House the disallowance of the publication of liquor advertisements ought to continue," was the subject of a debate held by the Trinity College Literary Institute on Friday evening.

R. G. Burrows, the leader of the affirmative, drew an illustration between liquor advertisements and cigarette advertisements. In the last 30 years he said there had been an increase of 2,392 per cent in the production of cigarettes. This, he claimed, was a direct result of advertising.

With increased advertising children would throw cocktail parties instead of children's parties. He also pointed out that industry would suffer through its employees and that men's capacity would increase until they would become super-saturated.

W. H. Broughall, the leader of the negative, showed that prohibition in the past had been foolish and he pointed (Continued on Page 4)

DISLIKE TITLE OF FREAKS

The fear that the student body is lapsing into mid-Victorian folk dance rhythm seems to be quite unfounded and the courageous campus contortionists are up in arms at being called "freaks".

A survey of student opinion shows that dancing "cheek to cheek", tangling and the rumba are still the order of the day. The fascination of the folk dance is fabulous.

Miss Doris Urch, II U.C., said, "It brings out the finer things in man. Everyone should know how to folk dance. It adds variety to our ordinary rhythm—no, I don't like dancing cheek to cheek".

Miss Eileen Gow, III U.C., said shortly, "If it is a choice between dancing cheek to cheek and folk-dancing, I'll take the latter. How can you compare the grace of movement of the (Continued on Page 4)

Madam Speaker, Sir
What we really want to tell you is that the Queen's-Varsity debate on Friday evening in the Trinity Library was swell and there were lots of funny speeches about mares or mayors, we couldn't make out which, and all the girls spoke real well and looked awful nice too.

Madam Speaker, Sir
The gathering was embellished by the presence of the Rt. Hon. Sidney Herment, noted orator and connoisseur of feminine pulchritude. Mr. Herment contributed a few piercing observations from the floor. He remarked upon the "quaint customs" of the Women's Inter-faculty Debating Union with regard to rules of order. No doubt Mr. Herment attended the debate for the pur-

Canada's present system of government was vindicated by the visiting debaters in both cases in the Women's Intercollegiate Debates between Toronto and Queen's, held Friday evening. Kay Morrison and Doris McGuire from Queen's successfully opposed the motion "That in the opinion of this House Canada is over-governed", against the Toronto home team of Roxalyn Read and Jessie Johnson, while Ann Fergusson and Winnifred Fletcher debating for Toronto at Queen's were likewise successful in defeating the same motion. Dorothy Stuart and Eileen Gordon upheld the motion for Queen's in their own university.

Packtown Pucksters Show

to Win at 4-2

Varsity Beavers were defeated 4-2 at Varsity Arena Saturday afternoon by the warlike Stockyard Packers in a clean, fast T.H.L. fixture.

The Beavers scored the first goal and held the lead until the overtime. When it was a matter of seconds until the end of the game, with Varsity leading 2-1 the Packers came down on a last desperate rush and beat Owens, just in the nick of time. In the overtime both teams turned on the pressure and although there was little to choose between the power plays of both, the win was chalked up to the Packers by a margin of two goals.

Owens performed well for the Beavers. He seems to be on the alert at every moment and is fearless in sprawling in front of an opposing player. (Continued on Page 3)

CHARLES' ABSENCE FELT

The University of Toronto Senior O.H.A. squad went down to a 7-0 defeat before a baiting Port Colborne sextet played at Port Colborne Arena last Friday night. Although the Blue and White representatives tried all the way the Sailors proved themselves real hockeyists by turning aside the Varsity threats easily.

Crippled by the absence of Charles of the Varsity rearguard, the Blue-dad puckchasers attempted to rally in the last period but the backchecking Sailors came back with counter rushes which netted them four goals in the final stanza, to give them their first victory in six starts.

The game saw Varsity checking very effectively in the first period, but Port Colborne had plenty of reserve strength to forge ahead by two counters on shots by Runions and Morrison, while the Blues trailed dismally, unable to come back.

The second frame netted another score for the Sailors as the period was (Continued on Page 3)

FIRST UKRAINIAN CLUB ORGANIZED ON CAMPUS

A group of Ukrainian students met in the Law Building last Friday evening to consider the possibility of organizing a Ukrainian Club on the campus.

Since it was the first time such a gathering has met here, much of the evening was spent in preparing plans for the club's activities in the future. It was decided to form such a society with the purpose of uniting Ukrainian students who are interested in studying Ukrainian problems, aiding as a unit in the development of Canada and fostering her relations with the Ukraine.

St. Michael's Mediaeval Institute

Lack of general information regarding the Institute of Mediaeval Studies, located at St. Michael's College, has indicated that a brief survey of that organization would serve to enlighten many people as to its function. This institute, which is the only one of its kind in America, enjoys a wide reputation in other universities, but relatively little is known of it on the campus of the University of Toronto.

The Mediaeval Institute, a department of St. Michael's College, was founded in 1929 as a centre of study in the culture and civilization of the Middle Ages. It is a graduate school and aims at fitting a small number of students annually to become experts on their own account in the field of Mediaeval Scholarship. The students enrolled are required to read works in Latin, French and German. It prepares scholars for the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy, which are conferred by the University of Toronto, and in its own name will grant a Diploma of Fellowship. Today, several of its graduates hold professorial chairs in prominent colleges and universities in Canada and the United States.

The Institute is now under the direction of Monsieur Gilson and Rev. Father Phelan, and has a staff composed of well trained specialists, all of whom have had the advantage of prolonged study under celebrated European experts. Monsieur Jacques Maritain, one of today's foremost French philosophers and a recognized world authority on the philosophy of St. Thomas, is a permanent member of it.

The Institute is carrying on a great work both in bringing celebrated scholars to this University and in sharing the work of scholars everywhere in their endeavours to understand the mediaeval mind and interpret it to the modern world. It is also carrying on much valuable work in the sphere of translating, editing and publishing hitherto little known mediaeval manuscripts. At first it dealt only with mediaeval philosophy but it has broadened its scope considerably this year, and intends eventually to embrace every phase of mediaeval life.

We Want No Intellectual Snobs

There are two outstanding types of snobbery to which man is susceptible—the snobbery of birth and the snobbery of intellect. Snobbery of birth is more evident in a small community and among the members of the older generation but the snobbery of intellect is universal, and is especially prevalent in industrial institutions. In a small, private college such as Princeton, or Oxford, considerations of birth are factors in determining the status of the student, but in a large and essentially democratic University—supported by the Government, the scions of "old families" start even with everyone else. Hard and fast matriculation rules govern entrance, and once a student gets in all his family can do for him is pay his bills.

But if we do not often encounter the social snob on the campus, we do come into contact with the intellectual snob. This unpleasant creature, possessing a modicum of intelligence, has let his education go to his head. He adopts an attitude of odious superiority towards the opinions and tastes of those whom he deems his inferiors in the intellectual scale; he smiles loftily when one mentions Galsworthy, and dismisses all painters previous to Picasso with a "drug"; his conversation is proudly unintelligible, and consists mainly of quotations from T. S. Eliot, Stein, or Joyce, and any reference to the prophets of the people, Edgar Guest or Temple Bailey causes him to shut his eyes in pain and murmur wearily, "Oh gosh." He segregates himself with pride from the common herd of undergraduates, and, Narcissus-like, finds his pleasure in the rapt contemplation of the beauties of his own mind. He is without a doubt one of the most unattractive by-products of education.

Far be it from us to depreciate the intellect or the pursuit of knowledge; but when the gift of brains and the benefits of education produce in an otherwise normal human being this God-like sense of his own value as a literary and artistic arbiter, we think that it would have been better for him had he devoted all his time to playing rugby or "getting some fun out of life". The truly intellectual and educated man is he who has realized the truth of the dictum "The only thing we know is that we know nothing." Such a man is very careful in his expressions of praise and condemnation; he is ever mindful of the fact that the opinion of posterity is worth more than that of contemporary critics; and he never despises even the humblest mind in its preferences and dislikes. Above all, like Prince Prig in Andrew Lang's story, he has learnt that the best wish a clever man can make is "I wish to seem no cleverer than other people."

On Taking Notes

Next week some seven thousand two hundred and fifty-three students at this institution of higher learning will be tested on what they have or have not learned during the past three months. Professors will harangue the students with the usual advice about having a good sleep the night before in order to have a clear mind the next morning. Students will stay up half the night studying and will go to school bleary-eyed to push a pen-shod hand over a piece of paper which at the end of the allotted time will be filled with information of varying degrees of reliability. For most of the students the flesh will be willing but the mind will be very weak.

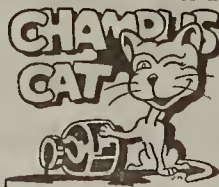

There are four main broad general types of note-takers within the confines of the University. The first type is represented by the student who assiduously and diligently—and foolishly—tries to take down everything the professor says. He regards the lecture hour as something-to-be-made-the-most-of. He never once removes the pen from paper; never looks up; never tries to understand what the lecturer is saying. As a result he leaves out key words and he leaves the lecture with writer's cramp, a complete ignorance of what the lecture was about, and a misleading set of notes.

Then there is the type of student who goes into the lecture hall with the best of intentions. He sincerely and honestly resolves at the end of each lecture to attend more closely next time. But whether because of the sonorous tone of the lecturer, or the morning-after feeling, or—well—the dullness of the topic—he finds it very difficult to keep his mind on the subject. Thus, if one should ever peruse the resultant notes—no one, not even the student himself, ever does—one would find that the author has engaged in sporadic bursts of writing interspersed with sudden lapses. When the pricking of conscience is sufficient to awaken in the specimen a sense of duty sufficiently strong to cause him to write, he writes. But when this is not so he speedily drifts into a soporific lethargy. Perhaps it is just as well that the notes are never read.

The third general type of college note-taker is that personified in the student who deliberately and consciously—or so it seems—counts every tenth word and writes it down. He cares not whether what he writes is important or not. In between his jots of writing he looks about him with disdain at types numbers one and two. He tries to ape type number four but his labours result merely in a meaningless jumble of incoherent phrases.

Finally, there is the man who listens intently to what is being said, and listens intently throughout the whole hour. He knows when the lecturer is saying something important and writes down only what will be of permanent and examination value. His notes are in summary and tabulated form and contain the gist of what was said. When completed, his notes are readable, logical, and concise.

Yes, next week some seven thousand two hundred and fifty-three students at the University of Toronto will be examined for their knowledge. It will be a time when notes will be put to the acid test. The students will then find that they belong in one of the above four groups. In which group will you be?

THOUGHTS

while attempting to concentrate on Milton's prose in the solitude of the Bell Library.

Consider now how these our days are spent

Within the far-fung bounds of campus wide,

How we for many sins shouldst now repent

Yet ever on our carefree journey glide.

The youthful Milton having come of age

Did pen the world a glorious Christmas Hymn,

And passed the mark of twenty-three in rage

At self for having 'complished work so slim—

While we to Follies flock.

Our ponderous brains—for surely powers of mind

From present youth are not withheld entire,

Their talent's lend to what they please—find,

Their voices add to Iolanthe's choir.

While War God Mars from his chains is bursting free

And quiet Peace of dove-like wings is shorn,

We lightly jest "Shall woman yet be free

With Man to smoke, or must she fume forlorn?"—

And quaff another coke.

Our lesser lights we pardon if they quarrel

Of residential rights and hours of leave,

And argue if 'tis more or less immoral

By Right or Leftist technique to deceive,

Yet heavy is the crushing blow of shame

To find one brighter Hope producing work

Ill fitted for a thesis or for fame—

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Toronto Symphony

The latest Saturday Afternoon concert was devoted to the symphonic works of Jan Sibelius. This program in celebration of the composer's seventieth birthday, amply showed his pre-eminence in contemporary symphonic music. There is a power of imagination, simple and clear, about Sibelius and an ability to express his thoughts with force and conviction that lift him at one fell swoop above both the traditionalists and experimentalists of today.

The concert opened with the Second Symphony, which with his Fifth, is as well known as any modern symphony. The Allegro, slightly disjointed in the playing, seemed disconnected with the rest of the work. The second movement, andante ma rubato showed splendidly the closely woven texture of Sibelius' music. Melancholy and lyric imagination are knit together to produce almost intolerable intensity. The third and fourth movements are in the same vein, only slightly relieved by the light vivacissimo. His austere and savage mentality make him incapable of a scherzo. The want of humour is compensated for by a Miltonic feeling for form. The symphony broadens out to a glorious finale (allegro moderato) where by ingenious and little noticed devices, the whole work drives to a triumphant conclusion.

The shorter numbers which followed were creditably performed. Tapiola, less impressive on second hearing, was followed by the Swan of Tuonela, a simple composition centering around

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By J. E. T.

On Friday night St. Hilda's seniors assured themselves once more of the women's interfaculty basketball title, for at least another year, when they defeated Victoria seniors by a score of 13-8. This is the third successive year in which this championship has gone to the Saints. The Blue and Grey sextette seemed to have the edge on their opponents from the very beginning of the rally, although the Victorians didn't let their opponents get away with anything. The Scarlet and Gold squad were on the defensive right from the start, mainly because of the two-point lead which their rivals managed to garner in the first game.

In the opening part of the tussle both teams were nervous and over-anxious, but after a few minutes of play, they settled down and played some real basketball. The second half of the game was infinitely more exciting than the preceding one, as each squad fought desperately to out-point the other.

Kay Grubbe and Mary Dignam, on the winning defence line, were two of the most effective players guarding their basket, while Marg Macdonald and Edie Ardagh, between them gathered all the points for their team. Betty Jenkinson and Hazel Brown put in some fine defence work for the Scarlet and Golds. Both these girls have been outstanding during the whole season; Maisie Cowan on the forward line has also been among the stellar cagers.

A grudge of nearly three months' standing was settled once and for all Friday night at Hart House when U.C. Seniors taught the Freshies a lesson in basketball by trimming them by a score of 36 to 18. The Freshies fought gamely every minute of the way, but were forced in the end to bow to their superior college mates. The game was amusing throughout and became practically a farce towards the end, especially when the Seniors were forced to play one man short. Then when every remaining member of the senior team was threatened with suspension from the game, on account of fouls, the crowd and even the players themselves, grew hilarious. The Red and White Freshies played very good basketball all through the game and the Seniors had to work pretty hard to pile up their 36 points. The Freshies have a fine team and with just a little more experience they should go a long way in the interfaculty league.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Frank Lamberti

Twelve challenges inside of fifteen years for the Canadian Rugby Supremacy finally brought home a championship for a gallant squad of gridders representing the west. Hamilton Tigers, Eastern Canadian champions, were thrown aside as the Winnipeg squad rocketed to Canadian rugby fame on the wings of an 18-12 victory and the Grey Cup found a new haven of rest in the golden west.

In the struggle of gridiron giants, a diminutive star in the person of Hanson proved to be the Hamilton stumbling block as he romped for long gains through the befuddled Bengal squad. Just another local boy (pro tem) making good, proving the Big Four series are not what they used to be, or are they. The West proved their superiority in no uncertain manner and smashed the big windline of the Hamilton Tigers thoroughly, right in Tiger Town, while many a good dollar changed hands.

The recent editorial appearing in the Queen's Journal which advocated abolishing the play-off system now in vogue in the Intercollegiate Rugby Union was not surprising, when we consider that star players are supposedly wending their way towards the Kingston college for intellectual enlightenment!! The Intercollegiate Rugby Union executive members would do well to investigate the conditions which entice these men—the Intercollegiate is not the Interprovincial.

Dinnick, former Varsity Intercollegiate light heavyweight boxing champion, is proving himself a real boxer with his lethal punching in local rings, and he appears to be headed for Canadian Olympic honours. "More power to your right, me lad, you'll need it."

The Double Blue colours of St. Michael's fluttered gaily over the weekend, when the fighting Irish gridiron squad came back in the second half of the Windsor Walkerville Interscholastic rugby tilt on Saturday at Varsity Stadium to gain a 14-1 victory. It was the second time in successive years that the Irish entered the finals and on Saturday St. Michael's hurled back the W.O.S.S.A. entry to gain the Interscholastic championship for the second time.

The Big Blue hockey classic takes place on Thursday night at Varsity Arena, marking the third time that the Yale Bulldogs and University of Toronto have crossed sticks for the Canadian winter pastime. This Yale sextet promise plenty of action for intercollegiate hockey fans as they hold the Quadrangle Intercollegiate championship, and are formidable opposition for any Canadian hockey team.

Down at the K.C. pool in Montreal a practically new University of Toronto water polo team trailed the powerful McGill Intercollegiate champions by six goals at the end of regulation time. The return game will be played Saturday night in the Hart House pool and the Blues are faced with a herculean task if they hope to wipe out this six goal margin.

JR. U.C. TOPS TRINITY IN VOLLEYBALL GAMES

Jr. U.C. defeated Trinity in an interfaculty volleyball match Friday afternoon in the upper gym at Hart House by taking two out of three games from the Trinity team.

The U.C. team had a big advantage over Trinity but did not play as well as they might have due to faulty teamwork.

Wyckoff and Dilworth were the best for Trinity and Lokash and Yankoo played well for U.C.

U.C.: Oleh, Holt, Spring, Lokash, Yankoo, Tepperman, Savlov, Soren and Rose.

Trinity: Hodgins, Sommerville, Wyckoff, Delaney, Dilworth, Nock, Greenfield, Hervie.

closing. Forgie beat Shipman, after a sustained uphill battle by the Blues to maintain the pace set by the Port Colborne sextet. In the final session the game turned into a complete rout for the Varsity team as they left Shipman uncovered in their anxiousness to score while the Sailors slumped home four more goals, gaining the 7-0 verdict. There were no penalties served in the whole game.

Varsity (0): Goal, Shipman; defence, Brown, Jeffrey; centre, McClelland; wings, MacPherson, MacQuham; alternates, Valiquette, Ripley, Lennan and Driscoll.

Port Colborne (7): Goal, Cuthbert; defence, Horne, Hudson; centre, Arnett; wings, R. Morrison, Upper; alternates, Forgie, Runions, C. Morrison and Mayes.

At last we find the reason for college students' extreme fondness for dancing. A Syracuse criminology class has discovered that morons can dance as well, if not better, than normally intelligent individuals. The report claims that "naroons" have highly developed rhythm senses, and good bodily, if not mental, balance.

QUEEN'S-VARSITY DEBATES

not only in duplication of legislators, but also in the number of laws passed by them.

"There are 1200 laws passed each year, and while we like a law unto ourselves, it is going a little too far to have a law for each person," she said.

"Canada is not ideally governed," admitted Kay Morrison of Queen's in opposing the motion, "but the fault lies not in over-legislation but is a faulty distribution of legislation. While the capitalist class want less interference, the working class, which form the greatest part of Canada's population, want more protection. They realize that only through the government can they expect to get it, and then only by increased representation or more government. Canada would be over-governed with a dictator, but with our democratic system the people are free to express themselves."

"Although the oratory of the opposition is superb, their logic if not all wet is at least a trifle damp," exclaimed Jessie Johnson in supporting the government. "Is a government democratic that represents only 45 per cent of the total votes? Centralized government, people think, is connected with Fascism. France and England are the two most centralized governments, but they are the bulwarks against Fascism."

"Our arguments are called wet by the government. We admit they may dampen their spirits a little," declared Doris McGuire of Queen's. "In the United States, which is an ideal example of central government, the cost of government per head is 15 cents. In Canada the cost is 8 cents. Every municipality has its individual problems, culture and ideals. Yet the government would do away with municipalities and unite them under one head."

After cracksmen had robbed the zoo of $1,053, John T. Millen, superintendent of the Detroit municipal zoo, announced that, hereafter, the safe would be placed, at night, in the lions' den. Then he issued an invitation to burglars to "come and get it."

TIE IN LACROSSE AROUSES DISPUTE

O.C.E. Won First Game from Junior School; Does Friday's 9-all Score Eliminate S.P.S.?

MANAGERS TO DECIDE

O.C.E. and Jr. School met Friday afternoon in the big gym at Hart House for a lacrosse game that would decide the group winners and send them on into the finals. Their game was the second meeting of the teams in a two-game series, goals to count on the round. Since the game ended in a 9-all tie it has not yet been decided whether or not Jr. S.P.S. have been eliminated, although O.C.E. were the victors in the previous meeting. The Athletic Office intends to call a council of all box lacrosse team managers to settle the dispute.

In the game Friday afternoon both teams seemed very evenly matched in ability and aggressiveness.

Brough of School with 5 goals and Harwood of O.C.E. with 4 goals, were the leading scorers, while Bobby Coulter and Joe Calderone of O.C.E. and Douglas, Ballagh and Russell of Jr. School played brilliantly.

O.C.E.: Corzi, Calderone, Harwood, Alison, Coulter, Greer, Lancaster and Codrane.

Jr. S.P.S.: Russell, Douglas, Ballagh, Rule, Brough, Breakey, Kirby and Wheaton.

Referee: Don Starr.

MCGILL-VARSITY POLO

won their last title; the one addition to their ranks was none other than Munroe Bourne, former Canadian Olympic swimmer. And it was largely due to the effective work of this all-round athletic star, that the Montrealers were able to dominate the scene Saturday night.

Only one penalty was handed out in the game which attracted a capacity crowd. The Toronto team, which was without the services of the McCarty brothers, matched speed with the winners, but were ineffective around the nets. McGill, on the other hand, proved themselves particularly proficient in this capacity and capitalized on each opportunity which was presented.

Curly Stratton, playing centre for the revamped Blues, turned in a brilliant game, scoring all three of the goals for the Toronto team. Freeman of the Redmen, was the only man to better this mark, scoring five goals for the winners. Bourne collected two, while Shapiro and Ross secured the remaining counters.

L. M. Fisher played a very effective game for Toronto, while Twible was very good on the defence. Beatty's shooting was right on, while Bradshaw as utility man performed at his best.

BEAVERS VS STOCKYARDS

Creasy played his usual good game of back checking, while Driscoll and Sissons, stalwart defencesmen, handed out the body checks freely.

Zulauf was a standout for the Packers, and is one of the fastest skaters in the league. Walker, a heady player, combined with Zulauf on several powerful plays.

Beavers: Goal, Owens; defence, Sissons, Driscoll; forwards, Stavart, Creasy, Burchell; alternates, Boddington, Bigelow, Galaway, Wilson.

Packers: Goal, Hall; defence, Marshall, Stewart; forwards, Walker, Lackey, Blaver; alternates, Morrison, Housley, Phillips, Zulauf.

Note to the Junior Class: Far off in Winnipeg, at the University of Manitoba, the freshman class held a hop. The affair assumed such large proportions that five orchestras, five ballrooms and two hotels were required to accommodate the crowd. Dancers were permitted to wander from one room or hotel to another.

Exhibition Fixture Provides

Powers of Players

In a pre-season tilt played in the big gym at Hart House on Friday night, Warren Stevens' Seniors defeated Mac McCutcheon's Intermediates by a score of 37-14. Being an exhibition tilt the game was allowed to run on into the minutes of overtime and during this period the Seniors ran the score to well over fifty points.

With Warren Stevens an absentee Coach McCutcheon handled both squads and used the substitutes on both teams very frequently. As a result the few fans present were given an excellent opportunity of sizing up Varsity's eage prospects for the coming season.

On the Senior squad the veterans, namely Gold, Marks and Connely, stood head and shoulders above all the others. The latter two specially were netting points with pleasing regularity. Varsity Seniors: C. Sullivan, Connely, Marks, Gold and Himel; subs, Mathews, McGregor, Krakauer, and S. Sullivan.

Varsity Intermediates: Hogg, McLaughlin, Peters, Dougherty, Cooper; subs, Bedford, Powers, Green, Denne.

let, then acrobatics, and finally a course in "declamation" before making her debut some ten years ago. She loves the little theatres of the Boulevards, especially the Athenée and the Mirabeau. "They are wonderful—I enjoy so much there playing!"

But her charm is felt equally in a boîte or an arena. Her songs are just as intimate and appealing to the second balcony as to the orchestrated plucocrat. She has already managed three cabarets in Paris "all grreat success" but Massey Hall is all right, too. We wondered if she were related to Lucien Boyer, poet-actor and proprietor of "The Ginger Moon" of Montmartre. She and her manager were greatly amused—it seems no interview on the continent is complete without that question. She is not, nor yet to Charles. Boyer is just a popular stage name in France.

Despite her enthusiastic reception at McGill, she still thinks we students are a serious lot. From replies to my brother-of-the-press's questions we also elicited that blue is still her favourite colour and the rose still her favourite flower. She also has a yen for "soupe à l'ionienne" and we seriously discussed the relative merits of Toronto's version of that French concoction.

The vivacious Parisienne is certainly an opportunist. Five years ago she collected a troupe and began with a tour of France. Why? "The talent was there" was her simple reply. She has since appeared in most European capitals except those of countries "prone to revolution". The actress is a business woman and takes few chances. Next year "si tout va bien" she plans to give China and Japan a good show.

And all does go well with Lucienne. "Je suis fêliche", she explained. She recognizes talent instinctively and to appear with her means success to her. She is perfectly confident of her luck, hence her song, "Take my roses, they will bring you happiness"; and do the lads scramble for them!

old dance with the foolishness of the modern hip-swing?

Courtney Benson, III Vic, said, "I'm the one who put the 'folk' in folk dancing. If the fad is creeping into corners that's where it belongs. The folks on you."

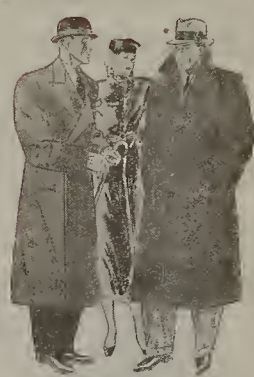

Stan Biggs, IV Trinity, said, "If it's a choice between folk dancing and tangoing, I'll take barn dancing. I believe, however, that the trend towards folk dancing, if there is such a trend, is merely a fad. Modern ballroom steps are here to stay."

Jack Taylor, I Law, "I like dancing cheek to cheek and am definitely against folk dancing. We should not tolerate such rowdiness as demonstrated by some students. Modesty, restraint and propriety should be the keynote of our social contacts."

Miss Miriam Large, III Vic, blushing blurted out: "Folk dancing is O.K. for variety and everyone should know a little about it—but just a little. It tends towards effeminacy on the part of males, and too much grace on the part of women."

will be one of the best-liked and make the best entertainment of any production this year at Hart House. Miss Ruth Cockeram plays the leading role with Sid Johnson, but as the entire cast is made up of past stars in Trinity plays, especially those who took part in last year's production, Berkeley Square, we can scarcely say that any two of the players are better than their fellows. The show tonight starts at 8.15 and will be repeated at the same time tomorrow and Wednesday. There are still seats left.

a solo part for the English horn. The familiar Finlandia, exhilarating as ever, led to the Finnish national anthem, concluding the program.

Sunday Evening Concert

For the Sunday night concert at Hart House last night, the Hart House String Quartet chose two pieces of chamber music; the one, "Moods", Opus 24 by the modern H. Waldo Warner, the other Schubert's well-known "Death and the Maiden". Tchaikowsky's "Andante Cantabile" was also played as an encore.

"Moods" was played with the variety of feeling necessary to interpret the work; from the staccato notes of the hysterical to the grandeur of the devotional mood it was rendered with understanding and the customary faultless technique of the Quartet.

The rendering of the poignantly dramatic theme of "Death and the Maiden" reaches even greater heights as the contrast between life and death was interpreted with a grandeur worthy of the subject. It would be a presumption to attempt a criticism of the masterful rendering of the Quartet; one can only say it was superb.

Imperial—

Sylvia Sidney has always been one of this critic's particular weaknesses. Simply let Miss Sidney's features crinkle into that dazzling smile, or let her brows knit in a puzzled frown—and she's got me. So it is with pleasure that I report that she seldom has been blessed with as good a role as she has in the current Imperial attraction, "Mary Burns—Fugitive". This compact, tense melodrama is produced by Walter Wanger, whose genius in handling a film with originality has been demonstrated before in such films as "Private Worlds" and "The President Vanishes".

Despite the fact that the whole film is filled with fast action, there are three scenes that will remain in the memory due to their novelty and dramatic power. They are the robbery of the crowded football stadium, the escape from the church and the final suspense-filled scene in the cabin. Melvyn Douglas, Alan Baxter and Brian Donley are all fully adequate in their roles and Wallace Ford and Pert Kelton play a G-Man and G-Woman, without the usual melodramatics.

Miss Sidney is a girl who gets railroaded to jail and makes an escape. It is after this escape that the picture becomes filled with action which never lets up, except for the occasional relief of such delightful scenes as that in which Sidney and Douglas, a snow-blinded explorer, argue over the respective merits of Popeye and Wimpy.

The stage show, which coyly calls itself "Calling All Sweethearts", is distinguished by four things—the singing of J. Harold Murray, once a screen star; the difficult toe tapping of Edith and Jack Barstow; some striking settings and costumes and probably the homeliest chorus that has hit the Imperial this year. The vaudeville is entertaining in spots, but undistinguished on the whole. But the picture is worth anyone's time and money.

LON LAWSON SEES SPREAD OF FASCISM

Deplorable Effects of Fascism
Now Evident in Europe

IS THREATENING CANADA

"The basic program of Fascism common to all phases of this movement is the attack on all individual or group monopolies," said Mr. Lon Lawson of the National Council of the Canadian League against War and Fascism. In addressing the Social Science Club yesterday afternoon, Mr. Lawson gave a thorough review of Fascism from all its varying angles.

Contrary to the once popular view that Fascism is a middle class movement, Mr. Lawson declared it to be supported and controlled by a certain section of the upper classes. Quoted statistics revealed that the council in power in Germany today is chiefly composed of men representing great individual or group wealth.

In spite of this fact and a compulsory-contributions relief system, there has been a tremendous out in the budget allowed by the German government for Social Service purposes.

Mr. Lawson reviewed briefly some of the most deplorable results of Fascist control in several European countries—loss of free speech and action, decay of culture due to restrictions imposed in many ways, and militaristic policies. In closing he said that Fascism is spreading rapidly in countries the world over, not excluding Canada, and stressed the urgent necessity for united and organized action against its forces.

Lynne Gordon Criticizes Co-eds Says College Girls Are Distant

TWO YEARS ENOUGH

Finds Graduates No More Clever Than Average Girls

College girls were severely criticized on several counts last night when two reporters interviewed Lynne Gordon, star of Harry Reser's show at the Royal York, and former student at New York University.

"You can nearly always tell a college girl on a dance floor," Miss Gordon, the loveliest singer Toronto has seen in long months, said. "They carry themselves absurdly erect and are hopelessly distant." In appearance the majority are feminine versions of the pictures in Esquire—carelessly dressed to a certain point, she claimed.

Experience with women graduates, she said, has shown her that "most of them are not more clever than the average girl without a university degree. The majority have merely memorized a few books and written a few essays." However, she admitted, a few have real ability.

"For cultural background a university education is a fine thing," she said, "but of little value in practical affairs." Miss Gordon was of the opinion that a degree is not an important thing, and that two years at any university is enough to get all the culture it has to offer.

Miss Gordon expressed interest in this university, and a desire to be shown around it. Readers are warned that these reporters have prior rights in this matter.

Staunch Battle Put Up by Pharmacy but in Vain

SCORE 10-5

Monday afternoon in the lower gym at Hart House a strong lacrosse team from Victoria swept through to the finals by defeating Pharmacy by 10-5. This game was the second in a two-game series, goals to count on the round, and as Vic had won the previous game 9-5 the series ended in Victoria's favour.

Pharmacy put up a staunch battle but were unable to cope with the brilliant checking of the Vic defence and the flashing attack of the Vic forwards, whose neat combination plays led to scores. Victoria were constantly pressing, resulting in a rather disorganized attack on the part of Pharmacy. Both teams seemed cautious at the start but the game soon became fast and furious as the players warmed up. However, it was a good exhibition of clean lacrosse and only a few minor penalties were given.

Holman with 4 goals and Young with 3 goals were the leading scorers for Vic while Dyke on defence and Brown in goal played nice games. Bergin with two goals stood out on the Pharmacy attack.

Pharmacy: Goal, Blackmore; defence, Berkan; centre, Pronger; rover, Bergin; forward, Ellinghausen; subs, MacIntyre, Jackson, Langdon.

Victoria: Goal, Brown; defence, Dyke; centre, Burgess; rover, Young; forward, Wilkinson; subs, Holman, Bentley, Cummings, Casserly.

Referees: Starr and Burchell.

Carol Anderson, daughter of Professor J. G. Anderson, Nigel and Joan Baillie, children of Professor Baillie, were amongst those at the party, who claimed to have already despatched their Santa Claus mail.

The presence of the spirit of Christmas was well illustrated as everyone joined in the singing of old-fashioned Christmas carols.

The most appreciated part of the program was a Nativity play directed by Miss Lucy Jane Grabell.

Engineer Girls Are Contented Tho' Very Sparsely Represented

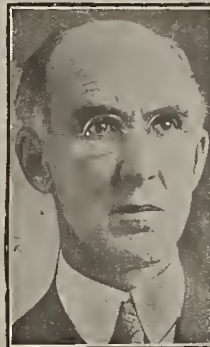

The engineers of the University are, practically 100 per cent in favour of their co-ed associates, The Varsity discovered in a series of interviews on Friday.

We discovered Freddie Smith of IVth year Architecture, working with a sponge, a bucket of water, and a piece of paper. "The co-eds are a very good thing for the morale of the department," he said. "They teach us self-control."

His companion in crime, K. G. Keith, was not so sure. "They straighten their professors' watch chains, and other similar tricks," he claimed. "No, they don't cramp our style, except in night work."

H. G. Meredith, of first year Chemistry, seemed a good man to see on the subject; he works beside a co-ed in the Drawing Room. "Oh, they're all right. It doesn't make any difference to me. It's only for two hours a week, anyway," he said.

Grant Clarkson, IInd year Mechanicals, claims, "It's a swell idea, but there aren't enough of go around. But I think that Victoria women wouldn't quite fit in with S.P.S. standards." It had a bit of a personal flavour in it, but we let it go.

Says Strong Conservative Party Necessary To Conserve Empire

William J. Stewart, Former Mayor of Toronto, Tells Macdonald-Cartier Club that He is Ready to Accept Leadership of Conservative Party

HAS BEEN MENTIONED AS POSSIBLE LEADER

Need for Reorganization and New Leadership in Ranks of Ontario Conservatives Stressed by Stewart

William J. Stewart, former mayor of Toronto, will accept the leadership of the Conservative party in Ontario if it is offered to him, according to a statement made in addressing the Macdonald-Cartier Club in Hart House yesterday. Mr. Stewart has frequently been mentioned as a possible leader in recent years, but has heretofore avoided any definite statement of his ambitions in this direction.

The need for reorganization in the ranks of the Ontario Conservatives, and new leadership for the party were stressed by Mr. Stewart in his address. He also warned his hearers that Canada's attitude toward the proposed oil embargo against Italy might endanger imperial ties, urging the necessity of a strong Conservative party to uphold the solidarity of the Empire.

Members of the staff may obtain these certificates at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall.

BALANCE ESSENTIAL IN PLANNING ROOM

Various Devices Said to Produce Rhythm and Emphasis in Furnishing

FURNITURE ACCENTS MOOD

Balance, rhythm, and emphasis in interior decorating were the points stressed yesterday in an illustrated lecture delivered by Miss E. Hamilton at the Museum.

It might be noted that a room, clothing or a picture must have the right balance in order to be pleasing to the eye. Miss Hamilton pointed out that there were two main types of balance, namely bi-symmetrical balance having everything of equal weight placed at equal distances from a central point and asymmetrical balance placing the smaller things farther from the central point than the larger things. The former type is used more in great halls where one wishes to produce an atmosphere of dignity, while a more cosy air is acquired in a room by the adoption of the latter form. Usually both these forms are combined.

Rhythm in planning a room was shown to have definite advantages. Rhythm may be obtained by repetition of motifs, by graduating sizes progressing from small furniture to a larger type.

Mr. Stewart described the Tory platform as being one of conservatism, constitutionalism and positive action, based on experience, as opposed to the inaction and laissez-faire principles of the Whigs and the headlong plunging into experimentalism which characterizes the radical parties. "I support the Conservative party out of conviction," the ex-mayor stated.

"Two many people vote first and think afterwards," he claimed and suggested that "our civilization is threatened because people don't take the time to think."

The former chief magistrate drew a parallel between political parties and business firms. He pointed out that after a failure the latter always undergo reorganization and he suggested that in view of the failure of the Conservative party in the provincial and federal elections, it too needs a directors' meeting to reorganize and modernize. "Some public men believe that the office they hold is to dignify them, whereas actually they should dignify the office," he opined. He suggested that when a man receives an office it does not always fit the man, nor does the man always fit it.

"Are we willing to permit the insertion of the thin edge of the wedge which will eventually pry Canada from the empire?" he asked, referring to Canada's attitude towards League of Nations oil embargo against Italy. He stressed the fact that the party should not allow Canada to become known as a godless country, and he urged that it should teach loyalty to King and to Empire.

"The future of our party depends upon leadership—leadership that seeks and accepts counsel and advice—leadership that leads," the speaker said, warning against a stacking of the cards

ENGINEERING GRADUATE DIES AS A RESULT OF LABORATORY ACCIDENT

The many friends of Arthur Ridley, who graduated in Chemical Engineering last year, will be saddened to learn of his death, which occurred as a result of an explosion which took place while an experiment was being performed in the Goodyear Rubber Company's laboratory.

Ridley died last evening after spending two weeks in the hospital. He had previously contracted pneumonia which no doubt hastened his end.

Few facts could be learned concerning the nature of the explosion, the Goodyear Company refusing to issue any statement.

Public Speaking

Sir Robert Falconer is reported to have declared in a recent address that the number of public speakers who speak neither clearly nor loudly enough to be heard properly is shocking. Anyone who is accustomed to attend public lectures as frequently as Varsity reporters will heartily agree with Sir Robert.

One would imagine that men—and women, too, who by reason of their position in life are frequently called upon to speak in public, would make an effort to acquire some proficiency in the art. It is positively painful sometimes to listen to a president of a society or chairman of a meeting introduce the speaker of the occasion. The remarks are either made in such a small voice that they are lost upon all but the first two rows, or else they are stammered out among so many ah's and um's that the listener feels like giving some assistance.

Such people are quite frequently those who have found themselves faced for the first time in their lives with the necessity of addressing an audience and who suffer for their inexperience. For these we can only regret that public speaking is not an integral part of our educational curriculum. One oral composition a year during the High School course is not enough to develop intelligent, intelligible orators.

Feeble introductory remarks can be overlooked, however, in the contemplation of hearing a good address by the main speaker. Blessed is he that expecteth not! Unfortunately the people who are not worth hearing are very often the worst speakers. We have been to Saturday evening lectures in Convocation Hall given by men of great distinction in their respective fields. The lectures are invariably excellent, or rather would be if they were not so hard to listen to.

The most common offence is not speaking loudly enough. The most interested audience becomes tired of straining its ears in the course of an hour-long address. Then there are the lamentable mannerisms in which people who should know better tend to indulge. It is amazing how few public speakers know where to put the pauses in their sentences in order to make them intelligible. We all know the lecturer who says three words at a time and always accents the least important one.

Our pet peeve, however, is the man who has his speech written and who reads it off at top speed without lifting his eyes. It would be less painful if he were to distribute mimeographed copies and let us read his speech for ourselves.

Surely any man who has studied any subject sufficiently to want to tell the public about it should also desire to present it in an interesting and audible manner.

A. M. & D.

In memory of Sir Albert Gooderham, the Brahms Requiem was sung in Massey Hall on Sunday afternoon. The Conservatory Choir joined with the Toronto Symphony orchestra under Sir Ernest MacMillan.

The German Requiem was written to a peculiar text derived by Brahms from the Old and New Testaments and from the Apocrypha. It is difficult to discover any rational or emotional order in the text—it being made up simply of comments on the general topic of Death. It may be noted that the last chorus contains a musical as well as a literary allusion to the first. The work abounds in sudden contrasts.

The choir did not sing perfectly, but they sang with greater tonal range than previously. Effects were never forced and if flaws showed in the fugal "Now, O Lord, what do I wait for" or in the difficult accelerando in the Sixth Chorus, one should remember that this was their first reading of the Requiem.

Erma Browncombe sang the soprano solo with distinction. Her voice was small but came through the orchestra perfectly. Her singing was just sufficiently sensuous for Brahms—and no more. Possessing everything but maturity, she is a brilliant "find". Robert Hatley was the baritone. The part was exacting and he had some difficulty in coping with the conductor's intensive interpretation of the Requiem.

Sir Ernest has the happy faculty of giving fresh and original readings of standard compositions without ever appearing revolutionary. Under his authoritative baton, the German Requiem was strangely new and yet was accepted without question. He blended the austere and sensuous elements of the music with perfect balance. The harsh sorrowful "All flesh doth perish as the grass" led naturally to the waltz-like "How lovely are thy dwellings".

Obviously the conductor's attention was chiefly centred on the choir and the orchestra had to carry on with less than the usual minute direction. They played splendidly except during the pianissimo passages where Brahms' scoring makes it difficult to preserve complete smoothness.

The Eternal Dollar

Once more there has been brought home to us the power of the "Great God Gold". Frenzied editors of college magazines may beg, harangue, implore students for contributions for their publications, with but feeble response: The Varsity offers remuneration for material published in the Christmas Literary Issue and is deluged with contributions.

Not that one is inclined to damn completely those literary lights who find the artistic spark kindled to flame by the thought of money. It seems typical of the modern attitude to all things: the almighty dollar quickens enthusiasm even for artistic endeavour. Art is no longer divorced from life and the constant chasing after money which characterizes modern life. Hence the literary output of students is conditioned by monetary considerations. The general student attitude is "why write something gratis when you can, perhaps, get paid for your literary efforts?" Yet students are considered impractical, by hardened business men. The University is said to be aloof from the crass materialism of the outside world!

A Progressive Judge

A noteworthy experiment aimed at reducing crime by nipping it in the bud is under way by Judge Jacob M. Braude of Chicago. He has enlisted the co-operation of stockyard officials, hotel managers, department store operators and other business men of the city in securing 500 jobs of "good hard work" for youthful first offenders who find their way to his court.

The judge believes these young criminals will respond to a probation of hard work, and he further declares that the prevention plan will save the city money in the long run.

In appealing to the merchants, Judge Braude calls on those who have hobbies of one sort or another to take up the study of human character as a hobby.

"I guarantee you'll get a lot of fun out of seeing a boy develop in his job," he told them.

—Oklahoma Daily.

Hobbies

One of the most interesting characteristics of a well-educated person is his avocation or hobby.

Nothing reveals more clearly the possibilities a person possesses than his ability to relax and enjoy working at or talking about his sideline.

Many college graduates feel that their education is complete when they have finished the general academic requirements and have chosen a specialized field of study. True, this is part of the process of education, but an education should provide one with equipment to get the most from life.

There is ample material in this university centre to arouse several side interests for all students enrolled.

We are three lads from Trinity,

This Co-ed playroom cannot be,
For we enjoy our privacy.

A woman's place is in the home,
And if to college she must come,
By all the gods, she shall not roam,
Into our cellar common room.

Our college does with Saints abound,
And we don't want them all around;
A manly refuge must be found,
So we retire underground.

There are things transpire there,
That a woman cannot share;
So thanks the same, we do not care,
To sacrifice our puerile lair.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Royal Alexandra

Ruth Draper presents at the Royal Alexandra this week a program of her well known character sketches. Unfortunately she does not offer any new numbers; she is content to charm her audience with established pieces.

There can be no question as to the merits of Miss Draper's performance. She has the ability to completely enter into the personality of her characters. Each is different, the voice, the gestures and even the face is mobile. Particularly does her voice adapt itself to the role and while we may find traces of the same gestures, her voice has a marvellous range.

"Three Ladies and Mr. Clifford" was perhaps the most interesting number on the program. In three scenes she creates the character of a successful business man by showing him in relation to his secretary, to his wife and to his mistress.

It is very easy for the audience to focus its attention on the acting and to neglect the actual lines. When Miss Draper presents "In a Church in Italy" we become interested in her rapid change from one character to another, the English lady, the Americans, the German Frau and the Italians. In "Three Ladies and Mr. Clifford" we watch the creation of a character in which Miss Draper's ability as an actress is balanced by her skill as an author. It is this balance that makes Draper the artist she is.

A COMMON NEED

Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir:

A thoughtful consideration of the curriculum of the University of Toronto has led to the recognition of the necessity for a course on the Family. This course would include a study of the history, economic, legal, medical and social aspects of the Modern Family.

Some education is necessary along these lines because all of us are members of some family (the basic unit of society). As members of families we should know something of the factors involved in the Family. How many students know how to make a family budget?

Though we are at University for culture not one of us can hope to become familiar with all the aspects of each branch of knowledge.

However, if every student took a course which included the application of each branch of culture to each one of us, as members of a family, then we would readily acquire vital knowledge with specialization.

For example—a course including the legal aspects of the family will not make us lawyers. It will enable us to face life with this cultural tool at our disposal.

We can, then, specialize in one particular branch of knowledge without

VARSITY SENIORS MEET WEST END IN BASKETBALL

BLUES TO TRY THEIR STRENGTH AS BASKETBALL OPENS HERE

West End Y and Stevens' Squad to Play Hart House Prior to U.S. Tour

VETERAN PLAYERS SHIFTED

Lively Spirit of New Men Offers Promise of Success

Warren Stevens Blue cagers, with the help of West End Y, will officially open the 1935-36 basketball season at Hart House tonight at 8.45 p.m. The game will be the only one in which the Blues will participate before leaving on the first half of their U.S. tour on Thursday.

The Y cagers have become the surprise team of the Toronto Major League with two victories and no defeats on their record. Last Saturday night the West Enders defeated Broadway Y, intermediate champions of Canada last year, on the home floor of the champions. This came on the heels of a victory over Danforth S.M.C. and put the West Enders at the top of the league.

The present Blue squad is built around the veterans of last year's squad, Gold, Connelly and Marks. Marks has been shifted to the centre post while Connelly has been moved from a guard to a forward position. Himel and Charles Sullivan of last year's intermediates round out the starting squad. Mathews, a newcomer from Niagara Falls, is slated to relieve Marks at centre. Krakauer, McGregor and T. Sullivan hold down the remaining berths on the squad.

Although it is pretty much of a certainty that this year's squad will not turn in the near-perfect record of last year's Blues, Steve's lads will no doubt give a good account of themselves throughout the year. Marks and Connelly during last Friday's exhibition game, showed that they had reached top form, while Phil Gold, the captain of the team, was his old reliable self. Should a couple of the newcomers come through as expected the Blue cagers will again be a threat on Toronto floors.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George Vair

On Saturday the Canadian Intercollegiate Rugby Union held its annual fall meeting down in Montreal and the representatives passed a motion to abolish the present play-off system which has been in use for the past two seasons. That means they will revert to the former point system and the league leading team at the finish of the season will be declared champions without having to play the second placers for the Yates, greenbacks or what have you!

Force of public opinion and the press is rumoured to be the reason for the change since the play-off system has caused nothing but dissension since its inception two years ago. Whether or not the printing of recent editorials by the Queen's Journal, the McGill Daily or The Varsity commenting on the unfairness of this extra game had anything to do with the ultimate decision is not known but it undoubtedly helped to bring prominence to the question.

For those who have argued the respective merits of American and Canadian football the enlightening article by Henry McLemore as printed following the Winnipeg-Hamilton final should prove interesting. McLemore, who has seen both sides of the argument, says that the Canadian style of play is more fascinating from the spectator's viewpoint. He has nothing but praise for the kicking and end runs as displayed last Saturday and contends that the Canucks have it over the Southerners in both departments. I guess Hanson made up his mind.

While Victoria have won a place in the lacrosse finals O.C.E. and Jr. S.P.S. must replay Friday's tie game to determine a winner in that group. After winning the first game by a top heavy score the teachers eased up and the Engineers secured a draw in the second contest. The referee declared the game over, thereby giving O.C.E. the group, but the men from the little red schoolhouse had other ideas and found backing for them in Rule 15, (Rules governing interfaculty sports), in the Athletic Handbook. The rule says that "matches must be played until one or other of the competing teams has been declared a winner, unless, in the opinion of the referee, continuation of the game should be impracticable." A meeting of the managers ruled that the game should be replayed and the Schoolmen get their second chance tonight. At that the referee was not entirely wrong since Rule 12 says when scoring is by goals, a win shall count 2 points and a draw 1 point.

Tonight the Varsity seniors minus the services of Bruce Charles, husky defenceman, take the ice against the Pt. Colborne Sailors at the Varsity Arena. Playing on foreign ice seems to get the Blues down since they have lost both games away by large scores. The Ports conceded a 4-1 victory to Oakville last week; we tied Oakville this season, so how about cheering the boys on to a win tonight. It would come in very handy right now.

After one year's absence from the coaching bench as far as basketball is concerned Stevens will send his big team out against West End in the basketball opener tonight at Hart House. The champs showed they still have plenty of scoring punch when they netted 37 points against the Seconds in a practice game last Friday, but the Y.M.C.A. team is rated tops and already has one victory to its credit. The game starts at 8.45 sharp.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

Although Vic missed winning the interfaculty basketball championship by a close margin, they made up for it by taking the baseball championship from St. Mike's. The second and deciding game of the series was played on Friday night, and the Vic team won it 15-12. The St. Mike's girls had piled up quite a good lead, and then the Vic team went to town and made nine runs in one inning. They succeeded in holding their lead, and so took the championship.

The game was a very good one, and the St. Mike's team put up a good fight, but the Vic girls were determined not to relinquish their monopoly of baseball honours. This is the fourth consecutive year that the Scarlet and Gold team has won the championship, which is quite a record. Our congratulations, Vic!

With the interfaculty basketball and baseball seasons over, there isn't much doing right now in women's sports. U.C. are planning to have their inter-year hockey games sometime before Christmas, but these may be held either this week or next. These games usually provide some of the year's best entertainment, and players and spectators usually finish doubled up with mirth. There is also a more serious purpose in having them, since it gives the hockey executive a chance to look over the material, and pick out tentatively the U.C. hockey team, but don't miss them if you want to have some fun.

This afternoon in the boxing events the 145 lbs. and the 155 lbs. events will be run off with the following competitors entered: Mighton, Jackson, Reynolds, Boddington, Graham, Bankie, McLaren, Gayman and Cryderman in the welter-weight class, while the 155 will see O'Brien, Owen, and Kelley mingling with the latter men in each line-up drawing the bye.

In the wrestling divisions Wear, Wolfe, Gold and Spence meet to settle the 135, and the 145 brings together Scott, Comfort, Anglin, Hay, Ray, Hershoran, Rotzke, Barstine, Orgill, Grasley and Boland. The 155 and 165 lbs. classes has Boyd, Cruickshank, Bolton, Houle, Carroll, Levinson and Williams. The middleweight class has Scott, Watt, Parker, Zavanagh, Scott and Bowles. IN PLANNING INTERIOR

The value of lines in furniture was shown. A long vertical line producing a sense of dignity, one that is horizontal displaying supreme contentment, oblique lines giving a feeling of rapid motion and finally the curving line one of stability and charm.

Before emphasizing any special article in a room, a sense of simplicity in all things was needed. Usually the fireplace or a very large window in a room deserves the extra merit of emphasis. Finally such devices as grouping, decoration and texture tend to emphasize many things.

All these points, however, if used with a sense of discretion, may be employed in the furnishing of an attractive room.

BLUES PLAY ON HOME ICE

Retribution may be at hand tonight when the Port Colborne Sailors clash with the University of Toronto team at Varsity Arena, as the Blue-clad warriors are still smarting from the 7-0 greeting they received in the Port Colborne Arena. Last night the Varsity lads went through their paces with a grim finality, promising plenty of opposition for the Sailors contest.

Failure to cover up when on the attack spelled defeat for the Blue and White while Port Colborne rose to the occasion to gain their first win of the year. The Blues will still be without Charles, sturdy rear-guardman, but Bill Brown can be counted on to make a good showing.

The work of MacPherson and McClelland in the workouts stands out as does that of Ace Lenahan and Jeffrey and these boys are due to crack the score column any time. This week the Blue training quarters the lads really got down to work and more than at

CONTENTMENT REIGNS AMONG ENGINEERS

before we could get anything more from the dear readers, an unsympathetic professor gave us a general idea of the social standing of reporters, and suggested that the drawing room was made for work; obviously it was no place for us; crimson-cheeked, we withdrew.

The other half of the beautiful engineers were not to be found in person anywhere; we resorted to the telephone. It's easier anyway. Miss A. M. Prescott, IVth year Chemicals, answered promptly. Yes, she just loves her work, and she claims that the engineers are as fine a bunch of boys as can be found anywhere.

This was all so much alike. Hopefully we dialed a Kingsdale number to get Miss E. M. Sheppard of third year Chemistry.

"Hello, Miss Sheppard, this is The Varsity. We are getting the opinions of all the co-ed engineers about their studies and their associates."

"Oh, how interesting." We gulped, and admitted that she was a well of truth.

"How do you find your course? Is it very difficult?"

"Oh, I find it tremendously interesting. I like it very much."

"And how do you find your fellow engineers? Do they bother you?"

"May be the question was a little ambiguous at that; there was silence for a moment, and then the terse comment: 'Engineers are gentlemen.'"

It was the last straw in the camel's back of our surprise. Feebly murmuring words of thanks, we hung up.

gan to outline his ideas on his band, music, and college.

"The banjo is not a great musical instrument, but is pleasing to many. I picked it up just as it was becoming popular, having started as a violinist. I play and arrange for all our musical instruments."

"There are a few college boys in our outfit," he said. "I can tell a college boy by his dancing if he is of the College Humour type, not otherwise. I like co-eds, I'll take one anytime."

"This is our first working trip to Canada, although I have spent many vacations here, in Montreal, Toronto, and the North."

The Cliquot band has many original and advanced features—the electric organ, electric-stringed guitars, and valve trombones being notable. Reser believes that the trend in dance music is toward the swinging tempo.

The show is fast-moving and entertaining, pleasing to the eye and ear. It is replete with lovely ladies, and exquisite costumery.

The co-eds, however, were much relieved when they learned that the bird was not a stork, but a long-billed, blue heron.

HORACE HONOURED ON ANNIVERSARY

poet of antiquity." At this point President Cody expressed the following reasons. "Namely, we are putting ourselves in line with the learned literary societies everywhere. Celebrations are being held on practically every continent in the world. In the second place our University motto 'Velut arbor aevum' is a direct quotation from Horace. In the third place, the world owes so much to the ideals of the Augustan age."

Professor De Witt of Victoria College gave a concise biography of Horace, tracing his main thoughts and ideals of life. "The philosophy of Horace is based on the ideals of Epicurus, whose main theory was to study one's own faults. Horace followed the belief that human faults could be remedied by gradually eliminating them one by one. He was generous, kind and popular. No other poet has had so many friends, which constitute such a variety of types of personality," said Professor DeWitt. The works of Horace were of great influence in creating the gentleman, in the true sense of the word, the kind-hearted, loyal and truthful man. Horace believed in living from day to day.

He desires no monument to be erected in his image but desires his only monument to be "in the hearts of men". Here Professor DeWitt intimated that maybe Horace did not like to see his own image in marble.

"Horace exemplifies the perfect model of classical poetry, that is, he says what he wants to; no more and no less," stated Professor MacKay in his paper on "The Art and Influence of Horace".

"The work of Horace is carefully built and defies any decay. He aims not to startle and stun, but to please, in his poetry and this accounts for the lasting popularity of his work." Horace's definition of poetry is the knack of handling words. He believed that form was necessary for execution but that this is not the main feature of convincing poetry; subject matter and teaching, play an important part in poetry. Professor MacKay concluded with a clever poem, characterizing Horace.

President Cody brought the meeting to a close after he had summed up the main thought of the celebration with his own tribute to that great poet of the ages, Horace.

modern ideas. The stilted opening scene although rather disappointing, led to rapid moving dialogue which found its highlights in descending from the sublime seriousness to the effective quips of modern usage. The players indulging in the vernacular carried the theme to a pleasing ridiculous turn which found its culmination in the terms of "lousy", "strikes", and "Can I give you a lift", among others.

The dialogue between Jonah and the Whale proved to be rather ineffective chiefly due to the poor acoustics, but the parts of Bisham, the commercial traveller, Jonah, Euodias and Esthemoa were well enacted by Stewart Parker, Sidney Johnson, Ruth Cockram and Ursula Bennett respectively. The acting of Esthemoa was particularly effective in the society meeting scene while the character of Euodias was brilliantly portrayed, reaching the climax in a scene of tender devotion. On the whole the play was well done and the Trinity Dramatic Society under the direction of Mr. Dixon Wagner made a very successful attempt in introducing this play as Entertaining Morality.

F.L.H.S.

Conservatory String Quartet

The Conservatory String Quartet presented their third recital of the season last Saturday evening, assisted by William Primrose, violinist, and Leo Barkin, pianist.

The program opened with Mozart's "Humming" Quartet—so-called because of the lively opening theme. The playing was not up to the usual standard, being rather uncertain, particularly in the first movement, and leaving the impression that it was merely a program filler.

The Bax Sonata for viola and piano, played by William Primrose and Leo Barkin, was a vivid and interesting work. To listen to Mr. Primrose was a revelation of the possibilities of the viola. The sonata was introduced by Leo Smith, and needs little additional comment, except to mention again the economical, closely-packed way in which it is written—every note and phrase having a definite meaning. The masterful playing of a difficult work, the perfect balance of viola and piano, were worthy of more comment than space here permits.

The program on the whole was an outstanding one, and the presence of Mr. Primrose had much to do with that, not only for his capable, fluent playing, but for the unifying effect of his personality in the highly satisfying Quintet. T.D.N.

being in danger of losing that mental balance and perspective which, at times, is lost with specialization.

Have we students found that we are missing something unifying? Do the students want a course on the Family? Can we afford to go on any longer without it?

G. O. Watts, IV B. & M.

Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir:

I think that anyone who attended the Women's Intercollegiate Debate between Queen's and Varsity could not fail to receive some impressions that were not wholly satisfactory.

In the first place, despite extensive advertising and the fact that the subject discussed was a vital one, the attendance was poor. However, that might have been expected for various reasons that do not merit investigation at present.

Instead, I should like to take space enough to comment on the general attitude of University men students towards women debaters. From various interviews, it is obvious that, in the male opinion, women will never rise to very great heights in oratory—particularly in political discussions. In view of this fact, we appreciate their presence at our debates. But it seems entirely unnecessary for some to give such subtle expressions to their opinions—even in the presence of visitors. Those at the debate last Friday night will understand that I refer to the manner in which the Speaker's interpretation of the Constitution was given an impertinent and untimely criticism by one who was not even a member of the society. Further discussion of the matter is unnecessary. But I only wish to suggest that, whatever their opinions the gentlemen of the University should not only give us due credit for carrying on our debates to the best of our ability, but should show as much courtesy and discretion, if not sincere interest, when they attend these debates.

Other Solutions than Pacifism Sought to World Problem of Permanent Peace

OUTSIDERS INVITED

Four members of the faculty will lead off the debate of the Victoria College Debating Society tonight. A record crowd is expected to invade Alumni Hall to hear the pedagogues and students debate the motion "That pacifism is not enough."

Professor Grube will side with Professor Sissons in taking the negative, while R. D. Riddell and Professor Underhill will uphold the affirmative.

John Jones, president of the society, stated last night that students would be allowed to speak from the floor after the professors had opened the debate. Debaters from other colleges are invited to Victoria tonight, the president said.

"The main issue will be whether pacifism is a practical solution to the problem of peace," Jones said.

He urged students attending the debate to be in the hall by eight o'clock. Speaker Harold Bailey will be in the chair.

150 Interviews Indicate Very Few Libertines in Any Faculty

By Ross Munroe

The virtue and moral integrity of the University of Toronto co-eds is approximately seven per cent higher than that of the men students, it was revealed to The Varsity last night by a group of anonymous undergraduates who canvassed the campus with a "purity test" in the past three days.

The purity quotient of the co-eds averaged 66.4 per cent while that of the men slumped to 59.3 per cent.

The test consisted of a questionnaire of 18 questions ranging from smoking, drinking, necking, down to the last query "have you gone the limit".

Varied forms of deviation from the straight and narrow path of puritanical morality made up the questionnaire. The questions were statistically weighted and heavy penalty put on persons with libertine tendencies.

Truckin' Catchin' On But Not Yet Popular

Opinions Differ as to Latest Dance Craze — "Lousy" and "Swell"

HOT FROM HARLEM

According to a news item in yesterday's Mail and Empire Park Avenue is "truckin'," but according to an interview with various and sundry students the University of Toronto is definitely not "truckin'." Few of the students know what "truckin'" is and of those few the majority are not in favour of it.

"Truckin'," for the benefit of the unenlightened many about the campus, is the latest dance craze in New York, and was introduced in the Cotton Club Revue of 1936. Also, Cab Calloway (Continued on Page 4)

PLAYERS' GUILD ENO TERM WITH USUAL DISCUSSION GROUP

This afternoon the Players' Guild will hold their traditional end-of-term tea. This tea is held so that there may be genial discussion of the term's dramatic work and plans for the future.

Miss Jim Watts will be the guest. She will speak on "The Social Theatre". Miss Watts studied last year in New York with the Theatre Union and the Group Theatre. This autumn she attended the Moscow Theatre Festival. She is now using her valuable experience organizing the "Theatre of Action" in Canada. Miss Watts is also directing the first Toronto production of last year's great New York success "Waiting for Lefty".

TIM BUCK TO SPEAK AT COMMUNIST CLUB

New Organization Expects to Assume Political Status on Campus

STUENTS ONLY

Tim Buck will definitely speak to the newly formed Communist Club tonight. He will talk on "The Road Ahead for Canada" at 8 p.m. in the auditorium of the Women's Union and it has been stated that only college students will be admitted and that precautions are being taken to ensure this.

At the meeting tonight the executive of the Communist Club will be elected. The program of the club is not yet clearly formulated but it is expected that it will be something similar to the October Club at Oxford. There the club is not very actively political but more of an academic organization, studying the literature and history of the Communist movement. The Communist Club hopes to take a position on the campus along with the Conservative, Liberal and C.C.F. organizations and be a sort of campus expression of the political tendency in Canada.

M. & P.'ers Frolic At the Women's Union

The "Mathematical Blues" will not be sung at the M. & P. dance at the Women's Union tomorrow night because those hard-working intellectuals are taking a holiday from higher mathematics and plan to be very, very gay—to get freshened up for the coming term exams, perhaps.

One of those math-wizards integrated the evening's possibilities and got a very agreeable answer, indeed, so agreeable that members of the faculty, including a certain well-known Physics professor, are going to attend.

The time limit has been extended to midnight, indicating an interesting evening with the Devitt Bros. orchestra providing the harmony and the Women's Union providing refreshments.

Sailors Swamp Blues Taking 9-3 Victory

Port Colborne Check Varsity to a Standstill and Outplay Blues

OWEN HAS OFF-NIGHT

By Frank Lamberti

Riding on the crest of a scoring spree which began last Friday, the Port Colborne Sailors punched home nine goals last night at Varsity Arena to set back the Blue and White puckchasers 9-3. The continual back-checking of the Sailors harassed the Blues throughout the contest.

Failure to keep their checks well covered spelled disaster for the Varsity sextet while the Port Colborne squad sifted through time and again to beat Owen. Several of the counters were of the soft variety and seemed to take the Blues by surprise.

HART HOUSE INVITES FOREIGN STUDENTS TO CHRISTMAS DINNER

As in past years undergraduate members of Hart House, who live in countries other than Canada or in the distant parts of the Dominion and are thus unable to spend any part of the Christmas vacation at home, are informed that they may enter their names at the Warden's office for the Christmas dinner at Hart House on Friday 20th December. The Canadian Singers have kindly offered to sing carols after dinner and the Warden will have a small gift for each man present.

Any member intending to be present is urgently requested to signify his intention to do so by informing the Warden's office as soon as possible.

HART HOUSE QUARTET WILL BE HERE FRIDAY

The program in Convocation Hall on Friday night by the Hart House Quartet will consist of Haydn "Emperor" Quartet, and Schubert "Death and the Maiden" Quartet. Both of these are two of the most popular quartets in the classical repertory of chamber music. Single admissions may be purchased at the door.

Varsity Take Early Lead and Outplay West-End All the Way

By Clarke Hood

The Varsity senior basketball quintet won their initial game of the Big Four series when they downed West End Y 34-21 last night in the Hart House gym. This marked the first defeat of the Y team, they previously having downed the other two members of the group, Broadview and Danforth S.C.M.

The Stevens coached collegians were easily the best on last night's play and appear to be headed for another great season. The game was far from being a classy exhibition of the winter pastime, but this was due mainly to the slow defensive play of the visitors. At times Varsity opened up the game and then the small crowd had something to cheer about.

DICKENS DUBBED GREAT REFORMER

Renowned Author's Work Related to His Sympathies

OFTEN MISUNDERSTOOD

"To do good and be good is the feeling inspired by the novels of Charles Dickens," stated Dr. George Dickenson in his lecture on Charles Dickens at the Metropolitan Church last night.

Dr. Dickenson dealt not so much with the novels themselves as with the humanitarian aspect of Dickens' work. Dickens, he pointed out, was one of the world's greatest humanitarians not because he pitied the poor, not because he championed the poor, not because he dearly loved the people, but because he was the people.

The misfortunes and misery of Dickens' youth were described, showing their relationship to his keen and (Continued on Page 4)

Co-eds, are your complexions your own?

A long time ago, 1928 to be exact, some British schoolboys came 'ovah heah' and "asserted that girls started to paint and powder while at college. Beasts unfiah, you know." And our fair maidens were righteously indignant. Got up on their 'igh' horses, they did. They even wrote letters to The Varsity. After all, surely it was only the fresh air bringing colour to their cheeks after the brisk walk up from College Street, or perhaps they did eat cherries all winter. How could the Britishers know?

Co-eds, how many times have you heard this story? "Why, when I was young, a girl had to be beautiful before anyone would call her good-looking. Nowadays, you're all painted up like savages with your red lipstick and rouge and blue and purple eye-shadow, and your powder looking as if you'd been dipped in a flour barrel." They had one consolation, girls. They didn't have to worry about whether their noses were shiny or not. They knew they were.

To go on with the lecture, "Why, when I was your age, a little talcum under my arms and my make-up was complete." "Oh mother, how you do go on, and out loud too." (What would you call that, "Confessions of a Co-ed's Mother" or something?)

But alas and alack! Times have changed. (Ditto, how many times . . .) You couldn't say now that girls are starting to use make-up at college. Those at High School would be insulted. In fact, what are you going to do with that precocious kid sister of eleven, who will insist on "flaming forth like a red flag", with her face made up like a French coquette, only with less art, in her ridiculous high heels (Continued on Page 4)

Janitor Deceives Inventor Bushmen Violate Convention

Forestry students are said to be having their troubles these days. It is reported that they have been locked out of their common room, they have been locked out of their library and now they have taken chairs and refuge in the wash-room. It all seems to have started when the janitor forgot to give heat to the common room. So the enterprising woodsmen, accustomed to keeping themselves warm in climatic variations, gathered together some papers (some *Varsity*s to be exact), and lit a warming fire. They got heat, also the janitor's goat. In fact he was so enraged that he locked the common room.

The hardy men of the north were now without a place to smoke their corn-cobs and eat their grub. Undaunted by the ways of civilized men, they took over an hallowed hall, known as the library. This was a definite infraction of all that is holy. Again the beloved janitor stepped in and locked up the book-room.

Foresters know one very good maxim, "Necessity is the mother of invention" and this mixed with one of the venerable mottoes, "Foresters are bored by convention" was enough to get them what they needed. With little more ado they carted chairs below to the wash-room and fitted up a new haven of rest. As yet the swinging doors have not been padlocked.

When interviewed, the foresters could no more than cast their curses at the janitor. As far as The Varsity could learn he is a reptile of the lowest order, a Jonah, a Judas, and so on all through the night. One highly esteemed gentleman of Trees remarked "They should either make the bloke Dean or throw him out." Which all goes to show that Foresters do not always use their hatchets to cut. Or something.

Individual Initiative In Football

Following the visit of that able sports commentator, Henry McLemore, at Hamilton last Saturday, there appeared in a syndicated column in most of the newspapers of Canada and the United States a comparison between American and Canadian football, based on Mr. McLemore's observation of the Dominion final between Hamilton and Winnipeg.

Mr. McLemore's comparison was decidedly favourable to the Canadian game. He advocated the adoption of certain Canadian characteristics directly by the American rule-makers.

Very few of us here in Canada have seen much American football except as caught by the movie camera, but for a long time it has been obvious that the stressing of initiative on the part of the individual players, in the backfield in particular, is the thing which makes football such a very exciting game to watch. If this be removed, as apparently it has been in the American game, much of the thrill is taken from the players themselves and those who watch them.

The two most definitely Canadian of our other sports are hockey and lacrosse, and here this same emphasis upon the player's initiative is the Canadian contribution. The player who attracts attention to himself by his own efforts in carrying the puck, the football, or the lacrosse ball provides better entertainment than the sight of a whole group of men slowly beating their way to the goal-line of a rugby field.

American football has become so complicated and scientific that intense study by the coaches and the players is necessary for the plays to be mastered. By allowing the American system of blocking and interference, the rule-makers have reduced the game to a charted program, which, if carried to its logical conclusion, will in a few years mean that neither team will score any points, being content to block each other out of each play. The minor importance of the ball-carrier in American football is an obvious and stupid mistake. With a good team of blockers and tacklers, an American squad could give the ball-carrying duties to a four-year-old child.

Here in Canada, our football players do not practise from January to December or memorize chalk sketches of fields, or do the drudgery of American football rehearsal. Rather, we assemble a group of good strong young men who like to play the game and put them on the field, encouraging each man to carry the ball whenever the opportunity arises. We do not expect one man to advance up the field simply because every possible opponent who might catch him has been taken care of.

Agony Prolonged

Scrambling wildly to see which can offer the most for their customers' admission fee, Los Angeles movie producers have certainly reached the heights of futility in competition. Double-header screen programs must rank highly in anyone's list of modern sociological ills.

Opticians, who are in the best position to trace eye-sight conditions among the populace, report a decided increase in the need of glasses by children since long shows became regular. All are not able to buy them, however, and the consequent drain on clinics has been tremendous.

As well as being hard on eyesight, double-headers cause considerable nervous strain in children, which is not conducive to proper mental attitudes.

Adults also suffer from picture shows that last anywhere from three to five hours. Because one of the two features is generally of inferior calibre, a person's time is wasted; because so much time is spent in the theatre, extreme enjoyment cannot be derived from either picture.

A few progressive owners would do well to experiment in two-hour performances. Better to send patrons home anxious for more than feeling as if they had been run over by a steam-roller.

A Criterion of Morality

A story appearing in today's Varsity dealing with the social habits of undergraduates of the University of Toronto would indicate that a relatively high standard of morality is maintained by the students.

The story was not canvassed by The Varsity staff, but we have every reason to believe that the results may be taken as representative of the undergraduate opinions. It appears that 150 students, taken at random were questioned on various subjects dealing with their personal activities. The questionnaire took for its standard the perfect being, apparently free from all vice. Such things as smoking a cigarette, drinking and other forms of what may be regarded as deviations from the straight and narrow path which permits of no indulgence, were regarded as mistakes and accordingly marks were deducted from the possible total.

If this may be taken as a criterion, when marks are deducted for smoking one cigarette, and other minor offences, a 60 per cent perfect male would indeed be an admirable character. And 60 per cent is what the men questioned in this case averaged. The women, as would be expected, were slightly higher.

There will probably be the usual number of cranks who will object to men or women who get below 100 per cent. But there will be more who will realize that the standards maintained at the University are definitely higher than those in extra-mural society. It would also seem apparent that the University students are honest and courageous enough to admit of these offences, if they are offences, something which one would scarcely find in other forms of society.

As far as we are concerned the results published are merely the answers to 18 questions asked of 150 students. We verified the figures, but did not ask the questions ourselves. We do, however, believe that asking questions is the best way to secure information, and we believe information to be valuable. Therefore we publish the information.

Intellectual Honesty

Frederick Palmer, veteran war correspondent who has covered ten conflicts, said in a recent magazine article that he would never again return to a battle scene as a reporter.

"It is impossible to see a battle as a whole," he writes. "If you could, you might not tell the truth about it. Censorship makes that impossible. You are a puppet on a string instead of a free observer."

This is typical of the modern method of thought. Nearly all of us are puppets on strings. We see only one side of a question and that is the side which is most profitable to us. We dare not protest against the actions of our own country in case of war. This would constitute self-destruction. Our schools cannot use German textbooks version of the World War. That would be high treason.

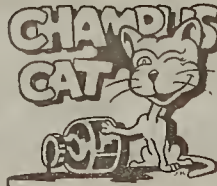

The downtrodden labourer who draws a pitifully low salary from a manufacturing plant cannot afford to protest against the injustices of the capitalistic system because it would automatically mean that his income would stop.

And our schools stand in such fear of state legislatures, wealthy contributors and alumni that they dare not try to develop the necessary intellectual freedom which would have the courage to combat these conditions. But at least we can be sufficiently intelligent to admit that we are puppets. This would be one step in the direction of intellectual honesty. —Oklahoma Daily.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Hart House Theatre

Synge's Riders to the Sea was yesterday afternoon's presentation in Hart House Theatre under the direction of Marjorie Leslie. To achieve and maintain the mournful sombreness which is essential to this piece is a difficult undertaking, but one which was in this instance commendably successful. The musical prologue helped to build up the desired atmosphere, although the afternoon audience very nearly cracked under the strain before the curtains parted, due to its length.

Since the tone of the play largely depends on Mourning, the mother of the family of Irish sea folk, her's is the heaviest role and Elizabeth Laing deserved credit for her handling of the part. In spite of the length of some of her speeches the sorrowful tones were kept well under the control.

The crude directness of the daughters' conversation about their mother while she mourns over the body of her son, near at hand, is something that strikes one while reading the play itself. Yet this was perhaps made a bit too obvious in yesterday's production. Mary Trail was well cast as Norah, and Eleanor Black as Cathleen, the two daughters, while Douglas Butler was suitably blunt of manner as Barclay, the son. R.G.A.

Theatre of Action

There is one theatre in Toronto that has taken the most from the modern movement. That theatre is the Theatre of Action. It is a group of people under the direction of Miss Jim Watts that is saying something and saying it effectively. Here there is no attempt to compete with the professional theatre in supplying entertainment; instead, at their plays one is inspired; there is an appeal to reason and an arousing of genuine emotion.

In their little theatre which holds about eighty people the Theatre of Action presented two of their plays on Friday evening. The first was a dramatization of Alfred Kreymbourg's America, America. This is a poem which shows the contrast of gold-laden youth of America with the starving, hard-working people of the masses before a poetic background of America, where gold is plentiful, where prosperity is at the corner for the favoured few. The other play was a now famous one by V. S. Jerome, Neu-boy, which shows the tendencies and events in a stark fashion of the things shouted by a newsboy and the things which his newspapers left unsaid.

In both these productions the technique had but a few minor flaws but was much better than the technique displayed in any amateur theatre in this city. On a very small stage they were able to give an impression of great space. Every movement had a purpose and a meaning. Every line was spoken as if it really had some im-

YALE PUCKCHASERS INVADE TORONTO TO-MORROW NIGHT

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

After all we said in yesterday's column about the U.C. hockey games, it seems that they are not going to be held till after Christmas. The executive has decided that it will be better to postpone them till then, so you will just have to wait for your entertainment.

Meanwhile we shall devote a short paragraph to boosting the sale of the tickets for the Yale-Varsity hockey game, which is being staged this Thursday in Varsity Arena. The Women's Athletic Association is selling these tickets at fifty cents, and you will get much better seats if you buy these, instead of paying general admission at the same price. These intercollegiate hockey encounters are rapidly gaining as glamorous and exciting a position as the rugby fixtures, and if this year's game is anything like last year's, it will be well worth the money.

Since sports news is at low ebb right now in this university, we shall tell of what is going on or has gone on, in other universities. The McGill girls have been making plans for skiing, and are hoping for snow. Matters have been arranged so that the co-eds may use the Park Ski Club, and what is news, the girls may substitute skiing for any other physical education class.

To follow up the track and field items we have been mentioning from time to time, we report that the women in the Universities of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, are keenly interested in this branch of sport. A women's intercollegiate track meet is held every autumn in conjunction with the men's meet, and there is close competition for the intercollegiate trophy. So if the girls out west can hold a contest like this, there is no reason why the eastern universities couldn't attempt it. It's something to think about, anyway.

NOVICE FIGHTERS ADVANCE TO FINALS

Elimination Rounds of Junior Assault Produce Lots of Enthusiasm

CRYDERMAN WINS T.K.O.

Varsity's boxing and wrestling aspirants battled it out with plenty of action and enthusiasm at Hart House yesterday afternoon in the elimination rounds of the junior interfaculty assault.

Of the twelve wrestling and ten boxing exhibits, none fell below a good average. The Parker and Smith bout at 135 lbs. was a clever display of hard and fast fighting as was that of Boddington and McLaren. Cryderman won a technical K.O. over Powell in the second round of their encounter.

Results—

WATERPOLISTS LOSE BOTH GAMES TO TEAMS FROM Y

Seniors Lose to Broadview Y; Central Y Defeat Juniors

SENIORS PLAY GOOD GAME

The Varsity waterpolo teams lost out on two closely fought games last night in the Hart House pool.

The juniors were defeated in the first game by Central Y juniors with the score of 6-4.

Broadview Y seniors won the second game, after a close struggle with the Varsity senior team, by the score of 4-2.

In the junior game the fast swimming Central team scored their six goals in the first period and although the Varsity team had the edge in the second period they were only able to get four goals. Taylor was high scorer for Central Y with three goals while B. Currie, L. Currie and Brass got one each. For Varsity Earle got two goals and Dunlop and Morgan each got one.

The senior teams were still more evenly matched with Varsity losing out to a few wild shots on goal. The game was slowed up considerably by frequent stops in the play caused by fouls on the part of the players of both teams. In this game the close checking prevented combination plays and thus kept down the score.

The scorers for Broadview were Dunstan with two goals, Anderson and Molloy with one apiece. Cavanaugh scored both of Varsity's goals.

Varsity Juniors: Burrows, Thompson, Statten, Earle, Dunlop, Morgan and Charters.

Broadview Y Seniors: Dunstan, Anderson, Milburn, Ewen, Molloy, Ockenden, McDowell.

Varsity Seniors: Ballantyne, Fisher, Maine, Twible, Beatty, Cavanaugh and Otter.

ALLISON SCORES 10 GOALS

In a replay of a tied lacrosse game between O.C.E. and Jr. S.P.S. yesterday afternoon in the lower gym, Hart House, O.C.E. earned a 21-7 victory.

Due to an interfaculty ruling, the tie game was thrown out and another game was necessary to decide the group winner. O.C.E. will now meet Victoria in the finals for the lacrosse championship.

Allison scored 10 goals for his team, although compelled to retire from the floor at one point due to an injury received from a rival stick. Harwood with six goals and Bobby Coulter with four, also starred for O.C.E.

Jr. S.P.S. were outclassed but kept trying all the time. Brough, with three goals, was the best man they had on the floor.

Jr. S.P.S.: Goal, Russel; defence, Douglas; centre, Ballagh; rover, Rule; forward, Brough; subs, Breakey, Robinson, Kirby, Whelan.

O.C.E.: Goal, Cozzi; defence, Joe Calderone; centre, Harwood; rover, Alison; forward, Coulter; subs, Greer, Lancaster, Cochrane.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crochower

After watching parts of both the basketball and hockey games in which Blue teams participated last night one needs no expert to point out the reason for the greater drawing power of hockey. That little reason can be found in the referee's whistle. At the Arena nothing short of modified murder brought a stop to the play and an accompanying penalty. Down in the Hart House gym, however, Whistler Pogue tooted so many times on his beloved whistle that he almost "stole the show". The fans, without a doubt, become irritated at the steady piping and soon turn to other forms of sport for their enjoyment. Although we're not in favour of allowing the Senior O.H.A. to become a second "Blood and Thunder" league the fact is that Referee Hedges showed rare judgment in not calling the petty fouls which officials in a basketball game would never miss. The fans of course roared their approval and disapproval of Hedges' leniency at times but the mere fact that they did show enthusiasm of some kind or other points to contented customers. As long as basketball continues to employ referees who do not use their heads before blowing their whistles the cage tilts are doomed to be played before empty houses. The fans do not and will not come out to see play stopped every minute for every slight infringement of the rules.

Ace Bailey's Blues were pushed further down the O.H.A. ladder last night when the Sailors of Port Colborne sank the Blue ship in no uncertain manner. At full time the score was 9-3, largely through the munificence of the starting goaler for Varsity who allowed four goals to trickle past him with the greatest of ease. The Blue defence was not giving him too much help during the two periods in which he worked and to make matters worse the lad was jittery. Shipman, who guarded the Blue net in the final period was much steadier.

In their final appearance before leaving tomorrow on the first half of their annual U.S. tour, Warren Stevens' Varsity cagers gave the three senior cage squads of the city food for thought in defeating West End Y in rather easy fashion. The game was rather a sloppy exhibition of basketball with both squads fumbling frequently. The sniping of the rival squads was far from good. Add to this the whistle-blowing of Tom Pogue the M.C. for the evening, and you'll understand why the game was far from enjoyable. However, to keep you from getting a pessimistic view of this year's basketball prospects we feel it our duty to add that as this was the first game of the season at Hart House it should not be taken as an example of what is to come in the future. Steve has a good group of cagers under his care and as soon as they become a unit they'll turn in pleasing performances. Connelly and Gold with eight and seven points respectively were in good form while Marks was held to one point. Of the new men Himel and Bedford looked promising with Charlie Sullivan also turning in a good effort. Pomer of the Y team garnered eleven points—Blue guards take note.

To complete the summary of last night's games we might add that both the junior and senior Blue waterpolo squads were beaten.

INT. BASKETEERS SCORE 53-23 WIN

Seconds Play Smartly against St. Columbans in an Exhibition Game

DOUGHERTY HIGH SCORER

The Varsity intermediate basketball squad decisively defeated St. Columbans of the senior church league 53-23 in an exhibition game played as a preliminary to the senior game last night in Hart House. The intermediate team presented a strong passing attack which was just too good for the Saints. The latter lacked condition and good teamwork, which made their attack lack the necessary punch.

For the first half they held Varsity fairly well and the colleagues were able to garner a twelve point margin, the score being 23-11. This period was much closer than the last one, with Fitton a member of the Varsity team last year, supplying most of the punch for the visitors.

The Saints' attack collapsed in the second half and Varsity made it one big parade. However, numerous fouls were called against the Blue team by Referee Willis, which tended to slow the game up.

Dougherty with ten, green with eight and Hogg with nine were the leading point getters for Varsity. However, every man on the team scored at least one basket, and but for their tendency towards fouling the intermediates looked very good.

Varsity: Hogg, McLaughlin, Cooper, Dougherty, Peters, Denne, Green and Powers.

St. Columbans: Harvey, Fitton, Reynolds, Prince, Reynolds, Pratt, Cowan, Buck and Crawford.

Imagine the embarrassment of Columbia university reporters when they conducted a campaign to learn what the general public thought of college students. The answer was that five out of six considered them to be loafers.

CHESS CLUB MATCHES PROGRESSING FAMOUSLY

Experts of Checkerboard Game Carefully Concentrate for Championship

During the past four weeks the Varsity Chess Club have run off three of the seven rounds of this year's championship tournament. In the first round T. D. S. Watson lost to A. L. Rubino in a closely played game, while J. Scheffer defeated S. Jennings in 31 moves. A. D. McConnell beat R. B. Hayes in the best played game of the tournament to date, while S. Shankman won from J. T. Hughson.

In the second round McConnell was very fortunate to win from Shankman while Hughson defaulted to Watson. Hayes defeated Scheffer in a hard-fought game and Rubino lost to Jennings.

In the third round McConnell won by default from Hughson while Watson lost to Shankman. Jennings left his game around for Hayes. Scheffer vs Rubino is not yet completed.

The standing after three rounds is—A. D. McConnell 3-0; R. B. Hayes and S. Shankman 2-1; A. L. Rubino and J. Scheffer 1-1; S. A. Jennings and T. D. S. Watson 1-2; J. T. Hughson 0-3.

E. AND H. CLUB DEBATE ON CHANGING COURSE

Several members of the faculty and undergraduate students of the English and History Club took part in an informal discussion last night in an endeavour to reach some definite conclusion about changes made or about to be made in the English and History course, but no decision was reached.

The place Canadian history should occupy in the course, what emphasis should be placed upon Latin and the suggestion that the Bibliography course be transferred to second year, instead of third, were among the questions considered.

No definite conclusion was reached on many of these points, but it was felt strongly by many of the students that more groups and less lectures would improve the fourth year course.

A STUDENT PLEA

Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir:

The matter has again arisen of the Outside's interest in University life. In this case the organization of a Communist Club has been the source of spicy comment. The editorial in Friday's Varsity was quite justified in protesting against the attitude of the downtown press on this occasion. But it is to be remembered that this is not the first time; nor will it be the last, until something more definite is done.

Whether we students do or do not agree with the action of any particular group among us, we are all agreed that we do not like the attitude of suspicious disfavour with which we seem to be regarded by a large section of the public. In spite of straw votes and other demonstrations of our attitude, there remains the conviction in the minds of some that university students are atheistic, radical, sophisticated—a dozen incorrect, distorted, or at best vague notions—out of keeping with the truth. It is an unfortunate situation which leaves the way open for further disagreeableness.

There seems to be a perfectly logical and quite feasible way out. Would matters not be facilitated if there were student representation on the councils of the University? (There may be such already: I would be glad to be corrected if such is the case.) If there were student representation on the Capt. there would be a better feeling among the students and probably a better understanding among the public. The same principle could easily be applied in the colleges and faculties. This matter might well be taken up by the S.A.C.; and by the various faculty organizations. Perhaps the matter is sufficiently important to deserve a body publicity among the student body. It is to be hoped that some effective step may be taken to correct a situation which is at the present time most irritating.

Ken Woodsworth,

IV Victoria.

CAGERS OPEN SEASON WITH 34-21 VICTORY

opening whistle and displayed a dashing attack which had the West End cagers bewildered. Five baskets were scored before the Y team were heard from. Featured in this attack were Connelly, Gold, N. Sullivan, who netted the ball, and Marks, who was mainly responsible for the passes. From this point play was fairly even with the visitors missing many opportunities to get close to the flying Blue team.

Penalties were frequent but neither team capitalized much on the free shots.

After the opening spurge of points, the junior members of the team played most of the time, and demonstrated that they do not weaken the team by their presence.

The Blue cagers started the second half in the same manner as they did the first. Connelly led the attack, passing well, and featuring with cyclone dashes up the floor. Before he retired he had netted three baskets to bring his total to eight points, thus leading the Varsity point getters. The other baskets in this half were scored by Powers, Bedford and Mathews.

The sensation of the second half was Pomer of West End. This tall speedster, playing his first year in senior company, scored three baskets and three singles.

The Varsity team look like worthy successors to last year's all-star team. Marks at centre generalised the team well on the attack, but was continuously outjumped. Hubble took very few shots on the basket, concentrating his attention on flipping faultless passes to the other members of the attacking division. Himel and Gold form a strong defensive pair, with the latter being very tricky on the attack, and demonstrating a keen eye on the foul shots, netting three.

Varsity 34: Connelly, N. Sullivan, Marks, Gold, T. Sullivan, McGregor, Powers, Bedford, Mathews, Krakauer, Dempster.

West End Y 21: Valentine, Pomer, G. Dellabough, Butler, W. Dellabough, Mackford, Magwood, Arnold, Cameron, Stark.

PURITY TEST SHOWS HIGH MORAL STANOARD

women at Barnard College at Columbia University, New York, and the average there was 71 per cent.

The group of students who secretly operated the "purity test", reported that over 150 students, men and women, answered the questionnaire during the past few days. Practically every faculty in the University was canvassed and students were taken at random on the campus in order to get a representative purity index.

The test indicated that ideas of social behaviour prevalent in the naive decade, are not extinct on this campus.

One S.P.S. student revealed he led a very sober and sedate existence by virtue of scoring an all-time high for men of 99.5 per cent. Answering the questions honestly, he declared he had never been intimate in any way with a girl, he had never had a drink and the only thing he did "wrong" was to smoke one cigarette. It was rumoured that there was a 100 per cent in the same faculty but this was too amazing and was discounted.

A St. Michael's college senior had an average of 98 per cent and revealed that he had had a drink but once—when he was sick.

In Whitney Hall the height of purity was reached by one co-ed who scored 100 per cent, indicating she had not even indulged in one of the lesser sins of smoking. The residence girls, however, were shown to have a lower purity quotient than the girls out of residence. In one women's house on the campus the average was 58 per cent with 90 per cent of the girls trying the test. It was given secretly by a member of the house.

Several women rated as low as 48 per cent and one dropped to 35. One young libertine of the law department scored the lowest for the men with 38 per cent.

The test was believed by the students who sponsored it, to be fairly indicative of the social habits and general "purity" of the students at the University here. For the most part it showed that men were not excessive in their wine-women and song activities and also that the women exercised a certain amount of restraint in their social relationships.

It is understood the psychology department was not approached but Professor Brett of the philosophy department at University College, indicated to one newspaperman that he did not look with disdain on the test. He said there was nothing peculiarly silly in asking questions and believed "the information will be useful in proportion to the degree of sincerity with which the answers were supplied."

Drummond Wren, secretary of the Workers' Educational Association, did not feel that the test was puerile. "Why should questions not be asked?" he said. "Curiosity is the basis of all knowledge. If there are no questions asked in a class the lecture has been a failure."

S.P.S. showed great consistency in the test and despite their potentialities as beer drinkers and don't-give-a-damn men, immortalized in cheers and song, their average score was 56 per cent, which is only about three per cent lower than the average for arts and the other faculties combined.

The medical faculty was not adequately tested but the medics who did submit to the questionnaire averaged 69 per cent, the highest of any single faculty.

Students from Western Canada showed themselves to be the most moral men in the entire university. For the first two days the test was being given, a Saskatchewan student was top with 87 per cent but the "angel from S.P.S." dethroned him yesterday afternoon. The average for the west was close to 80 per cent. Scholarship men also had a high average.

The great majority of women indicated they smoked "occasionally". Each question could be answered by "once", "occasionally" or "frequently", with the score weighted accordingly. Fifty per cent of them had inhaled at one time or other, the purity test operators said, but few had been intoxicated.

Every woman who was tested except the 100 per cent in Whitney, scored on the question "have you been kissed", and the greater majority also chalked up a good score on the next question "have you kissed 10 men". To kiss one man 10 times is also a common occurrence, the test revealed.

The question "have you been alone with a man in a parked car", was universally answered in the affirmative, excepting again the 100 per cent. The various forms of necking were also predominant in reducing many of the co-eds' scores, as were all-night dates. They pointed out, however, that such all-night dates are as common on New Year's were included in the calculations. The last question, "have you gone the limit", counted against the women in only very few instances. It was the most heavily weighted item in the questionnaire and scores below 50 per cent usually tallied on this last question.

Men students scored heavier on smoking and drinking and on questions of necking and the like they met the challenge of the co-eds. Everyone under 70 per cent had kissed 10 women and had generally been tight on several occasions.

Commenting on the high purity of men and women students from western Canada, one prominent westerner attributed it to "the frontier development and the necessity of being close to nature. The east has a broadening influence which has a tendency to lower a moral standard."

He was critical of the purity test, claiming it was a typical American conception of morality.

SAILORS SWAMP BLUES TAKING 9-3 VICTORY

proved unavailing chiefly due to fast moving "Dinty" Moore in the Sailors' net, who rose to the occasion, and blocked the gap very capably.

Two fast counters from the stick of Upper started the Varsity lads down to defeat, coming within the first minute of play with Varsity replying but once. Driscoll, after being gashed on the nose, came back on the ice to lead the Varsity attack and on a pass to MacLugham, the Blues rang up their first and only score for two periods. Then, the Port Colborne Sailors swept aside the Blues and began a parade of goals, running in five counters in quick succession.

Changing goal guardians in the last spasm, with Shipman replacing Owen, the Blues came back fighting to start the scoring. Jimmie MacPherson, on a solo effort, coasted around the Sailors' nets and beat Moore neatly. However, Port Colborne kept up with the pace and kept their six-goal margin even after MacLugham and MacPherson combined to score, matching the Varsity goals with goals by Arnott and Reynolds. The final gong ended hostilities with Varsity on the short end of

"truckin'" in a recent appearance in Toronto.

From those who know of "truckin'" and what it is, The Varsity gleaned the following information. Betty Rutherford, I Vis, expressed her approval of the popular song called "Truckin'" but was afraid she could not say much in fairness of the dance.

Murray Cox, IV Trinity, when asked his opinion, replied, "I don't go in for primitive dances, but prefer ballroom." Betty Eakins seemed a little dubious as to what "truckin'" meant. When an explanation was attempted her comment was that she did not like any of "those horrible Harlem dances."

Jean McCabe, III U.C. and Mary McIntosh, III Trinity, did not seem to care much for the dance and both described it as "lousy". Miss McIntosh, however, softened a little and admitted that the tune was good.

Favourable comment was forthcoming from Doris Hamilton, who says that she thinks "it's swell". More unfavourable opinion was expressed by Clara Ord, I Trinity, who considers it high class stuff.

On the other hand Betty Simpson, also I Trinity, thought anything new and original in dancing would be appreciated. Possibly the reason for the seeming unpopularity of the dance is due to the reason expressed by Kay Hair, II U.C., who said that she "can't truck".

Keith Campbell, II Trinity, thought it a good idea and a "means of expression aside from the common or garden variety of dancing".

Left or Right, on a cold and wintry night—could be suitably contended, all its differences amended, without the interference of the dogged perseverance of Bothism's staunch supporters, evidently not reporters.

It is obvious to all that Monism's bound to fall, for variety's the spice of life, monotony only brings on strife; and so while Leftist sits there, wishing for a breath of fresh air, and Rightist, over yonder, on his evil ways doth ponder, the Bothist and his latest date, contentedly before the grate, are studying Ancient History—or some Eleusinian Mystery. The beauty of Bothism, just as clear-cut as a prism, is that it permits movement as the fancy fits. With St. Hilda's you're a Rightist, but a Leftist with the typist; this ambidextrousness, you see, is a Bothist's liberty, and when going to a dance he may use both, perchance.

London: Rumours spread today that Stanley Baldwin was being faced with a split in the Conservative party due to the Ethiopian peace policy. The cabinet, however, remained firm on the peace terms offered Mussolini, and Anthony Eden left for Geneva presumably to withhold Britain's support on the oil embargo on Italy.

LECTURER STRESSES UNAFFECTED LIFE

Miss Pearl McCarthy Speaks to T.I.C.C.U. at Women's Union

FAMILY IS GOD'S UNIT

At a meeting of one group of the T.I.C.C.U. at the Women's Union on Tuesday afternoon, Miss P. McCarthy spoke on "The Study of the Emotional Life in God's Hands."

Miss McCarthy stressed the importance of an unaffected mode of life, demonstrating that "the whole art of spiritual life is to be simple and natural," and that to deceive ourselves with regard to our emotional life is to be the dominant phase of our very existence, that which influences our every action.

"Psychology may help us to explain certain problems that may arise, but after a certain degree, the more psychology applied, the more complicated our situation becomes."

The speaker went on to explain that money and emotion are the two things which make or mar a man's life. The latter consists mainly of family affection, friendship, joy and sorrow.

Miss McCarthy stressed the fact that the family is God's unit, and that it is family affection which keeps the group together. She concluded by saying "Each member must do his share in making the family what God intended it to be, and by including this phase of our life in our devotion to God, we may feel that we are being real Christians."

Serious inconvenience has been caused a certain private householder as a result of a misprint which occurred in this year's Handbook. The telephone number of the Pi Beta Phi Sorority is listed wrongly, instead of being K1. 5513, it should be M1. 5513.

Another source of extreme inconvenience results when people call the University of Toronto Press at a very late hour and carelessly dial the wrong number. The correct night phone of The Varsity is M1. 8745.

Auspicious Start for Newly

The Communist Club of the University of Toronto got off to an auspicious start last night when Tim Buck spoke to the first open meeting. The meeting was held in the auditorium of the Women's Union and there were about sixty people in attendance.

Tim Buck gave a general characterization of the communist movement and its possibilities in Canada. "I was pleased and surprised," he said, "with the words of President Cuddy in which he said that he agreed with the students' desires to learn more about the political life of our country. Students making high marks are more likely to make good teachers than those making mediocre grades, stated educational authorities around the University when interviewed yesterday.

In this they disagreed with Sir Norman Angell, British economist, who was a recent visitor to Toronto.

Speaking before the Canadian Club of this city on December 3rd, Angell made the statement that the present system of appointing teachers on the basis of academic standing was fundamentally unsound; that a good student did not necessarily make a good teacher. Einstein, for instance, should not

PRESS CLUBS ADDRESSED BY MORRISON OF STAR

Comparison of English and American Methods in Speech

The newspaper profession with particular emphasis on the English Press as compared to the American, was discussed by H. F. Morrison, fiction editor of the Toronto Star, last evening to a group of the Women's and Men's Press Clubs at their first joint meeting and dinner of the year.

Mr. Morrison has the distinction of being the only Rhodes scholar to go into the journalistic profession, as far as is known, and it was while he was studying at Oxford that he first took up newspaper work.

"The English journalists often accuse Americans of being too sensational," the speaker explained, "but actually the popular press is more sensational than ours. It is only the old established papers that are more conservative."

Mr. Morrison then went on to show the main differences between straight news writing and feature writing. "In the feature the prime thing is human interest, which seems to boil down to any particular instance where people can project themselves into the story and live through it in such a way that they feel they could have done it themselves. However, it must not be subtle." Features, too, were described as more expansive, and more personal to a certain extent.

VICTORIA DEBATORS BELITTLE PACIFISM

Faculty Account for Many Speeches in Joint Meeting

RIOTOUS OPEN DEBATE

By a vote of 79-62, in favour of the motion "That pacifism is not enough," the Victoria College Debating Parliament last night expressed its dissatisfaction with pacifism alone as a means of attaining permanent world peace.

Professor Underhill of the Department of History, the first speaker for the affirmative, stigmatized pacifism as a "vegetarian doctrine in a carnivorous jungle," and pointed out the fallacy in rejecting force in international disputes and accepting in other problems such as dealing with the common criminal. "To eliminate war we must find a moral equivalent for war," the speaker stated. "To my mind this is to be found in a fundamental reconstruction of our economic world."

"It is not true that pacifism is purely negative," Professor Grube, first speaker for the negative, asserted. "Circumstances are changing, and pacifism is the only stand to adopt if we wish to avoid race suicide."

The speaker went on to define the cause of war as economic and psycho-

War is Absurd and Often Futile But Rhetoricians All Are Subtle

An unannounced and strangely unpublicized reunion was held last night when the Victoria Parliament and the S.C.M. held a joint meeting in Alumni Hall. The motion of the debate was carefully withheld until the doughnuts were served but the speakers managed to display great command of rhetoric, Biblical references, and the ability to get down to essentials and look them squarely in the face.

Due to the fact that many members of the House appeared to be on both sides, the arguments proved witty rather than vicious. The Honourable Member for Kelly carefully evaded the issue by regaling the boys and girls with anecdotes of the dear homeland. There was a need of a third party, (cheers) "a third party to meditate between the aggressor and the victim."

Pacifism is like unto a mustard seed. Some of the younger members, uninitiated to the spell of parliament, were carried away by their subject. One apostle (the one standing beside the first speaker through the nose) fell into such a reverie that he could only murmur gratefully on awaking, "I

Motion by Intercollegiate Union Useless According to Stevens

In a recent athletic meeting in Montreal, a motion was placed on the books to the effect that men attending the Ontario College of Education, and who, the year previous attended Queen's or Western, should be barred from playing intercollegiate sport for the University of Toronto. The Intercollegiate Athletic Union will vote on this motion next April.

In an interview with Warren Stevens, Director of Athletics at the University, The Varsity discovered that never has the senior rugby team played a man who the year before graduated from one of the aforementioned universities, and was in attendance at O.C.E. Mr. Stevens pointed out that in the case of Mike Valeriote, Valeriote had graduated from Western two years before turning out with the Big Blue team. There were also two ex-Queen's men registered at O.C.E. this year.

Another outstanding example is the case of "Red" Gilmour, star of Queen's team for several years, who attended O.C.E. for a year. When asked about Mr. Gilmour, Mr. Stevens replied, "We didn't even ask him to play."

Glee Club Recital

thank the Speaker for the timely interruption."

The session was unusual in that members of another generation held down the chairs. These graybeards flaunted their experience, their recollections of the 1840's, and of the duels in the early days of good old York. The very young ladies, however, appealed more than the profits to the naive members from S.C.M. One gentleman even challenged one of the pedagogues with The Hon. Member is obviously not Eschiel anyway the affirmative of the motion won because the pacifists were too tired to fight any more and perhaps because the ayes had a little booklet all prepared and perhaps because all the ladies go for witty men. The pacifists pleaded on their youth but the House had no sympathy for the babes and consigned them to other arms. Besides there were pacifists "way back when" one member was reminiscing. "Yes," inserted the Hon. Member from the Back of the Room

Warden To Give Christmas Dinner

As in past years undergraduate members of Hart House, who live in countries other than Canada or in the distant parts of the Dominion and are thus unable to spend any part of the Christmas vacation at home, are informed that they may enter their names at the Warden's office for the Christmas dinner at Hart House on Friday 20th December. The Canadian Singers have kindly offered to sing carols after dinner and the Warden will have a small gift for each man present.

Any member intending to be present is urgently requested to signify his intention to do so by informing the Warden's office as soon as possible as it is obviously difficult to arrange the dinner and to know how many gifts are required unless the number of guests is known in good time.

FORETELLS FALL OF HITLER

Hitler is sounding the death knell of Naziism by driving Germany into a European war. Mussolini still has a chance with Italian fascism because he will not involve Italy in a war in Europe. These are opinions of Emil Ludwig, biographer of the great, observer of the world, and student of human philosophy.

Representatives of The Varsity, together with some members of the S.C.M., received invitations to an interview yesterday afternoon. After the three members of the S.C.M. had declined cocktails in favour of a cup of tea, The Varsity joined in a united mid-Victorian front, and settled down to an interlude of tea and conversation. The conversation consisted of a two-way interview. Toronto's visitor wanted to learn about Canadians. The Varsity wanted to learn about Emil Ludwig.

"Is Canada inclined to be more English, or more American?" was Mr.

Students enjoying an after-dinner chat in the East Common Room, of Hart House, yesterday were treated to a piano performance of the first movement of the Grieg Concerto. The artist was Gerald Berneske, the well-known Hamilton pianist, who is enrolled in the Faculty of Medicine here.

This extremely informal recital was one of a series arranged by the Music Committee of Hart House in an experimental endeavour to see if an institution of that nature would be appreciated by the members of the House, passing a spare half hour at noon.

Amongst other pieces which Berneske played were Liszt's "Etude in D Flat", Liszt's "La Capanella" and Chopin's "Minute Waltz".

By Frank Lamberti

All the colour and glamour connected with intercollegiate athletics and especially that of international competition will burst forth at Varsity Arena to-night when the renowned Old Elis of Yale play their first game on a Canadian ice surface this season against the University of Toronto hockeyists. The Blue and White colour bearers of Yale come with an impressive record consisting of the Intercollegiate Quadrangle title which they gained last season from Dartmouth, Princeton and Harvard, and the University of Toronto are in for a hectic night of puck-chasing.

With six of last season's champions remaining the Yale squad still have a great hockey outfit as is evidenced by the game played last Saturday against the United States Olympic team, when Yale held the score to 3-1. This game marks the third time that Holcomb York and his Yale squad have invaded the Blue arena and they are out to gain the edge in the series.

Last year Varsity turned aside the Yale hockey cohorts but the Elis have Those wishing to attend are advised to reserve tables early since in previous years tickets were sold out several days in advance.

Student Rates

It has been the custom of the railways for some years to grant reduced rates to students going home for Christmas. These lower fares are issued upon presentation of a certificate from the University proving that the applicant is a bona-fide student.

This is a privilege which we appreciate very much. Unfortunately, however, in order to take advantage of the privilege students often have to wait around for a day or two after their examinations are finished, just because the colleges absolutely refuse to issue the certificates before the last day of term. In very special cases, such as where a student would not arrive home by Christmas Day unless he leaves earlier, they will give him permission to do so.

There are dozens of cases not in this category for which some provision should be made. Lectures are frequently cancelled the last few days of term and if a student has no term examinations he has no reason for remaining in the city, but he is unable to obtain his certificate until term officially closes.

The railways themselves have no objection to issuing the tickets early, the restriction lies solely with the University. So it seems an unnecessary restriction. When there is only one train a day and that leaving late at night, it means that the student cannot leave until the Friday evening.

We believe many would benefit by the removal of this restriction. If there must be a date limit it could be set a few days before the end of term and then those who were free to do so could leave the city when they wished.

Musical Taste

A gentleman from Kitchener made the statement to the Rotary Club there that the University of Toronto was musically inferior to the University of Syracuse and that "the average musical taste of the university graduate never gets beyond the kindergarten." We cannot accept this sort of remark without a protest.

Knowing nothing about the University of Syracuse "which has a student symphony orchestra and other musical organizations", according to our friend, we cannot make a comparison between it and our own University. But we would like to point out to anyone who may have been misled by the Kitchener speaker that we too have a student symphony orchestra. It is, to be sure, still in its infancy but it is making definite progress and has found a great deal of support among the undergraduates. It put on a concert last spring and is planning an even more ambitious one this year.

In addition to the orchestra we have music clubs in two of the colleges, the Victoria Music Club which holds an annual production, and the University College Music Club which made its debut last year with a musical comedy. Then there are the Friday afternoon recitals, Friday evening songsters and Sunday evening concerts at Hart House, Sunday musicals at Wymilwood and the Women's Union, not to mention the groups in music appreciation held at Victoria.

Outside the University the students are regular attendants at the symphony concerts in Massey Hall and other musical performances. The organ recitals in Convocation Hall also have a large student audience.

In the face of this display of musical interest it is hardly correct to say that "the average musical taste of the university graduate never gets beyond the kindergarten."

The University is constantly subjected to adverse criticism from the public. While we do not mind the truth we do object to being totally misrepresented.

League of Nations

"The League of Nations has already failed in that it did not propose satisfactory peace terms to Italy before hostilities began and will probably fail again in the terms it imposes on Ethiopia when peace is resumed," said Escott Reid several weeks ago. These words have particular significance in view of the present impasse in world affairs.

From the very beginning of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict there have been various conjectures made as to its probable outcome. Some people claimed that the League was entirely impotent and that Italy would seize Ethiopia without any effective step taken by world powers to oppose her. Other people firmly believed in the ability of the League to prevent Italy from snatching the choice morsel of Abyssinian soil. Still others, like Reid, expressed opinions that seemed to be a compromise between these two views. And the present state of the negotiations taking place behind the scenes seems to indicate that at present, at any rate, the last opinion seems to be the most nearly accurate description of the probable outcome.

But there are two factors which might prevent this possibility from becoming an actuality. It is the reported "revolt" of the smaller powers. These powers were solidly behind the greater powers in sanctions against Italy because in a strong League they saw protection for themselves against aggression by an ambitious major nation. But if Italy is given part of Ethiopia in order to bring the conflict to a speedier termination these smaller powers will consider that they have been "let down" by Great Britain and France.

The second factor is the cabinet "rebellion" Baldwin is reported to be facing. The existence of the League itself hangs in the balance. And it is possible that the two powers which dominate the League will choose to ensure its continued existence, and will continue sanctions against Italy until she succumbs. Which course the League chooses will probably become evident within the next few weeks and it will be interesting to see what turn world affairs takes.

College Bull

They come, those times, in the life of every student when his pipe goes sour, his mind goes dull, when he becomes disgusted with everything he has to eat, his studies and himself—times when he feels that the world is down upon him and his prospects for the future are worth less than nothing.

When that time comes on you, don't sit back in seclusion and let your mind rot with your own thoughts. Pitch that dry text in a corner somewhere out of the way, round up a couple of cronies, or three, and enter into a real, old-fashioned bull session.

Lay your feet upon the table alongside of theirs. This always makes for closer companionship. Throw open your shirt collar; loosen your belt. Haul out a sack of pecans, if you lack for more stimulating refreshments. Anything to lessen the tension.

Then, when everything is ready, let off that compressed steam. If you don't like the way the world is being run, tell them about it, explain why, and what you'd do to relieve the situation. You'll be surprised at the new slant you get on things while you're trying to make clear to the others what you're thinking. By the time you're through, you won't believe half of what you've said, yourself.

And nine times out of ten your companions will pick the rest of your argument to pieces. They'll show you flaws in them so obvious that you'll begin to wonder at your own powers of reasoning, and realize how utterly stale you had grown.

Or, if by chance, they do agree with you on a point here and there, their contributions, from a fresh angle, will strengthen your own convictions, give you a new perspective.

But whether the owners of the feet on the table beside yours stand with or against you, even if the whole bull session lends itself to nothing more than a mere "swapping of lies", the outcome is always the same. You feel relieved. Latent interests have been aroused. Trifles won't bother you any more than trifles should. In fact, you'll just feel a whole lot better all the way around.—Daily Texan.

A pessimist is a man who thinks everybody as nasty as himself, and hates them for it.—G. Bernard Shaw.

With one more issue to go, campus activities are certainly finishing up the fall term with a fine flourish, to judge from the columns of this venerable periodical. The moral status of college life has been unquestionably established by the Purity Test, although our scientific mind would like to know the causes of the result shown. The S.P.S. Angel has not said whether he owes it all to his use of Ivory Soap, 99 and 44/100% Pure, or his failure to use Lifebuoy. His impeccable record certainly bears out the curt statement of the feminine dweller within their midst, "Engineers are gentlemen."—Eight hundred Sainted men, She has you on a string, You curtsy as her smallest finger moves. But you have company, For just like you so we Do bow and flourish just as she behooves.

The Yorker may be a bit muddy, but after all he did hit 70.

Of course if the test had been absolutely up to the minute there would have been marks off for truckin', which according to yesterday's survey would have boosted the local average. We never did go for these eccentric dances, and as for the latest one, we'll have no truck with it.

At time of writing we can't decide whether to go and applaud Tim Buck at the Women's Union, or Professor Underhill at the Vic Debate, but the odds favour the latter. The chances are Canada's destiny will lie in the hands of the Communists in the near future, but it's certain our own fate next May rests with the History Dept. —The Yorker.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

The Toronto Symphony Orchestra added to its laurels Tuesday in their all-Wagnerian concert. The selections were chosen with a view to appealing rather to an audience appreciative of Wagner's every mood, than to the symphonic amateur. The program was comprehensive, however, despite the absence of many of those swaggering, bourgeois themes. Those qualities so necessary to a worthy interpretation—purity of tone and instant response to the conductor's baton—were ever present.

The hushed, tranquil strains of the Siegfried Idyll showed Wagner in one of his more serene moods. It is in music such as this that Sir Ernest MacMillan excels himself. In the religious atmosphere of the two compositions from "Parsifal", another phase of the great German composer's artistry was sympathetically portrayed. The program ended with the tempestuous majesty of the "Overture to Tannhauser".

Aside from a slight weakness in the brasses, the final intermingling themes of Venusberg and the march of the pilgrims was splendidly carried.

It is a tribute to the orchestra and Sir Ernest MacMillan that, despite a long program, the audience waited more.

A certain junior at Miami University has been nominated as the "workingest" college student in the world. He carries 20 study hours a week with Auditing as one course. To support himself, he works 50 hours a month on the NYA, is an assistant in the Physics department, grades papers for the Math department, and is employed from seven to midnight every day in the office of a taxi company!

Ad Hoc Committee Presents Summary

The Ad Hoc Committee presents the following informal report of its findings. The Report is signed by Paul Bridle, Ross Macdonald, Jessie Johnson and Gerald Smith. Harold Acker, the fifth member of the Committee, was not present when the Report was adopted.

An analysis of Provincial Budgets 1929-1935 inclusive prepared by the Canadian Youth Council shows that expenditures in education fell from 14.5 per cent of the total budget in 1929 to 9.9 per cent in 1935; also that three successive cuts—$200,000 in 1932, $200,000 in 1933, and $100,000 in 1935—have reduced the grant to the Universities from $1,400,000 (19.4 per cent of the expenditure in education) in 1929 to $900,000 (15.8 per cent of the expenditure in education) in 1935.

Dr. McArthur, Deputy Minister of Education said he was not in a position to explain the cuts in 1932 and 1933, since he was not connected with the department at that time. He pointed out, however, that in this period the revenue was decreasing and debt was mounting. Further, in 1929 the Federal Government discontinued its annual grant of about $300,000 to technical schools. The Ontario government assumed this burden and has been bearing it ever since, though periodic reductions have reduced the present grant to 25 per cent of the original amount. Also expenditure in vocational schools in the period 1929-35 was considerable, rising from an index of 100 in 1929 to

Junior Interfaculty Assault Completes Elimination Stage

U.C. SENIORS DEFEATED BY EMMANUEL COLLEGE

Two Straight Games Give Ministers Semi-Final

The University College senior volleyball team, defending interfaculty champions, fell before Emmanuel College in the semi-final yesterday afternoon at Hart House by 15 to 11 and 15 to 13 scores. Victory for the ministers in their match with Senior Meds today will advance the purple and gold to the final round for the Victoria Star Cup.

The first game was an aggressively fought battle with Emmanuel supplying a finishing punch that brought them out on the winning end of a 15-11 count. After permitting their opponents to run up a 14-5 lead in the second game U.C. marked down eight consecutive points to cut the Emmanuel advantage to 14-13. The harassed purple five asked for time out at this stage. Evidently the words of wisdom then spoken by the chubby Mr. Burns, E.C. captain, had the desired effect, for when the routed theologs returned they rallied to win, 15-13.

Fast-Stepping Bouts Mark
Boxing—Two
T.K.O.'s

PARKER V. KEMP BEST BOUT

Four Winners Declared in Wrestling; Houle
Outstanding

The junior interfaculty assault elimination bouts were completed in Hart House yesterday afternoon.

Those who witnessed the boxing were treated to some action-packed bouts. Cryderman stepped in the roped square twice, winning his first bout on a foul from MacLaren, and outpointing Doddington in the semi-final of the 145 lb. class. This last bout was one of the best of the afternoon, and established the winner as a serious threat in the final struggle when he meets Graham, who advanced to the finals by taking the decision from Vance.

The best bout of the afternoon was supplied by Parker and Kemp at 135 lbs. The advantage continuously shifted in this fast moving bout with the greater experience of Kemp being mainly responsible for his winning a close decision. Kemp looked very good and appears to be headed for a place on the senior team.

Two technical knockouts were recorded. Owen battered O'Brien into submission, and Doddington gained the decision at the end of two rounds from Mighton. Owen later lost to Bolter in a fast bout.

In the wrestling division four winners were declared. Weare won a decision from Wolfe to capture the 135 lb. crown. Houle bowled over two opponents, Cruikshanks and Grasley, to gain the 155 lb. laurel wreath. This stocky bone-bender won both bouts in handy fashion, and will be a serious threat for a place on the team.

Radzick also won two bouts, in taking the title for the 145 lb. grapplers. He scored two falls over Comfort and then went on to take the decision from Boland in the final.

The only heavyweight bout of the assault saw Lathrop score a quick fall over Kinkelman.

In the point total S.P.S. appear headed for the championship, as they were well ahead at the conclusion of hostilities yesterday.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Jim Tiller

It has become increasingly apparent that the Varsity hockey team have, at the present at least, little chance of doing anything worthy of mention in senior O.H.A. circles. Tonight, they will have a chance to demonstrate they are still superior to anything an American University can produce on the ice when they meet the hockeyists from Yale for the third time in Varsity Arena since the international intercollegiate puckchasing contests were started two years ago. The Blues outplayed the Elis rather neatly a year ago but since then the Yalers have improved while Varsity have added little to their laurels.

The Bulldogs from Yale are champions of a group of U.S. colleges, and furthermore, they held the United States Olympic team to a 3-1 score only last Saturday, which means they are really a strong squad. Nevertheless, victory should go to the Blues if they snap into it and go after goals with all the traditional collegiate ardour. It is doubtful if Yale has anyone who can match strides with Jimmy MacPherson or Normie McClelland, to mention two of the more outstanding Blue speedsters. Also, Charles will be back on defence, after an absence due to injuries sustained, materially heightening Varsity's chances for success.

A large number of keenly contested bouts in the junior assault indicates that the Mitts, Mats, Mugs and Muscle sport is making a comeback in popularity. After two afternoons of furious, if not scientific, parrying and punching, the boxers have not yet reached any definite conclusions and the finals will be fought out this afternoon.

Lawrence Cryderman, a member of the sports staff of this publication, has fought his way into the 145 lb. boxing final, thus disproving an old theory that sports writers have little practical knowledge of what they write about. Lawrence has outboxed and outgulled his opponents in the elimination rounds and stands a good chance of taking Graham in the final although the latter has displayed more than ordinary ability for a junior to date.

The best bout yesterday afternoon brought together Kemp and Parker in the 135 lb. class. Kemp received the verdict but only after the most skillful exhibition of miltwork this writer has ever observed in a junior assault. Parker, a first year man, had a smooth style and sweet left hook and looked like the winner in the opening round. However, Kemp had his distances measured very exactly and scored several times with a right reach to take the decision. In the 155 lb. division, Bolter outscored Owen in a good, old-fashioned slug-fest after the latter had won a technical K.O. over O'Brien.

When you read this, the senior cagers will be on their way to points south in their annual tour of American colleges where they hope to gain enough experience to carry them to an intercollegiate title this winter. This evening, the Blues will play in Buffalo. Tomorrow, they will advance to Ithaca, where they encounter the Cornell basketballers. And Saturday, Warren Stevens' cagists will drop in at Niagara University for a loop-the-ball contest. May their efforts be rewarded with success, is our pious plea.

There has been much talk of star performers in the field of sport at other colleges coming to O.C.E. and playing for Varsity, and the Intercollegiate Athletic Union will vote this year on a motion preventing such occurrences. It is understood that this motion was brought up by particularly strong agitation by Western who feared that three members of their last year's senior basketball squad would join forces with Councils, Marks, Gold and Co. As a matter of fact, these players are not playing on the Varsity team. We are not prepared to say this is because they couldn't make the team, although that has been suggested. Exchange please note: Varsity needs no help from O.C.E.

The McGill splash-batters will be here Saturday for the return game with the Varsity water poloists. The Redmen carry a six point lead from the encounter in Montreal last Saturday, where the Blues lost out 9-3, and are favoured to win the round and the title for the third year in a row. The Blues are rather expected, however, to outplay the Redcaps in the Hart House pool, water polo being one sport where the home team has a big advantage. There will be a dance in the gym after the game for those not overly attracted by athletic contests.

VARSITY BEAVERS AGAIN DEFEATED

6-1 Score not Indicative of Play—Only Two Periods

NUMEROUS PENALTIES

The Varsity Beavers suffered another defeat last night in the Arena at the hands of the Royal Yorkers by a margin of five goals. The 6-1 score, however, does not indicate the play.

As there was a triple bill only two periods of the game were played. The Varsity defence and goal keeper were weak, but it must be taken into consideration that they had only three shots while the hotelmen had six extras. Galway performed well and was the big factor in Varsity's only goal.

The music of God Save the King had scarcely died away when Owen let the first goal trickle past him. The Yorkers followed up their lead with two more in quick succession. Towards the end of the period they became a little high-hat and allowed the students to swarman around the goal and do everything but score.

About five minutes after the beginning of the second half when the Yorkers were a man short, Varsity got their counter. Galway went in on a fast rush, was forced to go behind the net, passed it out in front to Brown who rapped it home. For about five minutes the Beavers held the play in the opposing zone but were unrewarded.

Wilson and Bradshaw scored three goals within a space of four minutes, alternately scoring and assisting. There were numerous penalties for high sticks and illegal bodychecks.

Beavers: Goal, Owen; defence, Sissons, Brown; forwards, Lindrey, Stavari, Creasy; alternates, Galway, Boddington, Burchell.

Royal York: Goal, Major; defence, Marshall, Murphy; forwards, Barnes, Croft, McIlwaine; alternates, Standhope, Wilson, Hodgson, Bradshaw and Dunne.

Varsity Water poloists Out For Revenge

Six points behind, the Varsity water poloists take to the water Saturday night in an endeavour to wrest the water polo championship from McGill.

This game is the second of a series of two—points to count. Last Saturday Varsity was defeated at McGill 9-3. Arrangements are being made for a large turnout of the Blue supporters. Refreshments and dancing are being provided for after the game.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

Lately we have been giving you odd bits of news about women's sports in other universities, and some of the girls have been rather interested in a few of the items. A number of girls have been wishing there were track and field events around this university, but remember if you want anything done about it, you'll probably have to get to work and do it yourselves.

Concerning the possibility of an intercollegiate swimming meet, the idea is off, for this year anyway. It has yet to be decided if there will be an intercollegiate hockey team. Last year you remember, there was no real series and McGill and Varsity played an exhibition match, with McGill coming out on top. It would be rather nice if there could be a real series this year, but that depends on the gods, the weather, the athletic association's bank balance, and the desire of McGill and Queen's for such a series.

This week's bright idea—how about letting the girls have Hart House alternate years, with the gyms, swimming pool, squash courts, common rooms, and all the rest? We can just see the boys giving it to us, can't you?

YALE MEETS VARSITY IN HOCKEY CLASSIC

improved greatly since and were good enough to defeat the strong McGill Redmen, and with the nucleus of that great team of last season are formidable opposition for any Canadian team. Captain C. J. Mills will lead the Yale hockeyists, covering the right wing, with William Moore and Daniel Badger forming the first line. Blake Shepard and Lyndon Wilson will line up before Richard Pearce to form the rearguard combination. From a large number of hockey players reporting for practices the Yale squad was chosen and those making places were Gagarin, Childs, Cooke, Nagle, Cocroft, Pillsbury, Foshburgh and Sam Mills, all of whom will see action against the University of Toronto forces.

To offset the Yale squad Ace Bailey will send out the dynamite pair of McClelland and MacPherson, who were prominent in last year's victory over the Bulldogs, and "Romeo" Valiquette will likely see action on the first string forwards, while McIlquham, Ripley and Lenahan will alternate. The Varsity nets will likely find Horton Shipman covering the gap, and the blue line forces will be made up of Jeffrey, Driscoll and Charles, the latter making his return after an enforced absence due to injuries.

All past records of the season will be discounted tonight when the Varsity team tangle with Yale and the University of Toronto. Blue and White hockeyists will be out to maintain Canadian hockey prestige but the puck-chasers from New Haven have other ideas and before the final gong Varsity Arena will be the scene of a torrid battle with the college representatives of the Canadian and American hockey striving for a decisive victory. Can Varsity gain an initial win?

MARIA CHAPDELAINE SOC. TO BE ORGANISED SOON

A committee comprised of Professor Jeanneret and Professor Pellham Edgar has been set up to organize "The Friends of Maria Chapdelaine Society". The sole aim of this society is to bring to public attention the value of "Maria Chapdelaine" as a model of French-Canadian literature and to honour the name of Louis Hemon, the author, by the erection of a tomb worthy of his memory at Peribonka in Quebec.

For this purpose it has been proposed to restore and preserve the house in Peribonka where Hemon wrote his classics. The house is to become a museum where relics having a significant connection with the author and his story will be housed as an attraction to tourists, who visit the district north of the Saguenay in the Laurentian Highlands.

SLEEPING IN LIBRARY IS NOW FORBIDDEN

Vigilante Committee Formed to Enforce Behaviour in Hart House Library

Students will no longer be able to sprawl out on the chesterfields of Hart House library and have a good afternoon's sleep for the Library Committee has decided they want to ensure it being a "gentlemen's library".

New covers are to be put on the deep comfortable armchairs and divans, so the committee is opening a campaign to prevent undergraduates putting their feet up on the red plush cushions and remaining there for hours in a state of coma.

"We are going to prevent students sleeping in the library, for that is not the purpose of the room," Bill MacDonald, a member of the committee, said.

A vigilante committee has been formed to picket the library most of the day and make sure this edict is not violated.

An index of 192 in 1934. The present index is 143.
Mounting relief costs, added to the already existing need for economy, forced the present government to make cuts everywhere except in Public Health and Northern Development (a branch of relief) which were as large as, or larger than the cut in Education. And Education was cut $1,250,000 before the universities were touched. Dr. McArthur further pointed out that the government grant, in addition to the fixed annual statutory grant, constitutes nearly two thirds of the University's revenue. That is, students pay only approximately one-third of the cost of their education.

A comparison of fees in the University of Toronto and in other universities in Canada shows that McMaster University and the Universities of New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and Alberta have slightly lower tuition fees in Arts. Other universities are about the same as Toronto or higher. American universities of equal rank are generally more expensive.

From the point of view of the student, it remains to be said that an added annual expense of from $25 to $30 is a substantial hardship in this depression period. A rough estimate on the basis of registration figures indicates that a number of students have been forced to remain out of the University because of lack of funds. This number is probably comparatively small, and it is true that registration is up. But the committee has no doubt that many such cases do exist. A twenty-five per cent increase is prohibitive when a student is already close to the line and is unable to secure assistance.

At present in the department, in government circles and among the taxpayers of the province, there is a general feeling that the students are bearing the added burden with little embarrassment. The committee is of the opinion that this is an erroneous impression which ought to be speedily dissipated. At the same time it has little concrete evidence to this effect and desires to receive any that is available.

On the face of the above evidence, the committee has come to the conclusion that, although it cannot be stated positively that the students have not a "case", the action by the students over the heads of the authorities is not at the present time advisable and has never at any time since the increase was announced been advisable. The government has cut its grant to the University because its policy of retrenchment demanded savings in every available quarter. The committee appreciates this fact.

At the same time we urge that extra fees are a burden to all students and any measure which makes university training more difficult of access to a certain number of people capable of benefiting therefrom is, from the point of view of the University and from the point of view of the province at large, regrettable. Students have met the government's demands without grumbling because they appreciate the financial difficulties which it and all people of the province are facing and are willing to take their fair share of the burden. It is a necessary corollary, however, that they regard the present situation in provincial finance as a temporary one. They regard the cut in the grant as a temporary measure designed to remedy temporary conditions. Unemployment relief expenditure and other extraordinary expenses are indications of abnormality. The students are willing to do their share in dissipating this abnormality. But at the same time they look forward to a restoration of the grant at the earliest opportunity.

as to the interests of the person analyzing." He pointed out that there are general laws of motion in society which were enunciated by Marx.

"We communists," said the speaker, "claim that we stand today between two worlds. Capitalism is dead. Society is vacillating at the cross-roads deciding which road to take—to socialism or to fascism. It is up to those who do not want to suffer under fascism to form a united front and fight against it. This fight is not only a defensive battle against the power of capitalism but an offensive toward socialism."

Tim Buck declared that the forces of fascism are already combining. "It is not an accident that teachers, engineers, students and other professional people must either conform to the point of view of the ruling class or to become 'unpopular' with the powers that be."

M. Wayman chaired the meeting. In explaining the aims and hopes of the newly-formed Communist Club, Wayman said, "There is a growing consciousness on the part of students that there is something wrong with the present set-up of society. Discussions in other universities in Canada on resolutions for the convention of the National Federation of Canadian University Students shows distinctly that the students are aware to the fact that they must band together to maintain any semblance of academic freedom. There is a growing sentiment that there is needed something that will stand for a new social order. The main need is for an all-embracing organization opposed to reaction and war."

The meeting last night was an open meeting to acquaint the students with the new group. There will be an organization meeting Friday afternoon at 5 p.m. in the Women's Union. The Communist Club expects to hold one or two open meetings a month and carry on a general educational program. This program will consist of discussions by campus people who might either agree or disagree with communism so that a full understanding of the problem may be achieved.

M. AND P. SOCIETY

Prof. T. Griffith Taylor will speak on "Science in the Antarctic" at the regular meeting of the M. and P. Society today at 4.15 p.m. in Room 43, McLennan Laboratories. Refreshments before the meeting.

The Varsity, Dr. J. G. Althouse, Dean of Ontario College of Education, stated that he certainly never considered scholarship as a handicap in teaching. He declared that it was impossible to say just which of the many qualifications of a teacher was most essential but most assuredly, scholarship ranked among the leaders, although admittedly many other assets are also necessary.

Dr. P. Sandiford, Director of Educational Research, remarked that some very scholarly people could not possibly become good teachers, not because they possess knowledge but because they lack something else. In general, however, the better students make the better teachers; such has been the experience at O.C.E. anyway.

Professor G. S. Brett, Dean of the School of Graduate Studies, claimed that the generalization made by Sir Norman Angell was the kind of generalization which was partly right and partly wrong; mostly wrong. Admittedly, those who reach the peak in research work, like Einstein, do not make good teachers, because they are not interested in teaching. But when people are interested enough in teaching to take courses in the subject, high scholastic standing, expressing as it does, a thorough knowledge of the subject to be taught, is a decided advantage.

logical, declaring that fear and nationalism are every bit as powerful as economic factors in determining a nation's attitude towards war.

"The whole pacifist program rests on the dangerous assumption that nothing of material advantage can result from war," Mr. R. G. Riddell pointed out, in supporting the affirmative. The speaker declared that as long as war remained as a means of achieving national policy he placed his hope of peace in the creation and support of a duly-constituted international authority.

Professor Sissons, the fourth speaker, based his arguments on the "absurdity and futility of war, alike to victor and vanquished."

An open debate from the floor followed, in which an allusion to the "honourable member from fallacy" was countered by a reference to "the first speaker through the nose".

CANADIAN SOCIALISM PLEASING TO LUOWIG

Ludwig's leading question, when the party was securely settled in a corner of the Royal York foyer. Intellectually Canada is English, socially, American, was the consensus of opinion. "Will Canada have a labour government soon—say within ten years?" This was answered in the affirmative by the students.

"You in Canada are not ashamed to be called a socialist," said this world-famous liberal, expressing pleasure at the breadth of vision in this country, as compared with the United States. It was pointed out to him that the leader of the Canadian Communist party would speak on the university campus in the evening, while he was giving his address in Massey Hall. Then the subject shifted to politics and fascism.

"How long will the Nazi government last in Germany?" asked The Varsity. "That's just what Hitler asks himself every evening," came the answer like a shot. "He will fall when there is a war—there is no doubt about that." European war, started by Germany, was taken for granted.

"Is anti-Russian feeling in this country caused by the way in which Russian wheat has cut out the Canadian market in recent years?" No, it was said, the anti-Russian feeling is chiefly anti-Communist sentiment. "There is no communism in Russia, there is only socialism," came the rejoinder.

Many other statements of opinion were made by the students, who asked questions in turn. It was agreed that Canada was more likely to achieve progress by socialist legislation, like the British, instead of waiting for communism and revolution as does the United States. It was agreed that Canadian students have a slightly higher moral tone than those of the U.S.A. or England, and a somewhat higher academic standard than Americans.

COURSE ON THE FAMILY CALLED SUPERFLUOUS

Faculty Opinion Overrides Correspondent to "Varsity"

A course on the Family as suggested by G. O. Watt, IV B. and M. in Tuesday's Varsity, would be superfluous and unpopular, was the consensus of opinion expressed by most of the professors interviewed yesterday.

Dr. A. C. Grauer, professor of Social Science, does not think that university students, particularly men, would take seriously such subjects as "how to balance the family budget". Furthermore, he said, the university is not the place for a general course of this nature.

L. F. McIlwraith, associate professor of anthropology, stated, "All students who are enrolled in such courses as Honour Sociology, Honour Psychology or Social Science, as well as those taking the Anthropology option, are now receiving a great deal of information concerning the family and its role in the development of mankind. A study of the family is absolutely essential in these courses, and is properly emphasized."

Second Prize, Serious Prose—

Reckoning

By M. K. Howe

My first glimpse of her was as she stood on the running board of our car—in the radiant fall sunlight of the south, every crevice of her huge face was revealed, from the mole on her lined forehead to the slowly moving jaws—with a nose between solid as the shapeless hills. At the moment her eyes were large and innocent, in her hand she held the body of a thin and miserable chicken. "Eight poun', mum, yes suh, ef it's a poun'. Ah eain tell by jes' lookin' at 'im!"

"Five pounds," replied my mother, looking stern. "Not a pound more, if it's that."

"Six," said the Egg-woman, smiling naively. There was a pause, the chicken dangled between them. "Six," the Egg-woman muttered. Then indignantly, "Why you all knows I wouldn't cheat you, no sircel!"

"Very well then, I'll have it weighed."

The Egg-woman sent the snuff she was chewing into a thin spiral in the air. "Eight," said she. It was three pounds and four ounces.

They lived at the end of a muddy little lane, past a pig pen, on a farmer's land—in a little house like a dilapidated chicken coop. Invariably there were tattered quilts on the line, of a once gay gray soddenness, large brown chickens under foot, children, mostly girls, barefoot, with only ragged dresses, standing gazing at the entrance of a stranger. Under the tree rocking slowly, chewing her snuff, sat the Egg-woman, pausing only occasionally to brush her youngest from her knees, an unsmiling child with an aged and baleful stare.

Within the house all was confusion. Unmade beds, hot and untidy looking. Huddled in the only chair was the Egg-woman's daughter-in-law, nursing her child, both were white and thin. By the dusty fireplace stood her husband, Robby, the Egg-woman's favorite child, a sullen, pale man in stocking feet.

From the Egg-woman I heard that Robby was out of work again, that the chills were bothering him again, that he couldn't collect the two dollars that a farmer owed him for working in his fields. She also wanted a dollar for patent medicine guaranteed to cure the chills and twenty-odd other ailments common to mountain folks. At this moment Robbie's brother strode in, a red checked youth in clean blue overalls—he surveyed his ailing relative humorously. "Shure," he said with a wave of his hand, "there ain't nothin' wrong with Robbie—he ain't sick—jes' plumb lazy."

Second Prize Humorous Verse—

Consolation

By Paul McGillicuddy

When I'm feeling rather stupid and perhaps a little blue,
My complexion never alters its delightful, rosy hue.
I never let it bother me, 'cos I know what to do.

I meditate:

For while I'm feeling so forlorn
Some fishy things are being born.
Perhaps a little octopus or possibly a turtle
Looks out upon a cold, wet world,
And sheds a briny tear,
As, from the mother's clammy nose,
The little egg can hear
That sweet nostalgic gurgling sound—
A mother fish's snuffle.

To think that I might be a fish,
As cold and wet and tiny .
As any egg that could be laid
In all the fishy briny,

I feel more comfortable quite,
For I am so much drier.
A mermaid sprite may be all right,
But when I go to bed at night
I dream of something higher
Than ladies who live in the depths of the sea
And surely would wriggle and giggle with glee
If they could ensnare
By such wiles as green hair
And scale-covered tails to make up for legs
Some little land-hibber—
A laddie like me—
Who would surely shun siring a litter of eggs.

Such thoughts which could hardly be very much wetter,
Can't fail to make dinst seem a great deal better.

Sonnet to the Judges of the Literary Issue

By Thomas Hoy

Ye Mighty arbiters of Poesy,
Who, safe in Professorial retreats,
Dogmatically proclaim the faults you see
In all such drivelling stuff as mine—or Keats

You castigate that Evil, Doggerel;
You scorn the follies of this puny verse.
My friends, I beg you go right straight to—Well,
My poem's bad—your idle talk is worse.

But would you have us poets sing like Dante
And shout on high the clear-resounding line,
May I suggest you raise the meagre ante
From Dollars Five to Noble Ninety-nine.

Kind Sirs, I pray, regard my words as pranks;
For I would take the Five with many thanks.

Honourable Mention—

As it was in the beginning

It stared at me. It glared at me—
Monotony—
The whole day long, and into night;
The right went wrong, the wrong went right—
'Twas agony.

I took it up. I shook it up—
Bewilderment—
It wouldn't smile; it simply stared,
And all the while in space it glared—
A monument.

I walked with it. I talked with it—
'Twas all the same—
A lifeless thing that wouldn't speak,
Not even croak or sing or squeak—
Was I to blame?

I couldn't start, I shouldn't start,
To tell the half.
'Twill follow me through all the years
That are to be—my doubts, my fears,
My photograph.

First Prize, Serious Prose—

To-morrow

By John M. Dooley

"Tickets, please!"

He thrust his hand into his coat pocket and handed the conductor his ticket. Gee, it was good to be going home again. Good, even though he was going home without a job. "Laid off temporarily," the boss had said, "if things get better we'll call you back." However there wasn't much chance of that happening. Losing his job would be tough on Helen though, they had been planning on marriage for so long. And now . . . no job . . . and not enough money to keep the two of them decently for even six months. Oh well, there's always tomorrow—wasn't there a quotation about that somewhere—Shakespeare or somebody said it? "Tomorrow and tomorrow . . . and tomorrow," that was it, he guessed. It was better to be sure of themselves though, marriage was sort of a serious game. Helen was a swell kid . . . it would be hard on her if they broke up now . . . they'd been going together for a long time, too. She'd wait for him though, he was sure of that. She'd wait, no matter how long it was before he found a job.

Gee, he hadn't realized how close to home they were. Better get the bags down. Yep, everything just the same . . . the station had a new coat of paint but it was still the same old place. There was Dad and Mom.

"Hello, Dad." He couldn't think of anything else to say.

"My boy!" . . . his mother's arms were around his neck and all he could say was "Hello, Mom."

They didn't say much on the way home. He was glad, he didn't feel much like talking. The house was the same . . . the roses in front were just about ready to bloom. While his father was talking to him about how bad business was he began to realize how tired he was. He guessed he better go to bed. It wouldn't take very long for him to get to sleep . . . he really was tired. Boy, it was swell to be home again. He hadn't asked if they had seen anything of Helen . . . it would be better if he looked her up tomorrow. Sure, tomorrow would be around soon enough. Just now he felt more like sleeping than anything else. Good kid, Helen . . . she'd wait for him. Sleep . . . he didn't care so much about that job now . . . funny . . . a few hours ago he'd been so worried. Ho-hum . . . didn't Shakespeare have something to say about sleep too? Old Bill must have been quite a guy . . . he never seemed to overlook anything. Oh well . . . tomorrow. He could look for a job then. Probably he could find something to do somewhere.

Honourable Mention—

Fugue

By Wallace Wadland

The cloud had gone; out stepped a golden maiden, Floated

Down the moon-streams,

Mottled star-beams,

(To a garden nectar-laden where I waited for the maiden)

Gaily sliding

Riding,

Gliding,

Very, very softly gliding, found the garden nectar-laden.

The glint of darkness showed its flashing eyes,
Beheld us

On the path-ways,

Gnomie by-ways,

(Tho' we loathed the rude surmise of countless flashing eyes)

So fondly walking,

Talking,

Mocking,

Very, very subtly mocking at our fear of rude surmise.

We felt the course of joy pervading fast,
Communed

Beneath the bowers,

Magic powers,

(Heard the future meet the past, the present fading fast)

While youth discerning,

Yearning,

Learning,

Very, very slowly learning, hoped to stem the hurried past.

She started, looked, then dearly quick dismissed me,
Hastened

Through the morning,
Brilliant warning,
(Sad she did at last resist me, and reluctant had dismissed me)
Skyward flying,

Crying,

Sighing,

Very vainly landward sighing that she'd never more resist me.

THE VARSITY

Judges Report

Owing to the scarcity of material and the lack of quality in some departments of the literary issue, it has been deemed advisable by the judges to redistribute the prize money in accordance with the merit of the material submitted. The lack of humorous prose, together with the correspondingly high quality of the serious prose, has led the judges to suggest a change in the original plans. For this reason, two prizes of five dollars have been awarded to the winners of the serious prose, and the second prizes transferred to the humorous prose.

A slight misunderstanding seems to have occurred regarding the qualifications of the competitors. The prizes were offered to undergraduates of the University of Toronto. While many manuscripts of graduates have been submitted, which were in several cases deemed of a superior quality to those of the undergraduates, it was felt that the prizes should be given to the undergraduates as originally stated. The graduates whose work has been published will be paid one dollar each for the articles published.

We publish below a criticism of the prose, by Mr. Hugh Morrison, B.A. Oxon., who was kind enough to prepare some helpful suggestions for the benefit of those who took the trouble to submit stories. The poetry was judged by Mr. Henry Noyes, lecturer at the University of Toronto. Mr. Noyes' article on Canadian Poetry follows also.

Prose Comment

I would award first place to the story: Tomorrow, by John M. Dooley. Perhaps it does not show as firm and mature a grasp of individual character as some of the others submitted but the story is not dictated by the plot, as are most of the stories submitted. Moreover, the story reveals intimately and authentically the difficulties youth has to face today. The story is true to life when it shows Youth facing its difficulties as it always has. Like Shakespeare: "Youth's a stuff will not endure," and "What's to come is still unsure". The last sentence tops off the story with ironic artistry, reflecting the tragic contradictions in society today. Mr. Dooley has made no conscious attempt to be a propagandist, another point in the story's favour.

I would award second place to The Reckoning, by M. K. Howe. This story is written with more grasp of character than is Tomorrow, but it lacks the fullness of Mr. Dooley's story. This story has also the merit of not being dictated by the plot, but the effect of the story as a whole is not complete enough. It is more of a realist presentation of a scene. It does not raise any larger question as does Mr. Dooley in the irony of his last sentence; or if the writer intended to leave the reader with some larger question, consequent on the shooting of Robbie, the writer has failed to bring it out clearly enough.

All the rest of the stories are dictated by their respective plots, which makes mechanical and formula stories compared to the first two.

Verse or Worse

Canadian Poetry, long known to be moribund, has at length "passed beyond". No autopsy has yet been performed, nor will perhaps be required. The old gentleman, who had so long hobbled between the two extremes of mortality, at last sank away into the oblivion he had so richly deserved. There were no indications of whiskey on his breath, no sign that he had done himself personal violence or that he suffered any more from death than he had from life. We, in a like spirit of resignation, have asked for floral tributes to lay on his tomb, and have even agreed to pay for some of them. Epitaphs to the sun and the moon and to mythological characters have poured in upon us, sonnets to the futility of the old traditions that Canadian Poetry has taken with him to the grave.

Canadian Poetry was born many years ago when words could still be used so vaguely that they meant nothing. Small wonder that the deceased wrote in the worst style that Sir James Barrie or Walter de la Mare could have used in rewriting the worst of Tennyson. Schooled in the art of saying nothing beautifully, he made the fortunate discovery that the farther he retreated from life and observation of the immediate environment, the easier it was for him to attain greatness. Defective eyesight which later developed into total blindness made this attainment so much the simpler that he added assumed deafness to his already numerous afflictions. His biographer may be at pains to discover why he did not die much earlier, unless he chances to fall on the facile explanation that life has a tendency to forget those who forget her.

The deceased, it is perhaps needless to add, was never married, so that his life passed uneventfully, without the storm and stress of emotions or children. The latter he always feared, though in secret; for they might as they grew older impose human relations upon him.

It may be regretted by many that he withdrew so early from Canadian life, that he loved the sun and rain with equal fervour, but never had the least interest in modern industry or the social life of the people in whose midst he existed. Personally we wish that he had travelled and noticed not only the Canadian landscape, but had occasionally wasted some observation upon Canadian cities and the busy and unconsciously amusing human beings that live in them.

Now that the old gentleman is decently buried and fittingly lamented, however, we may, with the poets of this latest Varsity contest, say good-bye to him and his traditions forever. We might add with a view to the future that what we hope to celebrate at the next poetry contest is not the death of Canadian Poetry but the birth of Good Poetry in Canada.

First Prize, Serious Verse—

War; Ironical Thoughts

By P. A. B.

If it must be and she must lure us all
Into her arms, what matter? Muscles can run
Hot from these bloodless pavements as from Rome.
She need not fret: she shall be greatly welcome:
She will well grace the solemn spread of city
And of farm. Stars will shine sweeter for Her moving under them: music will be
Magic with the sound of her: knowledge will laugh: beauty
Will boldly burn: wisdom will be comely as the sun.

She need not fret: so she but red her lips
And like the wind come winnowing among
The lowly dwelling-spots of men and beasts,
Moving her limbs like some slow sarabande,
We shall be flame. We are not good nor wise,
And she is kind: one love to us is fragrant
As another. We will forget our God,
The sweet soul of our new and hopeful time,
The quietude that has no age nor period . . .

She need not fret: we are but children still:
She shall have lovers far more passionate
Than any that ran out of Athens' shade
To seek her lips.

Fate

By Larry Lloyd

Overlooking the mighty Hudson with its cold grey austere walls stands Sing Sing—New York's State house of correction: Sing Sing prison, where men are made or broken; where the huge iron gates close on a prisoner and he drops out of existence until his sentence has been served and his debt to humanity and justice paid; Sing Sing, where some of the most incorrigible, the hardest, and cruellest criminals pay dearly for their crimes; where perhaps innocent men serve an undeserved term, where men are known by numbers and ranked by their own crimes or deeds.

It was one of the first days of spring; the warm, white sun of advancing summer beamed on the prison yard, where the prisoners were being exercised under a double guard. The guards paced slowly back and forth on the high walls, ever alert for the slightest sign of unrest, the long barrels of their guns, gleaming in the sunlight, a grim reminder to those who dare attempt a dash for freedom. The captain of guards marched along the bottom of the wall surveying the prisoners and seeing that everything was in proper order. He was a tall, well-built man with an expression that comes only after years of constant service in handling prisoners; an expression of sternness, even hatred, mingled with disgust. The prisoners had learned to hate, obey and respect this guard for he never gave or showed mercy. In the prison books he was listed as Mark Lynch, but only referred to by the prisoners as "Buller". He had served in the prison as guard and captain for seventeen years; served with so strict discipline and force that he had been promoted to senior guard. He had a wife and one son, and it was said that in his home life he was a kind and loving father and a good provider. However, the minute he entered the iron gates of the prison his life changed, he took on a cruel expression; an attitude of hatred seemed to fill him, and the other side of his life began.

On this particular morning the river was dotted with small pleasure craft enjoying to the utmost the beauties of the spring day. A stiff breeze had blown up, adding greatly to the difficulty and anxiety of the occupants of the boats. A small canoe manned by two young boys was having the hardest battle of all against the waves. To the prisoners in the yard the canoe's efforts against the waves broke the long, tedious monotony of a prison day, and they watched with a growing interest. The canoe, despite the efforts of the boys, had turned broadside to the waves and it was seen that it would not be long before it would be swamped. Sooner than expected, a large wave struck the craft, completely submerging it and dashing the occupants into the water.

One of the prisoners, a large, muscular man, serving a two-year sentence, rushed to the Captain of the Guards. He had been a life-guard at a well-known beach for three years previous to his confinement in the prison and he earnestly begged for the chance to save the two lives; he pledged his word to return to the prison. The Captain's only reply was that he would shoot the first man who attempted to leave the yard. Discipline had to be enforced and he intended to enforce it to the utmost. He fingered the lock of his gun in grim anticipation of what would happen if he were not obeyed. One of the boys, forced to give up the struggle for life because of the cold and exhaustion, loosened his grip and disappeared into the black icy waters. Excitement in the prison yard had reached a height of feverish recklessness. Bad men, men who had destroyed human life, men who had performed atrocious cruelty; thieves, murderers, the scum of the underworld, yet they could not bear to see human lives sacrificed before their eyes.

The nervous tension was clearly showing on Lynch's stern countenance. Bends of perspiration stood out on his forehead, his lips twitched, but they did not utter the words that would cheat the river of its victims. The prisoners clutched the iron bars, pacing back and forward in the yard, helpless, like savage beasts in their cages.

The "life-guard" prisoner with pitiful longing and appeal written on his face, pleaded again with the guard for the opportunity to save the boy. "For the sake of all that is human, Lynch, let me out there. Let me go, I promise before God to return. Quick, for God's sake, quick! Before it's too late."

All eyes were upon the guard; the prisoners, angered into a frenzy by his inhuman attitude, stood menacingly in little groups. His usual stern commanding voice trailed off into little above a whisper: "Discipline is discipline, men! The first man that attempts to leave the yard will be shot in his tracks."

A shout was heard; the other was finally giving up his fight for life. All eyes immediately turned towards the river. First one hand, then the other loosened its grasp on the canoe and the boy sank from view. The waves, seemingly appeased by their complete victory, momentarily abated. A great hush fell over the prison-yard, not a word was spoken, not even a whisper.

Shortly after a bell rang; the men slowly and resentfully filed back to their cells. Orders from the official Lynch was ordered to report to the Warden at once. As he walked through the long corridors, he pondered over the morning's events, vainly trying to justify his actions.

"Captain," the Warden was saying, "you have had a hard question to deal with this morning. I'll leave it to you to decide whether you've acted justly." "Your boy—your boy was in that canoe this afternoon. They found the body half an hour ago."

PEACE MOVEMENT
PLANS CONFERENCE

Visitors Coming from Maritimes and Quebec During Holidays

ECONOMICS BUILDING

Officers of the Student Peace Movement are making preparations for a national Student Peace Conference to be held in Toronto on the 30th and the 31st of this month. The place of meeting has not been decided upon, but the most probable location will be the Economics Building on Bloor St.

Invitations have been extended to Universities throughout Canada to attend. From the Maritimes Dalhousie and Acadia Universities have been requested to send delegates. Montreal will send forty students from the High Schools and the University of Montreal, and a large delegation is expected from the west.

The branch of the Peace Movement on the Toronto campus is extending invitations to the political clubs and other associations of the University as well as any of the more prominent High Schools of the city to attend. It is hoped that a meeting of the N.E.C.U.S., which is being held within a few days of the conference, will be able to send a representation.

This will be the first time that students from the universities and colleges throughout Canada gather together to consider the problems of peace. The implications of international affairs will be discussed with particular regard to the problems of the League of Nations and Canada's participation in world events. The peace policy of the Soviet Union will be dealt with pro and con by special speakers, one of whom may be Professor Reed of Queen's.

Sir Francis Floud Cautions
Against Loss of British Trade

British High Commissioner Advocates Policy of Give and Take

AT COMMERCE CLUB

The opinion that Britain's new agricultural policy of home expansion and cheaper prices will adversely affect Canada, unless we can learn to give to England as well as take from her, was expressed at the Annual Commerce Club banquet last night by Sir Francis Floud, British High Commissioner to Canada. Two hundred members of the club were present in Great Hall of Hart House.

A toast to the University was proposed by Ross Putnam and responded to by President Cody. That to the Commerce Club was proposed by Professor Ashley, and responded to by Ronald Sheen. Tom Bell, president of the club, presented the Crombie Squash Cup to H. A. Mullin during the evening.

In his opening remarks, Sir Francis explained that until the Great War, Britain had paid little attention to agriculture, turning all her efforts to manufacturing. Even then, however, she produced more of the produce she consumed than was generally realized. Since the war, however, she has pursued a definite policy of agricultural expansion, a policy which will have increasing effects on world markets in years to come. It was also pointed out that while England is one of Canada's best customers, Canada in turn takes only 5 per cent of England's exports.

Sir Francis then went on to discuss the situation in regard to each of the most important farm items which Britain imports. In apples, Canada has a decided edge, but in order to maintain this, more care must be taken in regard to packing and shipping. There is still room for expansion on the part of the Dominion in exports to Britain of butter, cheese, bacon, and canned fruits, but in all of them we must be able to meet stiff competition under a lower tariff advantage.

Turning lastly to the wheat situation, the speaker pointed out that Canada's exports to Great Britain were declining steadily, as Argentine wheat gained because of a wide price difference which overcame the tariff preference enjoyed by the Dominion. He claimed that Canadians had an exalted opinion of the value of their own wheat, and that unless they took steps in the near future, the British market, which they have so long considered their own, would be lost for all time.

PROVISION FOR WOMEN
AT XMAS UNNECESSARY

Survey Shows Most Co-eds Go Home or Stay with Friends

Yesterday the approach of Christmas inspired The Varsity to try and find out what provision, if any, was made for the women students in residence who are unable to go home for the holidays. Were the residences kept open? Were arrangements made to give them a Christmas dinner such as the Warden of Hart House gives the men residents who stay here during the holidays? Was there any relaxing of rules about leaves, and so on? The Deans of Women in the various Arts colleges were approached about the problem. Apparently, however, there is no problem, because the women students are always able to get home for Christmas. In the rare cases where this is not possible, they arrange to stay with friends in the city.

Fare Reduction
For Students

The Railway Companies are issuing to students of the University, and to members of the University staff, round-trip tickets for the Christmas and New Year vacation at the rate of a single fare and one-quarter.

Students wishing to take advantage of this reduction should leave their names with the Registrar of their College, or the Secretary of their Faculty or Department on or before Monday, December 16th. The necessary certificates will be issued to the students at the College, Faculty or Department office at noon on Friday, December 20th. Members of the staff may obtain these certificates at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall.

FRIDAY THE 13TH

Several Students Dare Jinx to Do Its Worst—Others Indifferent

"CHANCE TO FORGET"

Friday the thirteenth holds no terrors for most students, a canvass of the campus revealed. The opinion of the majority of the students questioned was expressed by C. Walker, I U.C., who said, "Friday the thirteenth is an event of no more importance to me than Saturday the fourteenth."

M. A. MacNaughton, III Trinity, was scornful. "I definitely refuse," he stated, "to go out of my way to avoid walking under a ladder today."

Many students thought that this jinx day was the best time to laugh at Old Nick. Among these were H. E. Smith, II Arts, who said he found it lucky to walk under ladders; Margaret Verrall, III Arts, who snaps her fingers at bad luck; and Bill Young, I U.C., who said, "I always try to be third one on a match on Friday the thirteenth. It's such fun!"

There were those, however, who said that they were worried about today. Carry MacPherson, II S.P.S., doesn't carry his watch today, and Ruth Perry, III Arts, doesn't walk under ladders. W. H. Jackson and G. Brown said that Jinx Day was a good time to forget about studies.

Bill Glendinning, I U.C., said, "Friday the thirteenth comes so seldom that I don't worry about it." The reporter noticed, however, that the gentleman had his fingers crossed.

PROFESSOR WALTER
FAVORS FRENCH STANO
ON SECURITY ISSUE

Under three main aspects, namely, the relationship of France to the League, to Great Britain, and to Italy, Professor Felix Walter discussed "France and the present crisis," at a League of Nations Society luncheon yesterday.

"France has always considered the League as a weapon to prolong a period of security," stated Professor Walter. He does not blame France for this attitude, and admires her for the open way she admits it. "If many other countries had followed the example of France in sending only her best men to Geneva, many a crisis would have been averted," he said.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL
OBJECT OF ATTACK
AT FINAL SESSION

Would-be Assassin Curbed in Time as Politics Rouses Ire

GOVERNMENT OEFEEATED.

An unsuccessful attempt to assassinate His Excellency the Governor-General marred the final session and prorogation of the U.C. Parliament in the Junior Common Room yesterday. His Excellency had just finished his proroguing speech when the assassin, posing as a member of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition, sprang forward with levelled pistol. Only quick action on the part of the Royal bodyguard, who seized the culprit and led him from the room, prevented a fatality.

The attempt on the Governor-General's life came at the end of a particularly heated session in which the Government was defeated by a vote of 34-26 in its motion "That this house is opposed to the establishment of joint common rooms in University College". A lack of confidence motion, suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, just failed to receive attention because of the expiration of the time-limit, and angry murmurings were heard from the members throughout the reading of the proroguing speech by His Excellency.

Premier Shortt opened the debate of the afternoon, claiming that as women were Realists and men Idealists, the admission of women into the common rooms would not be productive of the enlightened conversation at present in vogue there. Their presence would substitute an Age of Passion for an Age of Reason, he claimed.

The Leader of the Opposition, Mr. McCaun, continued the discussion, refuting the arguments of the premier, and suggesting that the presence of women in the common rooms would (Continued on Page 6)

Close Competition a Feature of First Game of Semi-Finals

Jr. Meds gained the upper hand in the first of a 2 out of 3 semi-final play-off when they defeated St. Mike's 15-13, 16-14 in two very close volleyball games last night in the upper gym.

The first game was played cautiously and the winner was in doubt until the end. The young doctors had the edge in setting-up and this with Cash's consistent spiking, finally caused the defeat of the Irish 15-13.

Jr. Meds rushed into a 12-5 lead over the faltering Irishmen in the second game. Time after time the medicals hit the rafters or lights to lose the serve without scoring. Slowly but surely the Gaels drew closer, finally tying the score at 14-11. After a series of exciting service exchanges the doctors clinched the game with a two-point rally to win 16-14.

Jr. Meds worked in unity most of the time but the fighting Irish kept the issue always in doubt. Cash, ably assisted by Emmett and Wise, spiced well for Jr. Meds and Powers' service aided materially. For St. Mike's Biskey made almost impossible saves while Hogan and Noble stood out in the spiking department.

Jr. Meds: Wise, Gates, Cash, Kyle, Floren, Green, Emmett. St. Mike's: Biskey, Egan, Kavanagh, Dougherty, Hartford, Hogan, Marling, Powers, Noble.

Mediocre Encounter With Elis
Sees Varsity Winners by 7-3

Warden's Dinner

Members of Hart House who are eligible and wish to attend the Warden's Christmas dinner are asked to sign the list in the Warden's office as soon as possible.

Captain McClelland Leads Blue Attack with Two Goals and Two Assists

FIRST WIN FOR VARSITY

The long sweeping Varsity pokes checks parried the Yale Bulldogs' hockey challenge last night when a smooth skating University of Toronto sextet skated off the Varsity Arena ice surface with a 7-3 victory. The Blue and White's first triumph came after two periods of hockey which saw both squads entangled in the meshes of an even count until a brilliant Blue salient burst forth upon the Eli hockeyists in a third period scoring spurge of five goals which left Holcomb York's men stranded.

Outstanding in the Varsity win was "Romeo" Valiquette, who duplicated his great playing of last season, coming through with two goals, while Captain Normie McClelland netted another two and two assists. The fast moving rushes of Jeffrey played an important part in offsetting the rugged playing of the Yale squad and the work of Childs and Daniel Badger, bespectacled forwards of the Eli squad was particularly effective, with Stockhausen in the Yale goal a standout performer.

Through a close checking first period both squads tried the opposing goal guardians and Stockhausen was a bulwark of strength in repelling the Varsity attacks. McElquham and McClelland pierced the hard hitting defence pair of Wilson and Shepard, but the Yale goal custodian was on his toes. Time after time in the second session McClelland led the Blue forays until after six minutes of play Jeffrey began the scoring, but Yale came back strong (Continued on Page 5)

WATERPOLO FINAL
TOMORROW NIGHT

McGill Redmen Carry Six-Point Lead into Deciding Contest

DANCING AFTER GAME

Varsity's blue-capped waterpoloists encounter the splash-batters from McGill in Hart House pool tomorrow night in the second game of the series for the intercollegiate title and the Hershorn Cup.

The Redmen carry a six-point lead by virtue of their 9-3 win over Varsity in the K.C. pool at Montreal last Saturday, but this cannot be taken as an indication of a McGill victory tomorrow night since the home team usually have a big advantage in waterpolo. It is not likely, however, that the Blues will be able to catch up with that six-goal lead the Redcaps hold.

The McGill team carry the same line-up that has won them the Hershorn trophy for the last two years, with the addition of Munroe Bourne, a former Olympic swimmer, and their victory over the Blues does not indicate a weakness in the Varsity team who held last year's Dominion champions, Broadview Y, to a 4-2 score last Tuesday. A week ago, they held them to a 4-4 tie.

Curly Stratton scored all of Varsity's three goals in Montreal last week and may be counted on for three more tomorrow night. Fisher is another merman who may be expected to score. He has a hard, accurate shot and is liable to throw a goal from anywhere (Continued on Page 5)

JUNIOR ASSAULT
WON BY SCHOOL

Chalk Up Victories in Four Boxing and Five Mat Finals

VIC AND O.C.E. TRAIL

S.P.S. won the junior interfaculty assault, which was finally completed yesterday afternoon, by a wide margin, scoring victories in four of the six boxing bouts and winning five decisions out of a possible seven in the wrestling contests. Meds came next in line with one victory in each division. Vic won a final boxing bout and O.C.E. earned the honours in one wrestling match.

Graham of S.P.S. won the decision over Cryderman of Vic in the 145 lb. boxing after a fast, clever bout that saw both boys give everything they had. Cryderman took the lead in the first round but Graham let loose a heavy leather barrage in the second and carried the fight in the third with a neat display of miltwork.

Kemp of Vic won the 135 lb. struggle without undue effort. His opponent, Knox, put up a game battle but lacked sufficient experience to cope with his jabbing lefts and jolting rights.

In the 155 lb. fight, Woods came out swinging both hands and battered Bolter all over the ring until he wearied and then Bolter returned it with interest. The second round was very even and so was the third until Bolter weakened, and Woods won the decision.

The heavyweight bout was a slow affair with the decision going to Kintlin, who outwitted his rival McGoey by about 30 lbs., the latter being only a light-heavy. Moriarty won the 125 lb. title from Sullivan after a fast scrap that had both boys waiting for the final gong.

Watt defeated Parker in the 165 lb. wrestling, in the only final to be fought yesterday afternoon.

The fencing competition has not yet been completed.

Results were as follows:

BOXING

125 lbs.—Moriarty, S.P.S., def. Sullivan.

135 lbs.—Kemp, Vic, def. Knox.

145 lbs.—Graham, S.P.S., def. Cryderman.

ECONOMIC IMPORTANCE OF ANTARCTIC OCEAN
STRESSED BY TAYLOR

The Antarctic Ocean is of great importance economically because of the fact that it is the greatest whale-field in the world, stated Professor Griffith Taylor. The new professor was in the Antarctic with Scott, and spoke of his experiences there to the Mathematics and Physics Society yesterday.

The professor of geography described many of the wonders of the Antarctic. The average temperature of the hottest month in the year is 12 degrees above zero. There are icebergs forty miles long and whales ninety feet long.

Doubtful Decency

The suspension of one of the University's foremost hockey players, Jimmie MacPherson, by the coach, brings us to the question as to what part athletics should play in the University Curriculum. The player in question is the leading point scorer on the Varsity team. He is the only man on the club who has his name listed among the high scorers in the O.H.A., where the Blue team has been operating during the current season. Yet his efforts have evoked the condemnation of the coach.

The team is, of course, far down in the group. There may be some psychology to suspending a player. It may put more fight into the team. Then again it may not. Sooner or later everyone concerned is going to realize that the opposition in the O.H.A., which is nothing more than a group of professionals, who are being kept in sight by the big interests, is too strong for such teams as the University of Toronto. And when a team is outclassed, one can scarcely blame their failure on the individual players.

That the player in question has given his best is apparent to all who have witnessed him play. The time and effort spent playing for the Blue team has been very costly. Few people can afford to miss the opportunity to earn money while at college. MacPherson had had to continually refuse refereeing jobs owing to the amount of time spent on hockey around the University. This would hardly be the actions of one who wasn't ready to give his best. In this regard he needs no defense. The stories are legion which exemplify his patriotism to the University.

The coach, of course, should know who he does and does not want on his hockey team. But in the spirit of the game as it is supposed to be played at college, does it seem fair to treat a man of MacPherson's reputation as he has been treated. Four years of senior hockey, one as captain; graduating from O.C.E. where his hockey ability would serve him well as a teacher, known for years as the "gentleman of hockey", that is his situation. And in the middle of his last year at college he is cut loose from the team. To us it does not look like the treatment in keeping with the spirit which is supposed to govern University sports.

What To Do?

The great class of "non-career" men who graduate this year will be somewhat heartened by a report from Princeton published in last Sunday's New York Times. Questionnaires circulated among the 517 of the class of '36 yielded 481 answers and the information that 276, or over 57 per cent, have not yet decided on their occupation after receiving their diplomas.

But that's not all. Of the remaining 205 who have made a decision, 100 do not feel quite fully armed for the competitive struggle of the bleak economic world, and will shelter themselves behind cloistered walls for yet another year, in post-graduate work. In the 105 left, 47 fortunes have found their business niches already, and from usual experience at Princeton these will be mainly wealthy men's sons whose feet are to be groomed for the future filling of Dad's shoes. This leaves but 58, just over 12 per cent of those who answered, who will hardly face the world next year in search of remunerative occupation in a field chosen beforehand. And again, the usual situation of Princeton men suggests that many of this last group will be amply maintained from independent resources until they find their openings.

We feel that this information is timely, because many are in their graduating year, when asked "And what are you going into, my little man?" reply with a tinge of embarrassment not unmixed with apprehension, "I'm not just sure", which is to say, being translated, "I'll take anything that comes along, from ten dollars a week up."

This reaction, of course, is a function of our background. Our formative period was spent in a rosy time when the proper thing for young people to do was prepare themselves for a career—one career—and a young man preparing himself for a career in executive business did not normally expect to waste four or five of the most valuable years of his life washing dishes, working in road camps or wearing out sidewalks. He was not unreasonable. He expected to start on the ground floor and ascend from there. But why should we of the great undecided generation hang our heads when the grads of lordly Princeton, that hotbed and breeding ground of American plutocracy, realize that they must start, not on the ground floor, but in the sub-basement—and that the elevator's out of order?

Literary Outlet

The enthusiastic response to the call for copy for the Literary Issue of The Varsity, indicates a definite and desirable interest, by the student body, in writing in its varied forms. True, the promise of prizes, small though they are, to the writer of every article which was published, may be the incentive which turned many students toward literary endeavour. If such is the case, it is our regret that we have not sufficient means to make such offers continually. But it is quite possible that a large number of students on the campus would be quite willing and anxious to have their efforts published without the mercenary incentive. If such is the case, and the quality of the contributions sufficiently good, we would be willing to have a literary page at regular intervals.

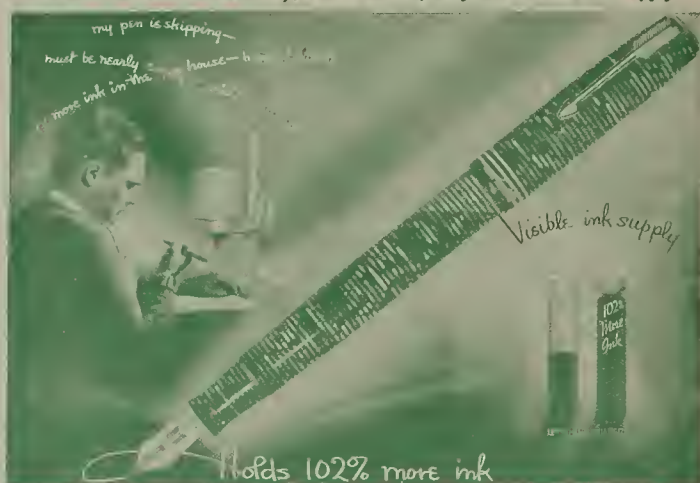

One of the things which was noticeable about the contributions was the predominance of poetic copy. We must admit, however, that the quality of the verses left considerable to be desired, but the only manner in which advance can be made in this field is by experience. And few people would be interested enough in poetry to go on writing indefinitely for pleasure. It would be of great advantage to the entire University if arrangements could be made whereby would-be poets could have their work criticized and their efforts published.

We are very grateful to the students who contributed stories for the various competitions. It is regrettable that the humorous prose copy failed to come up to the standard of the serious stories, but we felt it was only fair to judge the humour section on the standard of the serious. In view of superiority of the serious prose, it seems fitting that the writers should be rewarded. We will, of course, in the near future hear suggestions about raising the standard of quality of the content of the literary issue, but we are "thankful for small favours".

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Eaton Auditorium

Lauritz Melchior's recital last evening at Eaton Auditorium was a magnificent display of power and tonal purity. In four groups of widely differing and lesser known songs, the tenor exhibited to a large and receptive audience all the heroic vocal qualities for which critics here and on the continent have lauded him.

His first group, Scandinavian songs, showed perhaps the greatest variety in mood, ranging from the purely lyrical to the dramatic; the first number, Erik's Aria from the opera Frede, was a triumph of vocal eloquence; the poetic En Stange of Grieg was sung with sympathy and restraint.

The German and English groups were particularly fine examples of Melchior's tonal power, and his ability to change from the glorious full top notes to the muted low notes, in one brief second; such perfect mastery of such a powerful voice is nothing short of

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

Since this will be the last column written this year, we think this a good opportunity to sum up what has already happened in women's sports. A new high was made at the beginning of this term when the intercollegiate tennis team won the championship up in London, and brought it to Varsity for the first time since 1932.

The interfaculty championships have not been monopolized by one college. Vic took the tennis title very easily, and three Vic girls won places on the intercollegiate team. In the golf tournament sponsored by U.C., the prizes were won by girls from all colleges. This tournament aroused real interest among the girls in the University, and we hope that it will become a custom to have such an event every autumn.

In basketball, St. Hilda's Seniors won the interfaculty title for the third successive year, when they defeated Vic Seniors in the finals in Hart House. From observation of all the interfaculty teams, we think that there is enough good material around to give Varsity two strong intercollegiate teams, and to bring the Bronze Baby back to roost in Toronto.

Looking ahead, next term there will be the interfaculty hockey games and badminton tournament, and the intercollegiate basketball games. The swimming meet will probably be held in March this year as usual. So don't forget to keep in condition, and come back prepared to do big things, and may you have a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George C. Vair

Being the final issue of The Varsity for 1935 we, on behalf of the sports staff, wish our readers a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Between now and the time we burst into print again sport will carry on just the same. The first game of the lacrosse finals will be seen at Hart House this afternoon while Saturday will see the spotlight on the swimming pool when McGill waterpolo team take on the Varsity quintet.

Following the Yale-Varsity game last night we had an interesting chat with Mr. Holcomb York, coach of the Elis, in which he pointed out the American theory of hockey as adopted at Yale. Due to the superior skating abilities of Canadian hockey players Mr. York stated that the Americans were forced to counteract speed by strategy and have thus resorted to a zone system of checking. Worked out the metrically it is similar to the zone system used in American basketball. The centre man is the only man to use a poke check and break up opposing rushes, while the wingmen cover their opponents.

The main defect of the system seems to appear when the team is a man short and they are forced to defensive methods. The Elis certainly forget to cover their zones for the Blues banged in four goals when they had a man advantage.

Something rather new in sport circles was seen when three of the Elis appeared wearing glasses. On inquiry we learned that they were made of unbreakable, shatterproof glass so the visitors were taking no chances.

Ross Workman's crew of ice makers must have had a busy afternoon putting a large Union Jack and Stars and Stripes under the ice surface. The University of Toronto and Yale crews were also "under ice" behind the respective blindlines. It lent a real touch of international colour to what is fast becoming an annual event and Mr. Workman is to be commended on his foresight.

JIMMY MACPHERSON

Last year's captain of the senior hockey crew and a veteran of four years' experience who has proven to be one of the cleanest and hardest playing hockey stars ever to don a Blue uniform. His services were dispensed with at the request of "Ace" Bailey, leaving a gaping hole in the Varsity line-up.

to punch home two counters from the sticks of Badger and Cooke, and as the period closed, Valiquette took a smart pass from McClelland, beating Stockhausen.

A clever combination play within fifteen seconds in the final period started York's charges down to a barrage of attacks under the pressure of which they wilted and Varsity came through with flying colours, netting five goals.

Normie McClelland, Valiquette, Lindsay and Driscoll made their shots count while the bespectacled Childs tricked the Varsity defence in a headlong drive which resulted in the last Yale score.

The final gong found both squads with the same result of 7-3, with the Blues repeating a great victory.

remarkable. One of the most effective numbers in the entire program was the German encore, a Mimelied sung to the accompaniment of organ and violin. For richness of tone, for lyric sweetness, this song was outstanding.

However, all the full greatness of the famous Melchior voice was displayed in his Wagnerian group. Here the singer is in his element; here he rises to lofty heights in his superb diction, his masterful shading of tone, and his projection of personality in musical phrase. The Graherzahlung from Lohengrin was the ultimate expression of his artistry.

If there is a flaw in Melchior's voice, it is that the enormous volume of tone seems to leave little room for that warmth and liquidity which make one call a singer's voice "golden". There is, however, a power and roundness of tone which make it deeply moving and awesome. Melchior has that happy combination of genial personality and genuine artistry which render him the master of his audience. F.S.

make the men act more like gentlemen than is now the case. It would also provide a place in which men and women could meet and get acquainted, thus making unnecessary that insidious and barbaric institution, the Date Bureau.

From then on the debate was heated, with each speaker having to submit to frequent interruptions. The Honorable Mr. Miller claimed that the presence of females with their superior talking abilities would relegate mere males to the position of yes-men. To this, the Honorable Mr. Cole pointed out that separate common rooms would still exist, and if the going got too hot, the men could retire to their own sanctuaries.

The Honorable Mr. Shapiro threw the meeting into an uproar when he suggested that the whole thing was part of a base plot on the part of the women to get greater privileges, and that soon they would be invading Hart House itself. "The common rooms," he said, "are common enough without turning them into joints."

The Honorable Mr. Molinano defended the idea, saying that it would result in more marriages, more births, and thus would provide a solution of our railway problem, and would result in the consumption of our surplus wheat.

First Prize, Short Sports Story—

By Ken Burn

After the game we all trooped over to the nearest one-arm lunch and sat over our coffee for a couple of hours, discussing the whys and wherefores or, more often, telling what we'd have done in such and such a case. Most of us were so rusty by now that if we'd even tried to put on skates the squeaks coming from our joints would sound like a parade of 1914 flivvers. That didn't dampen our criticism, however, and the panhandler who was trying to squeeze some heat out of the rad behind us must have thought we were the Leafs themselves.

About one o'clock Jimmy Stokes, who folded up at the same time as the Western Canada pro league, remarked rather nastily about the two wings and the defenceman getting assists on Primeau's second goal. According to Jimmy the only way you got credited with an assist when he was playing was to tie and gag the goalkeeper. Most of the lads agreed that the scorekeepers were pretty soft-hearted now and you only had to sniff at the puck as it went by to get your name in the charmed brackets. During the conversation I could feel a slow grin breaking over my face and I couldn't resist telling the boys about my funniest experience with an assist.

During the summer of '28 MacArthur and myself had been playing semi-pro ball down in Virginia. We landed back in Toronto in September pretty flush but by the time we had paid the stable rent for a few nags and helped the government balance their budget, all we had left between us was a lone ten-spot. One morning we stepped out to be greeted by the sight of the ground covered with a white frost. As one man we returned to our room, picked up our amateur cards, and walked out again, leaving the landlady to decide whether one suitcase of rather natty summer togs was worth three weeks board.

The C.N.R. provided us with free transportation north. We hopped off at Cobalt and headed for the nearest pool room. Inside of three minutes we knew that we had chosen the right spot. All the talk was about this year's hockey team. A well-placed question netted us the information where we could find the coach. By a lucky coincidence the mentor was Larry Anderson, who had coached the Wolverines when I had played for them two years previously. Asking for a peek at our amateur cards, he said he could fix us up. He took us up to the mill and we were placed on the payroll at 45 per. Nominally we had jobs, but as we practised three afternoons a week, and on the other two we gathered in Larry's room to talk shop, and as we were not expected to report the mornings after games, I guess they figured it would be cheaper not to buy desks for us. I know the most I ever saw of the plant was the pay office.

We had a pretty good winter finishing a hang-up second to the Cubs. The rules called for a five-game play-off to decide which one of us would enter the Dominion play-down. In the first game everyone was mighty cautious and turned in one of those airtight defensive affairs with everyone checking their fool heads off. In the middle of the last period Jimmy Cooley, the Cub's centre, eased through our defence and banged one home that was good enough to win the game. After a few butt-ends had been handed out in the second game the boys forgot all about their cautiousness and the game turned into a wild niclee that produced some pretty sloppy hockey but at the same time had the fans roaring. We came out on the long end of a 5-5 score. Both teams settled down for the third game and played straight hockey. The Cubs outplayed us to win 3-1 but we reversed the procedure two nights later to even up the series. We knew that our services would no longer be required the day after we were eliminated. If we managed to get past the Cubs it might mean six weeks extra hockey, so this last game loomed up as being mighty important.

The game was scheduled in our home rink and it was certainly no Maple Leaf Gardens. About all that could be said for it was that it stopped the forty-mile-an-hour gale that brought back fond memories of the previous summer. The rafters were only about twenty feet above the ice. Some of the more daring youngsters had been known to climb up on them and, protected by a cloud of smoke and the glare of the lights, enjoy a bird's eye view of the game.

It was a money game and we certainly played it as one. I think each team averaged four shots on goal during each of the regulation periods and although most of these shots had as much zip as a spinster of 92, the net-minders handled them as if they were as dangerous as a platinum blonde. We kept up the same pace during the overtime and at the end of the second session it looked as if the fans would go straight from the game to work. As I came into the dressing room I noticed Shorty Leroy, our mascot, clattering by my favourite corner. I moved him by simply grabbing the slack of his pants and hoisting. While he was dangling in mid-air I got the inspiration. After five minutes haranguing I finally got it through his skull what I wanted. He said he understood and left the dressing room on the fly.

The third extra session started at the same pace and it wasn't until half way through that we got a break. MacArthur was coasting down the boards and as the Cubs' right wing picked him up and started to fade back with him, Mac folded into a flip and crashed into the boards. The lighting was pretty poor and the ref. called a Eureka!

By Robert Allen

Of course, I realize that women have a biological function to perform in the world. They are also useful in the preparation of meals and in the general care of a home. But in my limited sphere of activities, I have never found them of much use. Indeed, most of them seemed needless hindrances to me.

Such was my opinion until quite recently. I have had occasion (oh, what occasion!) to alter it.

In my capacity as student of the languages and customs of classical antiquity, and also as a recently appointed lecturer in this subject at the University, I have not known many of the female of the species. There has always been a woman who cleans up, and a landlady who demands money, to both of whom I raise my hat and speak politely. Occasionally there have been girl students in my course, whom I found rather quiet, mousey persons, and to whom I have never had opportunity nor desire to speak on other than academic topics. You will perceive, therefore, that my life has been comparatively free from this blight of mankind.

"Blight" is a word which I shall never again employ. I have discovered that women are, to say the least, interesting; to say the most, indispensable. (Your Latin is bad for your English spelling!)

But let us proceed, as I have so often told my classes, in an orderly manner.

Firstly, at the beginning of term, I surveyed the new arrivals (I have charge of the first year students), found them of average appearance, and surmised them to be of mediocre intelligence. At the third lecture there was a new-comer—a young lady of comely features, whose fresh and colorful appearance provided a rather disturbing break in the monotonous row of sour faces confronting me.

I was surprised to find this person remaining after class, evidently to consult me. I raised my eyebrows and regarded her steadily.

She explained that she had only just decided to indulge in the study of my subject, that she found it fascinating but extremely difficult, and that she was counting on my assistance. While she spoke, I studied her. Her voice was well modulated, her grammar and sentence formation above reproach, her poise and gestures in good taste. Indeed, she was promising material. I assured her that I should do my utmost to assist her in her studies. I began by assigning twenty lines of Virgil.

As we left the room, I noticed a crowd of sophomores lounging about the corridor. They pounced upon the young lady immediately and ushered her off, whispering eager questions. I suspected nothing; accustomed to foolish behaviour on the part of childish students, I dismissed the event from my mind.

The next hour she reappeared with the exercise completed (very well done, in fact, I should have guessed that it could not have been her work alone), and with several pertinent and searching questions—questions which I found sufficiently meaty to spend half an hour chewing on them.

This performance was repeated consistently, until I became more and more interested in the after-lecture discussion with her, and actually looked forward to it with pleasurable anticipation.

Came a stage where there was not enough time in the morning to discourse upon the mutually interesting topics which her reading unearthed. I suggested she have tea in my study that afternoon, any afternoon, every afternoon.

Two weeks later I asked her to sup with me at a quiet restaurant where we could talk indefinitely.

The next week I invited her to accompany me to a convocation in commemoration of the anniversary of—of—Why, I have actually forgotten! Evidently the events of that evening have driven all recollection of the meeting from my mind.

I am only conscious of having been in a highly nervous state. For many weeks now I had been seeing a great deal of Dorothea—more than of any other woman in my life. I had begun by finding her questions interesting; I had reached a point where I found her self fascinating. While her intellect still amazed me, I was growing more concerned with her person—the white gold of her hair, the sapphire of her eyes, the cherry of her lips; in short, her absolute animal perfection.

(I have reason to believe that her

Goldfish

By Hal Taylor

Definition and Explanation.

The goldfish is a small marine animal looking very much like Eddie Cantor, which is found in bowls from which it very seldom emerges unless propelled through the air by some drunken fellow who then drinks the water or mixes a few old fashioned ones and pours it down his lady's neck. The goldfish has adopted the bowl for its habitat because of the limitations of ordinary bodies of water, such as lakes, etc., where it can only swim around, and where the nice view afforded by the bowl is entirely cut off. Some fish prefer the de luxe model bowl, which has the added attraction of peculiar archways and weeds through which the fish may glide gently, and by the vacant look in his glassy eye, indicate that he is wondering in hell they are for.

Feeding and Care of the Goldfish.

The goldfish (or poisson d'or) eats only goldfish food which is found beside the bowl and is invariably labelled "Goldfish Food". This marine animal eats only sparingly and on very few occasions, since it is very seldom that there is anyone with sufficient presence of mind to remember the days on which it is fed. Some fish have been known to live a week at a time with no food or water (except what is in the bowl), and since it is very unlikely that a fish will live any longer than a week even if it is fed, it is often found highly impracticable to feed it anything but water anyway.

Activity and Habits of the Fish.

The usual way for the fish to spend his time is to swim around the bowl with nose pressed to the glass, or if he has archways, to swim under them. There have been frequent quarrels in scientific circles as to what the goldfish does at night, whether it swims all night or sleeps on the bottom of the bowl. Experiments personally conducted by the author would tend to verify the former hypothesis. By waking up in the middle of the night, say on a Tuesday, sneaking over to the goldfish bowl and quick like a weasel turning on the lights, it has been possible to collect considerable data. In the first experiment it was discovered that there were no goldfish in the bowl because it wasn't the right bowl or the

The customary stolidity of his mother was not proof against this attack upon her favorite. The small eyes in her huge face gleamed. "Don't you so sayin' nothin' 'bout Robbie—you good-for-nothin'—you all don't know a sick man when you look at one." She waddled to the shelf, selected a gallon jar. "Blackberries," she said. "Canned 'em myself!" A dusty purple jar—badly fermented. I left with it under my arm, negotiating the muddy lane with the "Houn' dog", friendly almost to cravenness, jostling his thin frame against my knees. . . .

Several weeks later, one sunny afternoon, we decided to go to the hills for eggs again. The trees, with their hanging wild grape vines, the deep green of the undergrowth, and the bare line of the rock where the road had been cut away, exposed the true barrenness of the soil, which from the dense foliage of wild plants would seem to be teeming with life and gain. Every now and again a rider would pass, on horseback, a negro with a mule, or children on foot coming from school. Despite this homely traffic the road was lovely. Each passing horse left only a cloud of dust, the mules blended bleakly with the roadside, gray and brown, and the children, half wild, half friendly, belonged more to the woods than to the road upon which they were tramping.

row had stretched into several and still he was without a job. Helen was never without a word of encouragement for him though, and just so long as he had her to help him he'd never stop trying. He'd been up to her house almost every night since they had gone to the country club dance together. He supposed that was why everyone expected them to be married before he went away again.

He liked, when they sat in the porch swing together, to watch the dancing shadows that the leaves threw on her face. To feel her near him was what Heaven must be like, he guessed. Her lips met his willingly and when he kissed her he felt just that much more certain that he loved her. He supposed that she would marry him now if he asked her, but . . . with no job . . . and his inability to find one . . . he was beginning to become bitter about it, but he couldn't help himself. Maybe it would be better if he and Helen did run away and get married now. Why not? They never knew what might come with tomorrow . . . who knew it might be his lucky day. At least they would be free and they wouldn't hear what people said about them because they would be far away. And he could go to see Joe . . . Joe was about the only classmate that he hadn't as yet asked for help. Joe would find him a job when he found out that he was married. And the town where Joe lived was far away, too. Even if he didn't get a job right away, what little money they had saved up would tide them over until he did find one. He could persuade Helen easily enough . . . the midnight train . . . they could buy their tickets on board and no one would be able to find out where they had gone until they were safe. Why should they wait? Tonight they were young and tomorrow they could begin a new life. Joe would come through with a job though . . . he'd simply have to so why worry . . . why wait?

This hotel wasn't much but it was the best that they could afford. A honeymoon could prove to be expensive if they weren't careful. And it simply must not be expensive. Helen's smile was comforting though . . . it was nice to know that she trusted him . . . and that she would stick by him. This wasn't much of a banquet for a wedding night, was it? It would do though . . . it would have to . . . but they'd really celebrate when he went to work again. She didn't seem to mind the absence of luxury though. And how she had scoffed at the idea that he might not be able to get a job even from Joe.

"What of it?" she had said. "There's always tomorrow and that's where things are the brightest." Didn't every banquet have somebody make a toast at it? From some place in his memory came a thought that would serve now as a toast at their wedding banquet. And coffee . . . not very good coffee, either . . . would serve as champagne. So with a queer mixture of sorrow and happiness in his heart he grinned at his wife and from his lips came their toast . . . "Eat . . . drink . . . and be merry . . . for tomorrow . . . for tomorrow we can go on relief."

trip, giving the Cub wingman the finger. With a man advantage we were able to unlimber a little. Our attack was split up and the Cubs shot the puck down the ice. I came back for it fast and started back again, flanked by my two wings. At their defence I faked a pass to Mac, shifted to the right, and slipped through two surprised defencemen. I hadn't come through cleanly, however, and was off balance when I took my shot. It wasn't a good shot but it didn't have to be, for the Cubs' goalie was folded in a terrific sneeze. The puck floated into a hole a mile wide and the roar the Cubah crowd let out could be heard in North Bay. That was the end of the game as far as we were concerned. For the next five minutes we sat back and set up a defence that the British Navy couldn't have gotten through.

The lads in the dressing room sat around in a dazed silence as I went over to my locker, fished out a five-spot and gave it to Shorty. "What about the expenses?" he enquired, cheekily. "What expenses?" "The pepper cost a nickel." I paid him.

feelings, too, were altering. She was becoming more attentive to me than to my work. But I have never been proficient in the analysis of women's emotions.)

That night I sat and devoured her face. Not a word of the address did I hear. I was absorbed in her.

Leaving the auditorium, I took her arm to help her down the slippery steps. Its vibrant warmth was thrilling; I retained my hold upon it. As we mounted the far curb, she stumbled slightly. The pressure of her slim body against mine was intoxicating.

Just as we rounded the corner of the Old College, the moon slipped gently from behind a cloud screen and bathed us in a white light. Dorothea paused, her head raised, her eyes sparkling, her lips parted involuntarily at the sudden beauty. She was more beautiful than a thousand moons.

"It's lovely," she murmured in a distant, enchanted voice.

"Dorothea!" I gasped, amazed to find my throat choked, my heart pounding, my veins throbbing.

She was like a goddess, standing there so invitingly.

I kissed her.

Her body tightened, then relaxed; her mouth was hard, then luxuriously soft; her arms pushed, then pulled me close. Time ceased. I floated on a gentle sea of blackness, aware only of a burning flame which coursed in both our bodies. Space was non-existent.

Eventually our minds returned to reality, our feet touched ground, our lips separated. We both were breathless with emotion and excitement. We smiled, we laughed hysterically, we practically danced homeward.

On the way, she confessed the whole plot. She revealed the scheme conceived by some sophomores eager to ridicule me, whom they thought physically dominant. She recounted how they had proposed that she attract my attention, make herself pleasing to me, lure me on, and then humiliate me. She had long forgotten the details, for she had renounced the conspirators and changed her plans. She had hunted in earnest, not in jest.

I forgave her everything. I forgave even the sophomores, for they knew not what they did. I really should have thanked them; they opened my eyes, set my heart beating and my blood flowing, brought me life.

They gave me love!

As stated before, my opinion regarding women has changed. No longer do they merely prepare meals, care for a home, or procreate the race. They are now a guiding light, a priceless jewel, a fount of inspiration. They are indispensable.

I really must write an ode on the subject.

GOLDFISH

right room. At another time, there were goldfish but no water so it wasn't really a fair test. Subsequent experiments failed because the author did not wake up, and thus did not know whether there was any water or any goldfish or even any bowl. Another of the better known habits of the poison d/or (this fish should not be confused with the screen d/or or back d/or which are altogether different things), is its persistence in falling out of the bowl when its water is being changed. This peculiarity may be explained alternately by the law of gravity or the law of sheer perversity, depending on what mood one is in.

Reproduction and Origin of Schools of Fish.

All the available data on this important question would tend to point to the fact that the goldfish does not reproduce. Having kept one fish in a bowl for almost two weeks now, it must be recorded that no blessed events or interesting conditions have as yet occurred. Several theories have been suggested to account for this striking deviation from normal biological behaviour, among them the thesis that the author's fish is not a lady fish, but a male who is, therefore, interested only in maintaining his status quo as a good lively goldfish. There is a wealth of scientific evidence to support the fact that the goldfish leads a very moral life and will have nothing to do with the reproductive vices and devices of other fish, very much as that rare fish, the virgin sturgeon, whose purity has been celebrated in those immortal lines, A very rare fish is the virgin sturgeon.

The Virgin Sturgeon is a Very Rare Fish.

As we go through life we should encourage the growth and continued existence of a fish which has not the usual advantages of its brother species, and by its high moral standards is compelled to resort to hopes that maybe the stork will start bringing goldfish with its ordinary load.

Chief of Police Draper's disciplinary measures are today being blamed for laxity on the Toronto force. Citation of P.C. McMurdie's "leave cancellation" evoked open laughter in court yesterday afternoon. Counsel Newton is giving departmental records a thorough going-over.

Varsity's Quick Lunch Laddies Say Tuck Shop is Now Dunker's Paradise

FILLS LONG FELT NEED

Hot coffee has at last been added to the list of beverages dispensed at the Hart House Tuck Shop, an inauguration ranking in importance with the opening of the famous Sausage Bar in the Little Theatre. The laddies who bring their lunch each day, hail the idea with delight, and the quantity of coffee served had gone up each day since January 6th.

Last November, the Hall Committee of Hart House appointed a sub-committee to consider the question, in response to many requests from students who are regular patrons of the Tuck Shop. There seemed little need for the hot beverage during the fall season, but requests have increased since the cold weather. The sub-committee reported that the plan was feasible, and the custom was inaugurated by the Hall Committee and the Board of Stewards at the beginning of the winter term.

According to the records submitted by Comptroller Gilley, while the amount of coffee used has shown a steady increase, there has been no discernible decrease in the quantity of milk and soft drinks served. This would seem to indicate that new customers are being attracted to the popular noon-hour shop.

DR. ALLAN, DEAN OF ARTS MOURNED BY COLLEAGUES

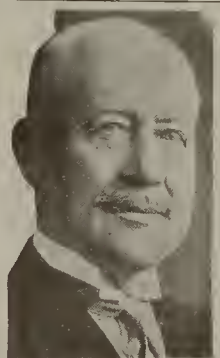

A Prominent Figure in Education and Chemical Research During Long Career

FUNERAL ON SATURDAY

Following an illness of several months, the death of Dr. Francis Barclay Allan, F.R.S.C., Dean of the Faculty of Arts in the University of Toronto, occurred at 7.30 on Thursday morning at his home on Brunswick Avenue. Dean Allan had not been able to continue his University work since last April, when he suffered an attack of coronary thrombosis, which disease later proved fatal. He was 68 years of age, and had been Dean of Arts since 1934.

Dean Allan was born in Simcoe County on November 4th, 1867, on a farm near Churchill, about 12 miles south of Barrie. He obtained his primary education in a rural school, and his secondary education in Hamilton Collegiate Institute. For some time he taught in the rural school near his home and then came to the University of Toronto. He graduated in 1893, and obtained the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy in 1901. He was appointed to the staff as fellow of chemistry in 1895, and finally became professor of organic chemistry. On July 1st, 1934, he was appointed Dean of the Faculty of Arts.

Great Diversity of Speakers at Student Volunteer Convention

TORONTO REPRESENTED

During the Christmas holidays over 2700 university students from all parts of Canada and the United States gathered in Indianapolis, Ind., for the 12th Quadrennial Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement. There were ninety-five students from the University of Toronto alone, 45 of whom were from Victoria College.

The purpose of the convention was to present to this generation of university students the world enterprise of Christianity, in relation to the changes which the world is undergoing and the problems which it is facing. By means of addresses, seminars, and informal gatherings those present were

GREAT HALL CHAIRS GIFT OF MASSEYS ARE NOW ON ORDER

Design Chosen to Harmonize with Dignity of the Great Hall

A VALUABLE GIFT

One year ago as an experiment the benches in the Great Hall were replaced by chairs. As soon as it became evident that it was likely the change would be permanent the Hall Committee began to consider the best type of chair for constant use in the Great Hall. It was clear that a chair must be chosen which at the same time would be comfortable and in keeping with the dignity of the Hall. A minimum number of 350 would be needed and it was thought advisable to increase by 6 the number of chairs at the high table. The committee realized that this change would incur considerable expense and therefore approached the Trustees of the Massey Foundation. Mr. and Mrs. Massey were sympathetic with the proposal and took great interest in the design of a suitable chair which was worked out and inspected by the Hall Committee and the Board of Stewards together with Mr. and Mrs. Massey on the day before Mr. Massey sailed for England to take over his office as High Commissioner for Canada. Several minor changes in the design were suggested including the use of Dunlopillo in the seats. Just before Christmas a cable was received in which

TUCK SHOP ENTERED CIGARETTES STOLEN

Thieves broke into the tuck shop of Hart House last Tuesday, and made away with a large quantity of merchandise, the exact amount of which cannot as yet be ascertained. The grilled gate which bars access to the counter from the corridor was shoved back after the lock had been forced, and the loot, which consisted, it is thought, mostly of cigarettes, was taken.

Authorities believe that the "job" was one executed by professional members of the light-fingered gentry, and that students were in no way implicated in this petty violation of the law.

All loans should be repaid as soon as possible, but shall mature not later than one year from the date of leaving the University or one year from the first day of June in the year of graduation, and shall bear interest after maturity at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, retroactive to the original date of the note.

George Ignatieff and Jack Graham Are Successful Candidates

BOTH IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

The University of Toronto was singularly honoured during the Christmas vacation when J. E. L. Graham of University College, and George Ignatieff of Trinity College, were chosen by the Rhodes Committee to be the two Rhodes scholars from Ontario to enter Oxford next year.

The two students were both in fourth year political science. Last year Arnold Smith, also a student in the same year and course, was awarded the scholarship at the end of his third year and with three Rhodes scholars from the graduating year in political science a precedent has been set in the history of scholastic achievement in this country. Both Graham and Ignatieff are outstanding debaters at Hart House and in the parliaments of their respective colleges.

Jack Graham comes from Weyburn, Sask., where he received his early education. He is enrolled at University College, but lives in Knox College residence.

In his first year he led the political science course of some 80 members and has followed his initial triumph with a consistently brilliant scholastic record. He was awarded the Leonard scholarship in his freshman year and last year shared the Second Alexander Mackenzie scholarship.

Graham's extra-mural activities have been varied and he has taken an active part in debating, college dramatics, and campus clubs. He is treasurer of the Knox College Undergraduate Association.

STUDENT PACIFISTS DRAW UP CAMPAIGN

Organization on National Scale and National Peace Day Urged

LEAGUE POLICY SUPPORTED

A very successful conference was held by the Student Peace Movement on the last two days of December, when delegates from all over Canada met in the Economics Building to discuss peace problems and to form a general policy of activity.

Representatives arrived from most of the colleges in Montreal, including the French Associated colleges. Two observers came from Dalhousie, and student delegates arrived from Winnipeg and Queen's. The McGill contingent included graduates from the Universities of Saskatchewan and Manitoba respectively. High schools were represented in a delegation of eight from Montreal besides some from Toronto high schools.

A resolution was passed supporting the League of Nations as long as it represented the collective peace policy of the nations. Ken Woodsworth was elected national organizer, and in this capacity he will make a national tour through the west some time during February, providing that the necessary funds can be raised.

The headquarters for the movement was established at Montreal and a central committee was set up to maintain operations there. Definite attempts were made to organize nationally, the lines of organization to be as broad as possible in accommodation to local needs either by setting up new organizations or by working through organizations already in existence.

A Bouquet For Political Scientists

Not for many years has the choice of the Rhodes Scholars for Ontario been received with such favourable reaction on the part of the students of this University.

The two students who have received this great honour are J. E. L. Graham of University College and George Ignatieff of Trinity College, both members of the political science course. This makes Oxford the richer by three political scientists from this university as Arnold Smith received the award at the end of his third year and is now studying law at the English educational Mecca.

Both of the Rhodes scholars chosen for this year have distinguished themselves by participating in the many campus activities. Mr. Graham is one of our best actors as well as being a very brilliant debater. During his entire career at the University he has maintained an enviable scholastic standing in a class of first-rate students.

George Ignatieff has equally distinguished himself in various phases of campus life and his executive ability has been particularly demonstrated by his administration of various societies at Trinity College.

He is also an eloquent debater and a talented actor. It might be noted that the Rhodes scholars for this year are debaters and take great interest in dramatic art.

The political science department is to be congratulated for drawing to the department and training so adequately students of such high character and personality.

University College is also to be congratulated for having one of its members win a Rhodes Scholarship for the last three consecutive years. Gordon Skilling, Arnold Smith and Jack Graham will be the U.C. triumvirate at Christ Church College, Oxford.

The Varsity takes this opportunity to wish our two scholarly and personable friends success in the future equal to their achievements in the past, so that honour may be brought to themselves and to our University with all its tradition.

A Difference Of Degree

An unusual situation has arisen in Halifax where William C. Fritz and J. Edward Hudson, brokers, hailed into court on a charge of conspiracy in connection with the operation of Nova Scotia Securities Ltd., found themselves facing a second charge—that of keeping a common gaming house. The charge was brought against them by Crown Prosecutor R. M. Fielding.

The Halifax authorities in this case evidently refuse to recognize an essential difference in the manner in which you bet money, whether it is on the stock market or otherwise. Making money on the stock market has always been a gamble. Making money at the race track has also always been a gamble. But for some reason there seems to be some difference in the quality of the gambling.

After all there does seem to be very little difference between betting your laundry money on the card you may draw next or the stock which will be next to go up. We are not advocating making dabbles in the stock market a penal offense, but if it is highly virtuous, what is so offensive about African golf and poker?

Revitalized Religion Urged at Congress

(Submitted)

Some one hundred Toronto students have returned from the recent Student Volunteer Movement Convention held at Indianapolis with a new vision of God and society's relation to God. The outstanding speaker was Dr. William Temple, Archbishop of York, and throughout his addresses, as in the whole convention, the emphasis was on the necessity for a positive, living, creative faith. Humanism and scientific materialism have not only drawn many from the ranks of the religions, but have tended to colour and distort the thinking of those who still see the reality of religion. The Church's great modern enemy is secularism. The Church cannot cope with this enemy by making itself more secular. The Church's business is to teach mankind about God, and to increase mankind's fellowship with God, with all that this implies in the realm of his social relationships. Too often we are afraid of our concept of God, slightly ashamed in the presence of the sophisticated sceptic.

The reality of God is the fundamental element in religion which is most questioned today: not the particular nature of God, but his objective reality. The answer to the queries of the modern scientist is not to water down God by making him equivalent to the "growing good", or "progressive integration", or some such thing created in the imagination of man (yet how many of us do this in the attempt to make God fit us), but to reassert the revelation of God in Jesus, with all it implies.

And what does it imply? It implies that the power upon which the world depends is also the source of the moral inspiration of man and his sense of duty. God is active in the world and in history not only as a pervading principle but as personally living and at work, and capable of taking individual action. Fellowship with God is the highest aim of man. Our sin is that we trust in ourselves, and not in God: that we are self-centred, and not God-centred. How many of us pray in order that our conduct may be right; and how few of us realize how unimportant (in itself) our conduct is, and how important is that fellowship in prayer with God. If the gospel is true, our life must be lived to the glory of God, with the prayer that "I would be to the eternal goodness what a man's right hand is to a man".

The paradox follows swiftly, that our righteousness is as filthy rags. The righteousness of God is complete only in love, and love in its completion is for us impossible. In our pride we even commit the sin of congratulating ourselves on our realization of our unrighteousness—God forgive us, as only he can. For the answer comes in the forgiveness of God and in His love. That is the divine constraint of the Christian to spread the gospel: how dare we rejoice in the love of God, when it is longing for an answer from those to whom we might declare it, and do not?

Dictatorships Shun Publicity

Democratic countries in general, during the depression years, have become increasingly large consumers of newsprint, the paper upon which newspapers are printed.

Nations now under dictatorships, on the other hand, have fallen to new lows in per capita consumption of these materials.

England, which in 1927 used 844,000 tons of newsprint, used 1,291,000 tons in 1934.

Consumption in the United States (where advertising volume affects consumption so importantly) touched a high of 3,775,810 tons in 1929, to fall away, for reasons other than government regulation or suppression to 2,680,619 in 1934.

Total consumption in France rose from 235,000 tons in 1927 to 400,000 in 1934. Other "free press" countries showed corresponding increases.

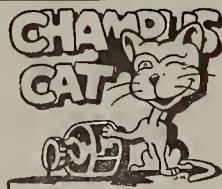

England leads the world in per capita consumption of newsprint with 57.5 pounds. The United States is close behind Britain and the next in order are Australia and New Zealand in third place.

But in Germany, whose high percentage of literacy has long been a national pride, the per capita newsprint consumption is 11.6 pounds. In Italy, mother of the arts and sharer with Germany of the early glories of printing, the consumption is 3.6 pounds.

In Russia, where universal compulsory education begins at 4 years, the consumption is 2.4 pounds.

It would be a remarkable reversal of national characteristics which would suddenly plunge those countries into disinterest in the news of the world or of their own lands.

Dictatorship cannot stand the light of publicity, the bulwark of successful democratic institutions.

More for The Drama Dept:

Just on the chance that the A. M. & D. staff had rushed home for the holidays to the neglect of duties journalistic as well as scholastic, when we attended the Christmas production at Hart House Theatre we jotted down a few notes on the back of our program.

"WAPPIN' WHARE"

Three swashbuckling pirates
Carousing and drinking
Of grog of a powerful brew.
Two white mounds of ermine
Like dimly seen mountains
Effectively blocking the view.

A Junior League usher
Tip-toeing and swishing
Her way down the aisle's darkened track,
So tall, slim and stately
In gown gay and sprightly,
Exposing a League of bare back.

A mix up in tickets!
Indignant subscribers
Must rustle about to make room,
As white shrouded figures—
Strange creatures and ghost like,
Go floating about in the gloom.

Young rosy cheeked cherubs
In starched Eton collars With pin-stripes emroid'ring their pants,
And charming wee girls—
So thrilled and excited!—
Go out between scenes with their Aunts.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Eaton Auditorium

"Romantic" is an adjective applied to any Italian tenor under 45 years of age, especially if he happens to possess a pleasingly intimate platform manner and good looks in addition to musical capabilities. This appellation may be an asset as far as publicity is concerned, but it is often an artistic handicap. Nino Martini, in his concert last night at the Eaton Auditorium, seemed to feel it his duty to live up to his reputation as the romantic movie star and radio singer rather than to give a performance worthy of a star of the Metropolitan Opera Company. He radiated charm and magnetism; he established a feeling of personal contact with his hearers, he sang easily, naturally, smoothly; but one felt all the time that if he would only forget about being a romantic Venetian gondolier on the Grand Canal he would give a more inspired performance, if perhaps a less finished one.

Mr. Martini is the possessor of a remarkable natural voice—he showed his audience that even in the first trivial French 18th century song. It is flexible, pure in tone, and extraordinary in its range. He has an effective trick of diminishing, which he used superbly in the selections from "Carmen"—"La fleur tu m'avais jetée" and the "Torcedor Song". (Incidentally a moratorium ought to be declared on the latter as a concert encore.) He is neither showy nor ponderous in execution, neither does he strive after his effects. Song seems a completely natural method of expression to him. His greatest technical weakness is his English enunciation. In the English songs not one word in ten was entirely understandable. This fault is even more amazing considering that Martini has just finished a movie in English.

But in spite of his technical abilities, Mr. Martini, like most other concert tenors, is guilty of pampering his audience. Last night's program began with such a heavy dish as Handel's Largo—then lest his hearers might suffer a twinge of musical indigestion Mr. Martini fed them a few light trifles of Chausson and Lemaire; next he brought on a course of Bizet, but withdrew it after a few mouthfuls in favour of some sugary English confections, concluding the feast with a rather indi-

Playing a strong defensive game and displaying a fast-breaking two-man attack system, O.C.E. defeated Victoria 14-7 in the second game of the lacrosse finals to win the interfaculty title and the Dr. W. The pedagogues won the first of the play-offs by an 11-8 score, and showed to much better advantage in the second game, especially in the way they checked the Scarlet and Gold offensive.

This makes the second time that O.C.E. have triumphed in lacrosse, having won the Dafeo trophy three years ago. The Vics are approaching some sort of record, having been defeated in the finals for two years in a row.

The feature of O.C.E.'s victory was the flashy playing and brilliant combination of Coulter, Allison and Harwood, all of whom were remarkably shifty and hard to stop. They were particularly adept at passing and receiving the ball.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George C. Vair

For the past number of years you have read about University of Toronto basketball teams sliding south to enter into American competition but have you ever heard of an American team playing in Toronto? No. Well, Saturday night you get your chance when the Auburn high school five play their first game in Canada against St. Michael's freshmen at Hart House. The St. Mike's lads know their way around on the hardwood floor and Hastings, their centre man, looks to be a future star. The curtain raiser at 7.30 will see Mac McCutcheon's fast travelling intermediates out for their fourth straight victory, this time at the expense (we hope) of the Varsity Grads. What more can you ask for 10c?

The popularity of water polo in the Queen City is at a low ebb. Last night Hamilton's junior club swamped Varsity juniors 9-1 in a home and home series for the Ontario championship while a handful of spectators looked on. Despite the one-sided score Coach Jimmy Thompson of the visitors assured us that 500 people would see the return game. Evidently the industrial city's sport world like the water sport for there are three senior high school clubs and five junior teams in the city and an average of 300 people attend the league games.

In case you haven't heard Jr. Meds won the volleyball championship and Victoria staff club held last year by Sr. U.C. They are worthy holders of the trophy. Never having lost a league game and coming through in the finals to win handily, O.C.E. are also to be congratulated on winning the lacrosse championship. Led by Allison, Coulter and Harwood, three lacrosse players of senior calibre, they finished the season without a defeat.

Varsity's senior basketball team get into action for the first time since their American tour when they visit Broadview Y on Saturday night. The boys have been putting in plenty of practice and the Y squad will have to be at its best to avoid defeat.

Here are some odd facts you might not know—Jimmy McPherson has been reinstated, recalled or what have you to the senior hockey team but did not go to the States because of injuries. . . . West Toronto defeated Varsity 15-2 in a Junior O.H.A. game this week. . . . Varsity Seniors met Toronto Dukes in the Maple Leaf Gardens tonight. . . . somebody pilfered Varsity's hockey sticks in front of Madison Square Gardens Wednesday night but Ace's proteges borrowed a set from Yale and then proceeded to beat them 6-5. . . . "Lofly" Willis, lanky basketball player of Varsity's 1933-34 senior team, is out trying for a place on Stevens' squad and according to rumours some players are fighting to hold their places. A bad knee has kept him on the sidelines up until now.

BLUES END TRIP
WITH DOUBLE WINStigma of Earlier Defeats
Removed when Varsity Defeats Yale

ST. NICKS EASILY TRIMMED

By Frank Lamberti

The annual intercollegiate invasion of the University of Toronto set against American intercollegiate hockey stalwarts resulted almost in a complete rout for the Canadian exponents, as two of the leading United States college teams smashed their way to a 6-4 and 7-4 victories over Ace Bailey's packclashers. The famed onrushes of the Blue invaders flickered and faded on the hockey horizon as in Boston Varsity suffered a 6-4 defeat at the hands of the Harvard Redmen. Advancing from Boston to Madison Square Gardens, New York, the Blues fell further into the dolorous pit of sighs and sorrows for Canadian hockey lore, faltering before the Princeton Tigers' onslaught, as 1,000 spectators watched the Blues absorb a 7-4 loss. As the Blues savoured to the full the bitter dregs of defeat, they finally came back to score a smashing 12-2 triumph over the St. Nicholas Hockey Club, making up somewhat for the previous disappointments.

On the final lap of their American tour the University of Toronto senior sextet met the Yale Bulldogs in a return engagement, and after trailing by three goals, the Blue cohorts came back strong to punch home a six to five victory over Holcomb York's Old Elfs. Some explanation of the Blue defeats can be offered, as they were minus the services of Jimmy MacPherson, stellar wingman of the University hockey squad.

In their previous tours of the United States the University of Toronto Senior Blues were very successful in that they never sustained any defeats, but their two recent defeats would point out that the American colleges are making great progress in international intercollegiate hockey competition. In the skating forays on the American goal guardians "Roamer" Wilbur Valiquette and L. MacInquham were the leading lights, and the tour ended with a scoring record of 26 goals for and 20 against.

BLUE CAGERS HOPEFUL OF WIN FROM BROAVIEW.Undaunted by Disastrous Tour of States where Victory was Elusive

Warren Stevens' Senior Blue cagers will meet Broadview Y on Saturday night, at the Eastenders' home grounds. It will be the second game of the 1935-36 season for Varsity in the Toronto Major League.

The Blues have just returned from a disastrous American tour in which they failed to garner a single victory. However, many of the games were very close and a few points the other way would have meant a Varsity win. But as the seniors have not lost a game in city play since 1934 and only one in intercollegiate struggles last year, they have high hopes of maintaining their fine Canadian record.

In meeting Broadview for the first time this season the team will encounter stiff opposition. Ab. Rennick's crew is composed of many of the Canadian junior and intermediate championship teams of 1934 and 1935 respectively. However, the loss of Len O'Hara and Jimmie Murchie may weaken the Y team materially, while Varsity will be at full strength.

The Blues are all in fine shape and with Marks and Connelly quickly getting into top form, Warren Stevens is hoping for a nice victory.

The boys are still smarting from their American defeats and are determined to take the smart Y team into camp. Phil Gold, the captain, will direct the team from the floor in his usual reliable manner. The game will commence about 10 p.m.

The well-rounded Blue squad defeated West End Y in their first game of the season by 34-21 and look good enough to continue undefeated after Saturday night. The veterans and newcomers are mixing well together and producing a high-scoring machine.

BLUE AND WHITE SKIERS

University of Toronto's Ski Club placed sixth out of 12 teams entered in the annual winter sports carnival held at Lake Placid during the Christmas holidays. Four Canadian teams were entered and Varsity placed second with McGill taking first colours.

INTERMEDIATE CAGERS WIN THIRDO VICTORY

Varsity's intermediate basketball squad made it three straight victories when they swamped Senecas 36-17 in a scheduled inter-city league fixture at Hart House last night. The West End team showed plenty of fight but failed to exhibit the finish of the winners under the hoop.

The Blues opened the scoring in the early minutes of the game and held their lead throughout, having a nine point lead at half time, 22-13. They displayed a good brand of ball, choosing to work in close on the basket for the majority of their points while the losers were content to shoot from far out. The losers played a loose checking game and the Blues took full advantage of it.

On foul shots the homesters showed a decided edge, rippling the twine six times in nine tries while the Senecas scored a single in ten free throws. Despite the wide-open play of play fouls were few, Marling being the bad man of the night with three personals.

Powers was the leading scorer with 8 points while Green was right on his heels with 7.

STUDENT CONGRESS RAISES LIVE ISSUES

International affairs were discussed at the convention and it was agreed to seek closer relationship between the N.F.C.U.S. and the International Student Service, so as to enable Canadian students to partake more completely of foreign academic advantages. Mr.
Alex Macdonald of the University of Toronto, is to act in an advisory capacity.

It was suggested that radio debates, whose purpose is to make the Canadian public aware of the kind of work being carried on within the universities, and which are now being run by the Radio Commission, be brought more directly under the supervision of the Federation. For the interest of Toronto students, it is reported that a British debating team will participate here next fall.

A number of resolutions were passed, chief among which are those dealing with student loans, the C.O.T.C.
in connection with Federal bursaries, student insurance and a student employment service. The Federation is, however, sadly lacking in funds with which to carry out some much needed changes.

One of the most important problems discussed was the possibility of a national student magazine, but it was decided that fuller details were necessary and the matter was left in charge of Donald Ross of Manitoba and the executive.

Much discussion centred on the student newspaper and although no definite recommendations were passed, the trend of the polls showed that a complete autonomy is impossible and that some control is necessary.

The whole general problem of the relationships between Canadian students and the general public, represented by the daily publications, show an unfortunate tendency to distort the attitude of the students on various important topics of the day and to feature the sensational character found in such attitudes. It is in this connection that radio debates, for one means, be used to disseminate an undistorted picture of Canadian student thought to the general public.

Saul Rae of University College and
E. A. Macdonald of the S.A.C., represented this University at the convention.

DISCUSSION GROUPS FELT NEED HERE

tact with the professors, gives them the advantage of a more experienced outlook on life in general.

Many students here, and not only those in the first year, feel that such an arrangement would be valuable. One first year moderns student from St.
Hilda's, approving of the suggestion, said she thought that there should be more individual interest shown by the faculty toward the students, particularly toward freshmen. "It is so hard to get information out of the professors about the work," was one comment.
Those unfamiliar with the lecture system often find that the work is not explained fully enough, and it is felt that being able to discuss it informally with the professors would be very helpful.

An interesting light was thrown on the situation by G. S. Brett, head of the Department of Philosophy, who said that such a system had been tried, but, contrary to student opinion, had not been successful. Nor does it seem to be necessary, for the experience of the staff here is that, even if enabled to do so, students do not go to their professors for help or advice. "On the whole," said Dr. Brett, "the system here allows closer contact than does the American university system, so there is not the same need for an arrangement of this sort. The problem arises, if at all, only in the Pass courses."

three thousand dollars.

SCOPE OF RELIGION IS CONGRESS THEME

able to discern a new and more vital meaning in Christianity concerning all the aspects of modern world living.

The tenor of the convention was early established by the first two speakers.
Reinhold Niebuhr, one of America's outstanding Christian thinkers, outlined the causes which have brought anarchy in our decaying social system, and showed the responsibility of Christian people in reconstructing society.
John Mackay, American churchman and authority on Latin America, carried the implication of Christian responsibility further in his address on the adequacy of Christ in meeting our social and religious needs.

The main contribution was made by William Temple, Archbishop of York, in four addresses which centred about the theme of the revelation of God in Jesus Christ. Archbishop Temple showed the necessity of a God-centred religion and life, the expression of which is a transforming love that alone is able to provide the common ground for world fellowship.

A view of Christianity as it is actually functioning across the world was given by leading Christian men and women from various countries—Dr. T.
Z. Koo and Dr. Sun from China, Miss
Induk Pak from Korea, Dr. G. B.
Camargo from Mexico, and others.
These speakers exemplified the new conception of Christian missions as the exchange of values between people and communities. The growing importance of community fellowship, and the possibilities of co-operative living upon a Christian basis, were presented by Toy-ohiko Kagawa, one of the greatest Christians of our day. Underlying the life and thought of the convention was the contribution of Dr. Richard Roberts of this city, who conducted workshop services each morning.

One of the real values of the convention was in coming to know American students, and in discovering the great complexity and confusion which they face with regard to such things as war, economic class, and restriction of individual and group freedom.

The 300 Canadian delegates have been afforded an opportunity to scrutinize the problems which face East and West alike, and to discover the permanent values in Christianity which are adequate for these problems.

"Besides his work in teaching and research, of which he did a great deal, he was member of many committees, and chairman of several of them," Mr.
W. J. Dunlop, Director of the Depart-years he was chairman of the Committee on University Extension. His was one of the clearest minds in the University. He could see the point of a problem sooner than most people. In the case of argument, he excelled as peacemaker. He was always genial and

The trustees of the Rockefeller Foundation have appointed Dr. Fitzgerald as Scientific Director of the International Health Division of the Foundation for the usual term of three years from January 1st, 1936. Dr. Fitz-Gerald has already served one term of three years.

Dr. Fitzgerald has also been appointed to serve as a member of the Permanent Commission on Biological Standardization of the Health Organization of the League of Nations. The Chairman of this Commission is Dr.
Thorwald Madsen of Copenhagen, and other members are Sir Henry Dale, Director of the National Institute for Medical Research, London, England;
Dr. G. W. McCoy, Director of the

Let's Go Places

A Night at the Opera

We saw two shows this week at Loews, without benefit of a double feature. When we first went in we got a seat under the gallery and saw A Night at the Opera from there; then we moved down front to see it over again and hear all the jokes that got swallowed up in the laughs before.

It is said that the Marx Brothers took a stage version of their latest show on the road before filming it to overcome this very difficulty, and then tried to space the gaps to allow for audience reaction; but it was wasted effort.
Whenever you get Groucho, Chico and Harpo together for an hour and a half in a moving picture there aren't any spaces. The cracks certainly come thick and fast in A Night at the Opera which is no come-back effort of an old team with their old gags, but a laugh triumph for three of the cleverest humorists on this continent. It surpasses Cocanuts.

The plot is incidental of course, except that it starts off in Venice, stows away on a liner bound for America, and ends up behind the scenes at the New York Opera House, all of which as you can see offers plenty of possibilities for the three mad Marxian principles. Correspondingly, there are three high spots where the whole thing threatens to spill over completely—when Groucho and Chico do a little contract signing in Venice, when Groucho joins the navy to see the world and finds everybody on earth in his state room, and when Harpo runs amuck in the midst of Il Trovatore.

Thus the three are given full opportunity to perform to advantage individually, in various combinations of two, and en masse. Yet from the beginning to the end of A Night at the Opera Groucho's guiding genius is constantly discernible, and if it is a genius which is seldom far from insanity, it is genius all the same and represents the art of the humorist at its highest peak. If he is punning, the pun is turned as neatly as a bit of delicate carving from a lathe; in command of some absurd situation his clowning seriousness is the cleverest satire; if he is merely playing stooge to his mad conferees, the speed and effectiveness of the action is due to his skilful handling of things in the background. To the head of the class, Groucho.

Exhibition in Art Gallery Discussed by Arthur Lismer on Friday

Arthur Lismer gave an interesting talk Friday afternoon on the exhibition of Canadian painters in the Art Gallery. "The exhibition on view is different from others, in fact it is one of the wildest held here," said Mr. Lismer. "However, I like this exhibition myself and what I am going to say may be prejudiced. Although these pictures may not be pleasing they are important as they are typical of Canada in one way or another. There are a great variety of subjects from coast to coast which can be taken to represent Canadian art, and they all seem to have the abounding sense of rhythm that is prevalent in Canada since the War."

Mr. Lismer conducted his audience around the exhibition after his brief lecture, explaining various pictures and answering questions.

Preserving Creative Freedom Is Task of University--Cody

President's Report for Past

UNIVERSITY'S PART

Position of University Staff re Private Opinions Made Clear

The hopes, ambitions and achievements, the losses and new appointments, and the general record of the last academic year of the University of Toronto has just been published in the President's Report. There is shown statistically and by individual reports the practical and academic contributions of every department and phase of University life.

President Cody deals extensively with the ever-present problem of academic freedom and the part that the University must and can play in the life of the nation. He says:

"What controlled universities can become is seen in the fettered institutions of Communistic and super-nationalistic states," and says of Canada: "Our people are not afraid of the truth; they hope that from discussion and investigation, truth will emerge. This University of Toronto has, during the course of its history, enjoyed a full measure of academic freedom, and has sought to remember that correspondingly great is its responsibility to use that freedom with wisdom and good taste."

"The fundamental fact is that the task of the university is not propaganda but education; not to win a case, but to present the truth. A college instructor must, of course, have and hold his own convictions, but the all-important thing is that he should do his work of investigation and teaching in the temper and spirit of science."

"This means refusal to yield to the tendency to forget or overlook facts which do not fit in with theories, and to select facts which fit theories. Academic freedom lays on the university the responsibility to allow freedom of research and teaching in the true spirit of science, but it also lays on the instructor the responsibility to approach his work not as propagandist, or partisan, but as a seeker for the whole truth, with open mind, fair judgment, and regard for the facts."

"Further, the instructor is also a citizen, bound outside the classroom by the same laws which regulate or even restrict the general body of citizens. The public is apt to assume that any (Continued on Page 4)

AFRICA IS PICTURED PEACEFUL PICNIC PARK, PRESENTS PRECAUTIONS

Lions, storks, giraffes, antelope, charging wildebeests and baboons careened across the screen at Convocation Hall on Saturday night at Frank Pullen's lecture on East Africa.

Mr. Pullen pointed out that most of our ideas of Africa are incorrect. He said that to the average Canadian Africa is a swamp infested by venomous snakes and ferocious animals. That this view is exaggerated was well illustrated by the pictures. The country is a rolling park land. The animals if left alone are relatively harmless. In the opinion of the lecturer there is not much more danger in big game hunting than in driving along our highways.

As for the snakes, if reasonable care is taken the traveller will not suffer from them.

STARTLING INNOVATION!!!

R.G.A.

After The Varsity had ceased publication for the fall term, came the news that the girls at Annesley Hall had triumphed at last in their long campaign for a radio. Petitions had been submitted annually for some years, but each time refusal was prompt and emphatic, a longer list of reasons being cited than the petition bore names. The most recent application met with success, however, and a fine machine, the gift of a Grad, now stands in the common room at the free disposal of all. No time limitations, no specified programs or other hampering restrictions to mar its enjoyment. And all in peace and contentment within Annesley walls.

SYMPATHY EXPRESSED

With dignified simplicity and attended by many of his university colleagues, the funeral of Professor Frank Allen took place on Saturday afternoon in Bloor Street United Church, where Dr. Allen had been a member of the congregation for fifty years.

The funeral address was presented by President Cody, who reviewed Professor Allen's career of fine service to the University. From a modest beginning on an Ontario farm, as a young man Professor Allen became a school teacher in order to earn sufficient money to put himself through college. In this aim he was successful, and graduated (Continued on Page 4)

McPHERSON ABSENT

By George Vair

Forced to play four games in a week proved too much for Ace Bailey's senior pucksters and Toronto Dukes have two additional points on the credit column as a result of their 7-2 victory over University of Toronto at Maple Leaf Gardens on Friday night.

While the visitors were without the services of Jimmy McPherson, who is suffering from an injured knee which may keep him on the sidelines for the remainder of the season the Dukes missed "Pud" Kitchen, latest recruit to join the Olympic team, Ken Grivel and Russ Bowman. Only 3 alternates were used by the winners but that was sufficient.

The Blues scored the first and only goal in the opening period and had a decided edge in the play. McLaughlin flipped the disc past Marsh on a pass from McLellan.

The Dukes opened up in the middle stanza and the Blues folded up like a pack of cards before their speedy offensive. O'Brien started things when he broke away from a Varsity ganging attack while Robinson was in the cooler for the first of six goals. Eight minutes (Continued on Page 3)

Displaying the form which brought them two successive Dominion championships in the last two years Ab. Rennie's Broadview Y cagers handed Warren Stevens' Blues a 30-19 pasting in a furious tilt played on the Y floor on Saturday night. The game was one of the roughest battles played around here in years and on many occasions threatened to get out of hand. However, the crowd of four hundred and fifty fans were given a real treat as shown by their loud and frequent outbursts of cheering.

With Martin and Bodrug, former Varsity star, showing the way, the Y team shook off their lethargy halfway through the first period and quickly assumed a lead which the Blues never threatened. The Varsity attack became quite disorganized due to the very tight defensive tactics of the victors and never really got under way.

Bedford put Varsity into a 1-point lead at the start of the game and a few minutes later the Blues held a 7-6 margin. Except for these two points the Stevens-coached crew were never in the lead. With about ten minutes of the first period gone the Y crew shook loose from their checks and began to assume their margin of victory. At the rest period the Y squad held a 17-8 lead.

Except for a few moments in the last half the Blues never even threatened. The Broadview squad, aided by (Continued on Page 3)

VIC MUSIC CLUB PRESENT CLASSIC

Iolanthe to be Produced in Three Weeks' Time

STUDENTS' NIGHT

The Victoria College Music Club, which is to produce Gilbert and Sullivan's Iolanthe in Margaret Eaton Hall in three weeks' time, has commenced the final series of rehearsals. The work is ahead of schedule—a fact which usually points to an outstanding success. It is expected that the return to the Savoy Operetta should prove a very popular move.

This year students are to have the opportunity to view this outstanding production at popular prices. For one night only, Wednesday, January 29 the whole seating plan will be available to the students of the University at low rates.

The club is entering its second decade of light opera production this year and thus has claim to the largest annual show on the campus. Light opera is no easy task when the cast is composed of a group of people that has such a rapid "turn over" as college students.

The cast this year includes Charlie Jolliffe as the Lord Chancellor, Dick Jolliffe as Private Willis, Marg Davis as the Fairy Queen, Patricia Lundy as Phyllis and Maurice Loycock as Strophon.

Hart House Library

The temporary closing of the Hart House Library owing to the disappearance of a number of books from the shelves is one of the most discouraging commentaries which can be made upon the students of the University of Toronto. The unfortunate part of it all is that the stigma which it carries falls for the most part on innocent students.

Thefts of books from public libraries is not an unusual occurrence. However, it is none the less regrettable for that. But the theft of books from the Hart House Library is even more despicable than ordinary pilfering. It is a violation of a trust as well as a theft.

The Hart House Library is widely known for the excellence of the books it contains. It is made available for students under conditions which are far superior to any found in a library of real merit. The luxurious surroundings certainly surpass any found in the local libraries. The five thousand books which it contains make reading a pleasure and a convenience. But there remain some who abuse the privilege.

It has long been believed that the university students represented a type of manhood which was above petty pilfering. They are accepted into Hart House as such. Fortunately most of them are of the calibre that they are supposed to represent. A few are not. And it is this few which makes difficulties for the remainder of the student body.

The situation is certainly regrettable. Abusing a privilege is a despicable act. And the students who do so are certainly not very desirable members of the University. It will be an encouraging sign when check ups on the books in the library will reveal no books missing. And it is not too much to ask.

Studying Made Easy

Among other things that students will have to consider during the next few months is the problem of studying. A few find it no problem at all. Many find it one which must be dealt with repeatedly. Since we are inclined to consider the opinions of authorities in every other phase of human activity, it might be advisable to extend the tendency into the realm of studying. What do those who have amassed a great deal of academic learning say about their methods of doing it? Here are the opinions of a few scholars and comments upon them.

Make a habit of studying and refuse to allow things of minor importance to interfere with that habit. This will do away with the great effort required in getting down to work.

Plan to do your work in the easiest possible way. When doing work requiring intensive mental effort, always leave off at a point where you are getting along well.

Be fair with yourself in imposing your work. He was a keen observer who said, "it is little wonder that individuals are unfair with one another, for they are unfair with themselves." It is particularly true of students.

Select the best possible environment for studying. Scholars doubt the inspirational value of placing the dear girls' or dear boys' pictures where they may be gazed at every time a student's eyes are raised from the books. Other distractions, to be avoided if possible, are too numerous to mention.

You may agree or disagree with these opinions of successful students. You may be already following some of the suggestions or you may think some of them worth trying. They are submitted here for what they are worth.

The Lindbergh's Exile

The recent departure of the Lindberghs for England in search of a little privacy has been the cause of much pain to the American citizens and of a certain feeling of smugness on the part of British subjects.

Actually we have scant reason for smugness. If the Lindberghs are obtaining their desired privacy in their Welsh retreat it is only because a strict police guard is assuring it. The general populace the world over seems to be possessed of an overwhelming curiosity in the affairs of anyone who has the misfortune to be in the public eye.

An Ontario clergyman has called attention to what he calls "the savagery of Canadians" in reference to the ravine murder case. Even in Toronto the Good, 15,000 curiosity mongers sought to attend the funeral of the unfortunate girl. Such disregard of the feelings of others is almost incredible in an enlightened community.

If enlightenment and education have failed to moderate this zest for sensationalism there remains only compulsion which is difficult to apply. Hangings are no longer considered public holidays because the authorities now insist on keeping such things as quiet as they deserve to be. Perhaps the opinions of the more sensitive-minded citizens may someday prevail to the extent that hordes of sensation-seeking savages may be debarred from courtrooms and that crime and its victims may retire to comparative oblivion.

The sensationalism of the press is ever being criticized but the critics forget that the newspaper, which owes its existence to its ability to give the public what it wants, is the effect not the cause of the public attitude. Public taste changes slowly and meanwhile the Lindberghs will probably continue to be hounded until another victim usurps their place in the lime-light.

Social Credit Again

It is an ancient truth that reformers, when they get into office, tend to become conservative. The inertia of man becomes too much for them, and a realization of responsibility leads to caution.

Another illustration of this fact is furnished in the province of Alberta, Canada. A few months ago the Social Credit party won an astounding victory in Alberta and went into power on a platform pledged to develop a system of social credit including the payment of basic dividends of $25 a month to all adults. When Premier Aberhart, the kindly Sunday school teacher with a good radio voice took over the office, he found the Albertans, at least many of them, with hands outstretched for the $25.

But what has happened? Premier Aberhart finds himself too busy with an immediate problem of debt and unemployment to think much about social credit. He says social credit must wait until the province's financial condition is improved, then all will get their government credits. The credit of the province, he announced, must come before social credit.

In other words, Alberta is facing a crisis, not a theory, and the theory must be set aside until the crisis is taken care of. Which was exactly what was to be expected.—Oklahoma Daily.

Harvard's "National Scholarship"

Harvard University, the oldest university in the United States, has just announced a plan which should strengthen its reputation as a national force in promoting scholarship and clear thinking. The plan includes a number of "national scholarships" through which Harvard hopes to draw the pick of young scholars from every state in the union.

The plan of Harvard to select four outstanding students from each state each year should do much toward cementing a more cordial relationship. What Rhodes scholarships have done for the English speaking nations, the Harvard "national scholarships" may do for the states.

Harvard belongs to that select list of universities which are older than the existing government. The fact that it still looks to the future is proof of the liberating effect of education.

—Oklahoma Daily.

The banks can save the nation, says the president. That's fair enough—now that the nation has saved the banks.—The Indiana Daily Student.

President Roosevelt's speech before Congress was received with acclaim in most circles. But he probably would have received more applause if he'd sung a couple of choruses of "The Music Goes Round and Round."

Curiosity as to the silence maintained by the Hall Committee ever since the beginning of fall, or for that matter ever since they took office last spring, has been enthusiastically satisfied by three announcements of great import in Friday's Varsity. It now is revealed that, silently but persistently, they have been pursuing the attainment of two long held aims, and the obtaining of new chairs for the Great Hall and a coffee service for the Tuck Shop announced in two different stories in Friday's paper marks their success in both regards. The third story we had in mind concerned the Tuck Shop break.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Toronto Symphony

The Orchestra's Saturday concert was another mixed bag in which the largest catch was the Dvorak New World symphony, in curious contrast to Beethoven's Pastoral, which was played at the last subscription concert. The music is, of course, immeasurably inferior but it is welded into a unity which is noticeably lacking in the Pastoral. Sir Ernest MacMillan extracted every last ounce from the symphony. The solo parts which are of great importance, were well done, especially D. Hutcheon's English horn solo in the second movement. The orchestral voices came out with great clarity and precision.

The C Minor Concerto of Bach for orchestra and two harpsichords was difficult to hear from the ground floor. Etta Coles and Naomi Yanova, play-

LEADERSHIP OF SECONDS BASKETBALL LOOP AT STAKE

INTERMEDIATES MEET WEST END FOR CAGE LEADERSHIP TO-NIGHT

Varsity Team Fit for Crucial Game in Hart House Big Gym

BOTH TEAMS UNBEATEN

St. Mike's-Varsity Grads Meet in Opening Game of Doubleheader

The Varsity intermediate basketball team swung into action again on Monday night at Hart House when they met West End Y for the leadership. Neither team has yet lost a game, both having captured four. Moreover West End defeated Seneca Saturday night by the same margin the Blue team took the Grads, twenty-three points. Both teams are prolific scorers as their record to date will show.

In the game here on Saturday night every member of the Varsity team scored at least one basket, with most of the players not stopping at one. The Blue team are a well balanced aggregation, mourning not a weak member, having eaten plenty of the "saged" advice Coach MacCutcheon has fed them.

This crucial game will be preceded by another inter-city match between St. Michael's College and Varsity Grads. While this game does not boast the importance of the other, yet it will be none the less interesting as the Grads will be out to show they are not as weak as the Varsity intermediates made them appear.

later Boyle and Large combined to beat Shipman. The rout continued with the Dukes collecting four more goals before the end of the period.

O'Brien, with 2 goals, was the leading scorer and looks to be one of the best left wingers in the circuit. Church and Grant also turned in commendable performances. Bruce Charles continues to be Varsity's best rearguardman and a strong rusher while Captain Norrie McLelland is still the tops along the front line.

Intermediate Quintet Defeats Grads 45-22

Alumnae Team Outclassed by MacCutcheon's Smart Cagers

ST. MIKE'S DEFEAT AUBURN

Varsity's intermediate cagers continued their winning ways in the inter-city basketball series by swamping the Varsity Grads 45-22 in Hart House on Saturday night. It was not a royal welcome that the alumnae members received on returning to the scenes of their undergraduate days, for excepting the opening minutes they couldn't get close to Mac MacCutcheon's pets.

Following this game the Holy Family high school of Auburn, New York, defeated St. Michael's College 24-23 in a thrilling battle, that had the crowd on their feet most of the time. The Americans staged a rousing finish to overcome an early St. Mike's lead, and then managed to stave off a counter attack of the Saints which just failed to catch the Mauve and Yellow clad visitors from across the border.

From the start the fast travelling intermediates dominated the play, and the score began to mount in their column. Before the half ended twenty-five points had been tallied by them while the Grads feebly replied with six. The lack of anything that looked like an organized attack cost the visitors many baskets, while Varsity were all-

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Frank Lamberti

The Blue and White standard bearers had very little success over the week-end as Varsity squads made a complete sweep of the also ran honours, which began last Friday night with the Senior O.H.A. squad and finishing with the Blue and White senior cagers as Broadview Y gained a fine victory; however, better days are still ahead.

Some choice bits of conversation ensued one day in the Hart House corridors to the effect that the Varsity Senior O.H.A. squad would not gain a single win in the entire campaign and finally ended up in a 10-1 odds being offered the Blue and White enthusiast who maintained the Senior squad have been under the well known Indian sign, and victory must come their way eventually. The only comment this department can add is, that the odds are good, and that the lads in the blue shirts are giving their best, so take your pick.

Tomorrow night at Varsity Arena the Villans from Oakville engage the Varsity senior hockey squad in the Blues' first appearance on home ice since their recent American tour and the light fast skating squad from Oakville are ready to make amends for their 10-2 defeat at the hands of Hamilton Tigers at the expense of the Blue and White. Scoring records released last Saturday show a reason why the Yellow and Black sextet of the Mountain City are pressing hard for top honours as four of their sharpshooters lead the league in scoring with a total of 46 goals amongst them. The star snipers are Mackie, Apps, Chisholm, and McGowan.

The fine performance of Violet cagers of New York University has built a following in basketball worthy of note, in that in a recent home game at Madison Square Gardens, 18,000 crammed every nook and corner of the house that Tex Rickard built, successfully defending their national championship title and running their winning streak to seventeen straight, defeating Kentucky U., runners-up for two seasons. Last Saturday night again the N.Y.U. cagers easily turned aside Columbia's challenge by a 49-21 score. The backboards of the Gardens in New York are made of glass, permitting an unobstructed view of the court.

On Wednesday night the man of might around the University of Toronto in the person of Charles Pocius will trade gloves with Art Anderson of Jamestown, N.Y., in a scheduled feature bout at Maple Leaf Gardens, and no doubt the fight for social rights will be on.

According to reports they expect a $100,000 gate for the Louis vs. Retzlaff bout at Chicago Stadium on Friday night, and Retzlaff will likely see the lights go round and round when they push the third round down. Oh well, coin is good music anyway.

JUNIOR HOCKEYISTS ALSO ARE HUMBLLED

Blues Held Heavier Lions in Check for Most of Game

CAMPBELL STARS

The scrappy Varsity junior hockey team bowed to Toronto Lions by a 3-0 score at the Maple Leaf Gardens on Saturday afternoon in a Big Six group game. After holding their husky opponents in check for the first forty minutes the exhausted Blue defence were forced to yield three goals in rapid order during the closing period.

The game opened with heavy checking by both teams and timid, disorganized attacks. Botterel missed an opportunity to score for Varsity when goaler Wilson failed to clear on the Lions' doorstep after eleven minutes of play. Two penalties for each squad followed and George Campbell, in the University goal, was kept hopping about like an angry sparrow as Lions pressed for a tally.

More penalties followed as the next chapter got under way, but again the bespectacled Mr. Campbell held the fort. At one stage he smothered a shot with the entire Lions' forward line through the defence. Varsity ganged the purple team's net in the closing minutes of the period but their weak shooting failed to do any damage.

Fremes led a series of sallies on the short-handed Lions citadel in the first few minutes of the fatal final period.

With Varsity playing five men within the far blue line, Cassidy of Lions broke fast down the left boards and passed over to McPherson who drilled a backhand shot into the twine for the first score. Ten minutes later McLean made it 2-0 on a solo rush. Campbell later surprised McLean and again Henry, with remarkable saves but was finally beaten by Kashner a few minutes before the bell rang. The final count was 3-0 in favour of Lions.

Lions: Goal, Wilson; defence, McPherson, Henry; centre, Goslin; wings, Cassidy, Crawford; alternates, Kashner, McLean, Tomlinson, Dunford.

Varsity: Goal, Campbell; defence, Botterel, Langford; centre, Giddings; wings, Fremes, Creighton; alternates, Gillen, Learmouth, Leslie.

Varsity: Singer 6, Green 2, Harlock 4, Daugherty 7, Powers 2, Barron 2, Hogg 6, McLaughlin 10, Peters 2, Cooper 2, Marling 2.

Varsity Grads: Agnew 4, Scott 2, Loblaw 6, Bell, Fowell, Laing 10.

TRUTH TO NATURE TRAIT OF BALZAC

—M. BALDENSPERGER

Balzac's studies of human nature, his perfection in describing local colour and his search for background data was the subject of Monsieur Fernand Baldensperger, guest speaker from the University of Harvard, who addressed the Alliance Francaise and the University of Toronto Thursday in the McLennan Building.

In Balzac's Comedie Humaine, a whole society passes before us. The personalities he described came from a set social order and each has certain typical characteristics of his surroundings and profession, asserted M. Bal-

The first practice for the so-called intercollegiate hockey team will be this Wednesday, from one to two o'clock in Varsity Arena. All girls who are at all interested in playing hockey, are asked to turn out. So far no coach for the team has been secured, and the practice will be a general workout. Bring your own hockey sticks. The U.C. sticks are already at the Arena, but there won't be enough to go around.

The Vic Badminton Club is about to run off its round-robin tournament, and Marion Satterly wishes it to be announced that a list has been posted in the college hall, and all girls who wish to play in the tournament should sign there. The results of the tournament will determine the interfaculty team, so all badminton enthusiasts should enter right away. It is hoped that it will be possible to play the first round this Friday.

Snow or slush, rain or shine, swimming goes on all the time. Remember that the interfaculty meet comes off this term. New talent has been found among the freshmen. St. Mike's are counting on Sunny McLaughlin and St. Hilda's on Clara Ord, to garner some extra points for them, and to give the Social Scientists some opposition.

PRESERVING FREEDOM

UNIVERSITY'S TASK

statement made by a university instructor is in some way an official utterance of the university.

"But members of a staff are a fair cross-section of the community in regard to their political and economic views. They differ from one another in temper, outlook and opinion, as do members of any group of intelligent men.

"A university administrator may sometimes find himself in the position of defending the right of free speech on the part of an individual although he may strongly disagree with the views expressed and consider the individual's course of action lacking in wisdom and seamliness and regard for others.

"The rights and responsibilities of both universities and teachers must be fully recognized. Any university worthy of the name must maintain its intellectual freedom, what our new governor-general calls its 'freedom of spirit', against all tyranny and assault, otherwise its essential character is lost. On the other hand, this very privilege of freedom imposes on all teachers a responsibility in speech.

"If a social or economic order under which free men and women can live is to be maintained in the world, clear thinking must prevail over prejudice and emotion. It is one of the chief tasks of the university to promote and protect this intellectual clarity, this 'creative freedom' which alone will preserve our inherited political and religious freedom."

ways dangerous when on the attack. Hogg, McLaughlin and Singer each netted the ball twice for field goals, while the former sank two foul shots. Fouls were frequent with the Grads doing most of the "badman" stuff. Agnew, Scott and Loblaw for the Grads each had one basket to their credit in this half. The latter played very aggressively and led the Alumnus team.

Grady Laing, fresh from college, opened the scoring in the last half, and continued his flashy play throughout the period. He scored no less than four baskets, as well as sinking two singles. However, the jaunts of the Blue team govtard were too frequent and they added twenty more points to their total. McLaughlin played brilliantly and netted three baskets, two of them from difficult angles. Daugherty also found his eye this half and netted six points.

STINGINESS IS SAID

REASON FOR SLUMS

the 'comfortable people' in Toronto, is that slum conditions are inevitable, that they are to be expected in a large city, and that the pig makes its sty."

Professor Urwick painted a picture of the conditions he had personally come across during the investigation: overcrowding; insufficient or complete lack of water, toilet and bath conveniences; whole blocks infested by armies of rats and vermin. There are at least 2000-3000 such shacks that could in no way be called homes, but in which families were living and are still living.

Professor Urwick pointed out how slums are breeding places of disease and delinquency. "The underprivileged in Canada are not criminals like the Old Country slum dwellers. But what are they going to turn into—and their children? What is going to become of them in time? Are they going to grow up into good citizens?"

from the University of Toronto in 1893. It was then that Professor Allen first joined the staff of the University, of which he was a member for over forty years, this long period of loyal service being recognized in 1934 when he was made Dean of the Faculty of Arts.

Dr. Cody expressed his tribute to Professor Allen as a teacher, man and Christian. He possessed the ability of lucid impartation, and no less valuable an attribute in his teaching profession was his personality. His common sense, sound judgment and tolerance won the respect and affection of his associates and his students.

In closing, Dr. Cody expressed his thankfulness for the services that Professor Allen had rendered, and his sympathy for the sorrow of his bereaved relatives.

Rev. Fidler gave the scriptural reading and Dr. G. C. Pidgeon closed the service with a prayer.

MAUVAIS ART BALL

TO BE UNIQUE AFFAIR

The Mauvais Arts Ball is regarded as one of the most interesting and original parties put on by any campus organization. It is an annual costume ball held by the Architectural Club. At first the club dance was for members only. Repeating last year's success, the Architects are now inviting their friends and members of other faculties to come to the Mauvais Arts Ball for the time of their lives. Oriental in theme, but there is no need for expensive or elaborate costumes.

The Architects have arranged an expansive floor show and interesting refreshments. The dance is being held on Thursday evening, January 16th at the Argonaut Rowing Club. The dance music is being administered by Jack Ryan and His Royal Ethiopians.

Let's Go Places

We were foolish enough to argue with the A. M. & D. reviewers as to whether that department or this should cover A Midsummer Night's Dream, and they won on the grounds that, while admittedly a moving picture, it was shown at the Royal Alex, home of the Drama. But we learned our lesson, and as soon as we heard that the Imperial was featuring a sixty piece symphony orchestra under the direction of Reginald Stewart, we beat it down there in a hurry and waited for no arguments. Jack Arthur is experimenting with fine music for the general public, and while there are few exclusive musical groups about town in which we can boast membership, we feel right at home with the g.p. So let's go places and see what's happening at Toronto's largest entertainment house where classical music is being served up to the masses.

When you go to a popular theatre you expect to see action, with plenty of people and plenty going on, whether this is on the screen or the stage, and it is rather odd at first to watch sixty good men and true, and one lady, simply holding their places in the midst of a colourful setting for the better part of an hour. But once you have become accustomed to the different surroundings, symphony music in a popular show shop is very enjoyable indeed. Nor is Reginald Stewart doing any pandering to his cosmopolitan audience. He might have chosen to give his opening concert a Promenade flavour with Peer Gynt, the Blue Danube, or even a spot of Ferde Grofe, and have been excused for it; instead he selected the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, and there are other symphonies less sombre and with greater popular appeal. Yet if Saturday afternoon's audience is any sample of the Toronto masses, Mr. Stewart's choice finds their favour, for appreciation was by no means lacking. Liveliness always draws a spontaneous reaction from any audience, however, and the Dance of the Clowns from Rimsky-Korsakov's Snow Maiden, played as an encore, drew the greater applause. If critical listeners find the Imperial orchestra a trifle inadequate as to tone and strength of attack, they should bear in mind the fact that Mr. Stewart has not had his free choice of the city's best musicians in the formation of the new group, many of these being already engaged with other organizations; moreover, it has not full symphony strength of numbers. The Imperial's "Symphonic Hour" is certainly more than a satisfactory presentation, however, and as "fine music made popular" it shows general superiority to the Promenade offerings.

I Dream Too Much, the feature film presentation, with Miss Lily Pons, is deserving of greater space than that which remains to be given it. The latest "Met" star to enter talking pictures, Miss Pons brings her wonderful voice and charming personality to screen audiences, with whom she should find a warm welcome. Strangely enough the bill of fare also includes a good comedy short, with living characters and never an animated cartoon, which these days is a rarity.

R.G.A.

A heterogeneous assortment of rebels taken in the Monmouth uprising of 1685 are sent into slavery at Port Royal, Jamaica, among them a young Irish medico sent along for treating a rebel's wounds. His Irish insolence earns him the undying resentment of a cruel plantation owner. Finally he leads the rebel band in a new break for freedom from the tortures of their island prison, they seize a Spanish pirate ship which has opportunely captured the town at the critical moment, and are off for a pirate cruise of their own. The dashing Captain Blood—the hero's name is given to the picture—employs a technique of brilliant insult to win the gorgeous young niece of the cruel planter, and you should see the gowns Milo Anderson has designed for curvaceous Olivia de Havilland.

Captain Blood has high entertainment value—it has been held over a second week by popular demand so there is no arguing this point, but the Sabatini flavour of thrilling sword play and cavalier love has been laid on a trifle heavily. Errol Flynn brings a handsome cut and dash to the lead role.

One of the most ingeniously funny cartoons of our experience, and the hissing of Il Due in a Lowell Thomas news reel by audacious members of the audience, complete an enjoyable bill.

Too Many Medical Aspirants May Force Drastic Revision in Qualifications

842 REGISTERED LAST YEAR

"More Time and Money Needed to Train Doctors Now," Says F. G. Fitzgerald

That a drastic revision in the present methods of admission to the Faculty of Medicine is necessary in this University, is the opinion expressed by Dean J. G. Fitzgerald, in the President's Report, released a few days ago.

"The present methods of admission to this faculty," he says, "without limitation or selection, except by the possession of academic qualifications, cannot, by any stretch of imagination, be regarded as adequate or satisfactory criteria. This situation surely calls for drastic revision. We have too many medical undergraduates, and the obstacles in the way of their rejection or elimination, constitute a case for reform."

Dr. Fitzgerald points out that it now requires much more time and money to train a medical practitioner than it did fifty years ago, and that the community is expected to contribute much more largely than formerly, to the sum required for this longer preparation. "It is immaterial whether this money comes through the state, or in the form of interest on endowment—the community must provide the funds," says Dr. Fitzgerald.

"This being true," he continues, "it is not desirable to establish more satisfactory methods for the selection of students? To choose those who are most likely to make an adequate return to society for the assistance which has thus been afforded them?"

Dr. Fitzgerald sees as necessary to medical students that they should be socially-minded and show some aptitude for the study and practice of medicine. And he lists as most essential that they give evidence of possessing "those certain traits of character, without which no man, or woman, can hope

PROBLEMS BESET SOCIAL WORKERS

Co-Operation Is Necessary in Assisting the Needy

SECURITY ACTS AS BOND

Individual case-workers are breaking down legislation which social workers have spent so much energy trying to build up, by actually finding jobs for girls which pay wages below the standard required by the Minimum Wage Board. A statement of these facts was made by Miss Dorothy Livesay yesterday during a talk on "The Recent Developments in Social Work", to the Social Science Club.

Miss Livesay outlined some of the difficulties met by the student of social science, in his chosen profession. "For the first time," she said, "we are faced by the practical; we see our great responsibility, for we are dealing with human beings."

Social workers are faced by two different schools of thought, each outlining its own approach to the prospective "client". The first demands that all the facts concerning that person, his family and so on, be obtained as soon as possible. As a result the individual contact between client and worker does not develop. The second method is one rather of psychological approach, the worker getting the confidence of the client before trying to find out any information. The idea was emphasized that the client was a human (Continued on Page 4)

CANADIAN PICTURES DISCUSSED BY LISMER AT ART GALLERY

In his monthly review of paintings at the Art Gallery last night, Mr. Arthur Lismer discussed the Canadian Group of painters and pointed out the great strides made during the last decade in the development of an independent spirit.

In a reminiscent vein he decried the "academic listlessness" of early Canadians who forced English techniques on an unwilling Canadian scene and declared that second and third rate imitations of European pictures looked so tired that they might have walked all the way to this country. Inter-Divisional Exchange Is Possible for Chosen Undergraduates

HONOURS NOT REQUIRED

With the announcement of the Exchange Scholarships for 1936-37, a limited number of students at Toronto have the opportunity of obtaining a year's scholarship at some other Canadian university. These scholarships, which are sponsored by the National Federation of Canadian University Students, enable students to study at an "exchange" university for one year without paying tuition fees or Students Union Fees. The N.F.C.U.S. representatives on this campus are E. A. Macdonald and S. F. Rae and prospective applicants can obtain full details from them.

The Exchange of Undergraduates Plan was initiated about seven years ago by the executive of the N.F.C.U.S., and came into operation six years ago after the presidents, registrars, and financial authorities of the Canadian universities had given their consent. (Continued on Page 4)

Hart House will be Scene of German Play This Month

WELL SELECTED CAST

For the first time in a great number of years the German Club is producing a play at Hart House. Die Localbahn by Ludwig Thoma is to be presented on January 27. This play is a political comedy involving rather humorous deductions on the stability of public opinion. Thoma, the author, is well-known both as a novelist and dramatist, as well as having been co-editor of one of the best German satirical papers, Simplicissimus.

OLD-FASHIONED GIRL ONCE MORE DESIROE AS HELP-MATE

Washington. — The "old-fashioned" girl has come into her own once more with college students, a survey at Catholic university shows.

The majority of 35 seniors in one class say they will pick the type that had loved for their life companions.

Only one man said that "good looks" would determine his choice of a wife, while 11 said that "moral character" would influence them most. Wealth did not seem to matter much. One mentioned it as a last consideration.

College women did not seem to be in such demand as educators would like to believe, in this vote. There were no votes registered for college women as first in importance, none for second or third, and only one for fourth place. A definite distinction was made between "intelligence and education". The vote showed the seniors considered intelligence necessary for their wives, while not admitting that a college girl and a smart girl were identical.

The President in His Report Gives Lots of Us a Hearty Snort

Little did those in authority know that the President's Report would furnish humour for undergraduates. Nor did the students know until one enterprising University College man found the following item under a report of an expedition to the Red River Valley. He found that the party had returned with "nine cretaceous turtles, some of them hitherto unknown to science."

Two of The Varsity's reporters were sent to interview these little pals of science and returned saying, "They tortoise quite a lot."

After this an intensive study was made of the report by undergraduates in all colleges. Interesting information was found in the fact that "the average age of first year students is 19 years; their average height is 5 feet 8 3/4 inches and their average weight 142 1/2 lbs.—a substantial increase over the figures of ten years ago. The Varsity has yet to decide whether the President intended a pun in this last item.

Students learned that the Mu Library, consisting of 45,000 volumes of Chinese books, has now arrived, and is at present stored in the Museum.

They learned that the number of volumes added to the Library during the year has been 15,560 and the number of pamphlets 4,446, making a total of accessioned volumes in the Library 316,704 and the total number of pamphlets 118,599—or a grand total of 435,303 items. Books borrowed on reading room slips, overnight, and for periods of a week totalled 317,541 as compared with 65,718 in 1921.

But among the books published and articles written by university professors were found the most astounding of all the items. For amid such titles as "The heterothallism of Panacoccus subalearis Beck, a sclerotium-producing agaric," was found "When Confucius was a Babe."

One learned fisherman had written an essay on "The effect of temperature on the distribution of mayflies in a stream". And then there was "The hippocampal and parahippocampal cortex of the emu (Dromiculus).

Students were delighted to read that H. Bennett had written "The Wit's Progress", and just below N. W. De Witt had written "A Brief World History". Which, they say, is progressing some.

Copies of the Report are in great demand with first and second year students since they have discovered that ailments with strange, terrifying, and even noble names sometimes enable fortunate sufferers to avoid physical training. To those who have not yet seen the Report we offer the suggestion that they look up several of these afflictions to ascertain whether they are easily obtainable.

Hither and Von

"Hither and Von", which appears today for the first time, will henceforth be a regular feature of The Varsity. Its purpose is to promote interest in, and understanding of, other camps. To do this, we will tell of interesting and unusual happenings in the university world.

We shall present short articles about other Canadian universities which will be written by Exchange Students, and may have Exchange Professors do their bit.

It is our hope to present material at once interesting, informative, and amusing, without invading the field of questionable humour where our esteemed contemporary, "Toke Oike", rules supreme. It is not our intention either to swell or to deflate local ego by our comparisons of this and the other founts of learning which will supply our news.

And now, with characteristic chivalry we start off with news of the co-eds, (God bless them), turning first to Texas State College for Women, where the girls have two football teams. They indulge in real tackling, too, and no sissy stuff. They don't expect any Rose Bowl bids, but are going to organize a Finger Bowl game.

The Bryn Mawrites are not satisfied to stick to feminine sports, however, and challenged the men of Haverford to a hockey game. Fouls were plentiful and the two referees were quite worn out from whistle-blowing. Brawn triumphed over brain, though, and the men won by a 2-0 score, securing their first victory of the season—sort of hiding behind women's skirts, so to speak.

University of Minnesota, Minneapolis.—A left-handed monkey-wrench may not be such a bad idea, after all, in the opinion of Prof. Bryng Bryngelson, director of the university speech clinic.

He explains that his experiments have made him an advocate of "natural handedness". As a result the university has ordered 100 left-handed chairs for use in university class rooms.

Two years ago the school installed left-handed pencil sharpeners and bought left-handed scissors for portside frosh.

Morbid Curiosity--Disgusting!

When and if Bruno Hauptmann goes to the electric chair on Friday evening there will be closed one of the most dramatic and illuminating cases in the history of modern America. And the illumination thus thrown does not show the United States in a particularly attractive light.

In many ways the handling of the case was a tribute to the intelligence and resourcefulness of the American police. In other respects it portrays the people of that land as being second to none in civilized savagery. Canada perhaps stands second in this doubtful characteristic.

The yellow journalism, of which we hear so much has seldom surpassed its efforts in the Hauptmann case. Politics also played an important part in the proceedings, and for that matter still are. Above all the morbid curiosity, in utter disregard of the feelings of others, an attribute peculiar to the people of the American continent, made itself manifest in all its repulsive raiment. In fact, this morbid hysteria may at some later date be seen to have played a more important part in the proceedings than did the officials of the law.

When the Lindberg baby was first kidnapped the people of the United States rallied to the side of their popular hero with such vigour that the grief-stricken father's life was made considerably more miserable. The search which followed attracted immense throngs of people curious to secure souvenirs of the ghastly event. When Hauptmann was finally arrested and charged with murder, the worthy citizens displayed their allegiance to Lindberg by arming themselves with replicas of the ladder with which Hauptmann was alleged to have reached the baby's crib on the second floor. It certainly must have been comforting to Lindberg to see this display of affection. The racketeers who reaped a fortune in the sale of the miniature ladders probably also felt some degree of comfort.

At that time Hauptmann was regarded with slightly less affection than Judas Iscariot and other gentlemen whose popularity has suddenly waned. Gladly would the mob have torn him to pieces. At the present time he is slowly regaining some of his lost prestige and sympathy is rapidly mounting on his behalf. Should it mount high enough politics may again make their influence felt in granting some sort of reprieve.

Hauptmann may or may not be guilty. Evidence points to the fact that he was at least connected with the crime. He may or may not suffer the penalty for his deeds. In any case he has given rise to the portrayal of a cross section of the American people which is anything but attractive. When we realize that 20,000 Toronto people prowled about the ravine in which Ruth Taylor was murdered on the Sunday following her death we can scarcely point the finger of scorn at the United States. We can only ask ourselves if the progress which we are alleged to have made is limited to the perfection of a few machines.

American Prep. Schools

In judging America's leading preparatory schools as failures because they have not contributed heavily to the governing class of this country, Fortune seems to have lost all perspective of what the political system of the United States really is. The article in this month's issue handles the prep schools roughly in several places, as it is well it should, but in gloomily comparing them to the English institutions of their class Fortune wilfully ignores the wide gulf between the characters of the two countries.

Statistics are assuredly not flattering in surveying the contributions made by the selected schools to the government, either past or present. The sum total of twenty-seven United States Senators, one Supreme Court Justice, and one President (out of twelve selected schools) should cause a blush to come to the face of every loyal Grotonian were it not for the inescapable fact that the American government, by its fundamental structure and development, has much more to do with the situation than any failure of the schools themselves. A government of forty-eight particularistic and jealously provincial states is hardly likely to be made up of men from a select and urbane governing caste as in the England to which Fortune so respectfully points.

Besides the extreme decentralization of the American system, the general disreputable manner in which politics are carried on throughout a large part of this country has much to do with the reluctance of the more highly educated classes to enter the maelstrom of machine-ridden government. It is no idle quip when political observers say time and again that American politics is no place for a gentleman.

It is far more just to measure the training given by the prep schools by observing the records made by their graduates in the universities. Here there are no geographical or social bars to their competing with men from every type of school all over the country. Even Fortune admits, however grudgingly, that here students from the leading prep schools stand out more prominently than their comparative numbers warrant.

The problem of the class of citizens attending the prep schools is the problem of the United States itself. A victim of a grotesque system of government cannot by any manner of reasoning be named as its cause. America must realize, as England has long done, that members of the socially privileged classes have as much to offer the government as any other group of the population. Provincialism and gas-house politics have left their scars on this country, and until such failings are overcome, it is both futile and unfair to compare this country's schools with Eton and Harrow according to the number of leaders they have contributed to the government.

Student Peace Movement

The Editor, The Varsity.
Dear Sir:

In the news article in Friday's Varsity, concerning the recent National Peace Congress of the Student Peace Movement, the headlines used the word "Pacifists".

Certainly, there are many uses of that word. The ordinary connotation, however, is the absolute pacifist: he who refuses to go to war under any circumstances, regardless of all considerations of the situation. I would like to make it clear that the Student Peace Movement is not a pacifist organization in that sense. It would be unfortunate if this misapprehension were allowed to go abroad among the student body.

The Student Peace Movement makes only one assumption: that its members desire peace. We are convinced that the vast majority of the people of the world today want peace. We are convinced that the majority of the student body in Varsity want peace. We realize that there are greatly varying attitudes on this most important question. It was to enable all students desirous of working for peace to come together in common, that the Student Peace Movement was formed. While students do want peace, it must be obvious to most of us that there is a great amount of ignorance or misinformation concerning the causes of war, and even concerning the immediate dangers of war. All these problems should be discussed by every intelligent student. Every sincere student should be ready to help forward the cause of peace which is so vital to us all.

In conclusion may I express the hope that I have elucidated somewhat as to the nature of the Student Peace Movement. The Student Peace Movement would also urge all peace loving students to take a more active interest in its work.

Yours truly,

Ken Woodsworth.

Representative Robert Ramspeck of Georgia has announced that he plans to propose in the present session of Congress a bill limiting the speed of motor cars to 60 miles per hour.

Recklessness thrives on speed and as long as more speed is put under the hoods of automobiles, the accident toll will increase.

A maximum speed of 60 miles should allow anyone to get to his destination quickly enough.

One of the ironies of the great American public is the tendency to burn up the highways, endangering countless lives and property, in order to get somewhere ten minutes sooner. Then the speed demon does not know what to do with the time.

Toronto's new (well, second hand anyway) Mayor, Sam McBride, has quit harping about the McBrides being just plain folks, and has dug himself up a family coat of arms. There is a fancy scroll of Latin script, and above it a bird whose identity was the cause of some doubt until the Star ran its picture, with the explanatory cut line, MCBRIDE'S CREST A RAVEN. So is Sam most of the time.

We have several contributions to acknowledge which arrived just before Christmas, and very timely they were too, but since they no longer are quite so applicable we're afraid we'll have to pass them up. You remember away back when the three lads from Trinity got together on an epic condemning the proposed educational common rooms? They figured their hide-out was common enough already without letting the girls in,—but testifying to the fact that the feeling is mutual, in reply we received two other poems from two different feminine trios. Sorry, gals,—but the next time something gets under your skin come again and we'll have you give vent to your feelings. And keep it clean, Gotlieb.

Oh yes. Among other anonymous contributions was the post card which the Yorker received with a yellow label from a package of merchandise pasted on the Correspondence side. The label read, to the DISCRIMINATING TASTE and scrawled in the corner was the signature, Herman the Wiley.

NUTS

We put it up on the mantel with the rest of the compliments of the season, and let it go at that.

If you pronounce the Prof's name to rhyme with eye, rather than vice versa, everything comes out alright; and we'll be hearing from the newcomer Jemph again.

And we'll listen to none of your bright remarks about rhyming Mackay with vice versa, either.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Massey Hall

The engagement of Richard Hageman, the distinguished Dutch-American conductor and composer, as conductor of the six operas scheduled for production by the Canadian Grand Opera Association at Massey Hall on Saturday evenings, commencing February 1, under the supervision of Brahzen Urban, producer and impresario, gives to this Canadian venture an international flavour.

The Canadian Grand Opera Association is composed entirely of Canadian talent. The principals and chorus of 80, who will appear in all six operas, have been working with Mr. Urban almost nightly for months. The orchestra, originally scheduled to have 26 members, will be augmented to 36 in deference to Mr. Hageman.

Emory University, Atlanta, Ga.—Charles Hudson, a junior, walked around in a hypnotic state for three days, and didn't know it.

Hudson watched a demonstration of hypnotism by his professor, W. G. Workman who tried to hypnotize another student, but couldn't. The experiment was called a failure.

Hudson's friends noticed that he was acting queerly and finally took him to the student hospital, where physicians discovered he had been inadvertently hypnotized. The professor, because he had not purposely hypnotized the student, couldn't do anything about it. The hypnotism finally wore off.

Gentlemen,
Will you please be so kind to me as to let your student body know that I desire to correspond with some of them? I desire to learn all what I can about this vast country, far away from my small island, from the inhabitants themselves.

I will be glad to exchange anything that your students might want from me, especially postage stamps, books, newspapers, coins, photographs, etc. I willingly will write on Prehistoric Malta, or on other preferable subject to the students.

I hope that you will be glad to do me this favour, and I will appreciate your courtesy.

WEST END Y HAND INTERMEDIATE CAGERS FIRST LOSS

Varsity Seconds Vanquished By Rivals in Exciting Fracas

West End Y Team Assume Undefeated Leadership of Group

PLAY CLOSE THROUGHOUT

St. Mike's Gain Two Point Advantage Over Varsity
Grads

The victorious march of Varsity's intermediate basketball outfit was halted by West End Y last night in the big gym at Hart House. The Y team assumed undisputed leadership of the group as a result of their meritorious victory. The final score read 20-18, and gives a good indication of how close the play really was. The game was a typical battle for the leadership being fast with plenty of rough stuff behind the official's back. Even at that the ref caught plenty of it with nine fouls being called against West End and eleven against Varsity. Varsity scored six points via the free throw method while the visitors tallied the same number.

In the curtain raiser to the evening's doubleheader the St. Michael's College team eked out a close 22-20 victory over the Grads. The ex-students made a slow start but a strong rally in the second half had them tramping on the heels of the Bay Street team. However, the Irish had enough left to come on and force the Grads to continue without a win in the series.

Hanna with nine points was the high scorer for the winners while Dada was in second place with seven. Seot was the best for Grads and tallied seven points.

In the second game West End Y lost little time in going to work and netted six points before Varsity found the basket. This lead was wiped out by the Blue team on baskets by Powers and Hogg along with two singles by the latter. From this stage on play became of the see-saw variety with Scott scoring a basket just as the half ended to give the Y team a lead of 12-10 to start the final half. The play of Powers in this half was outstanding. The youngster was hard to stop when in close and netted three baskets as well as checking strenuously on the defensive side.

Play was just as close in the second half as it had been in the first with most of the points coming by the free throw route. After each squad had tallied two singles Daugherty broke loose and netted the sphere to notch the count. Play became faster and rougher as minutes ticked by and West End secured a six point lead. The closing minutes saw Varsity put on a really desperate rally, keeping play in enemy territory. Baskets by Powers and McLaughlin brought the team to within two points of a tie, but they could go no further.

For the visitors Pinn led the scoring, netting seven points, while Fox and Scott each notched five points. Powers for Varsity turned in his best performance to date. Hogg with five points was brilliant on the attack while Singer although he scored no baskets turned in a very creditable effort. Cooper, Daugherty and McLaughlin also attacked effectively, with the former being very strong defensively. Peters handled the team well from centre, handing out very accurate passes to his striving mates.

Varsity: McLaughlin, Singer 1, Peters 1, Daugherty 2, Powers 6, Hogg 5, Harlock, Cooper 1, Marling, Green.

West End: Graham 2, Daniels, Fox 5, Pinn 7, Taylor, Cook, Crosland, Thompson 1, Brownlee, Scott 5.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

The first intercollegiate basketball practice will take place tonight, from seven o'clock till eight-thirty, in the O.C.E. gym, and all girls wishing to try out for either the intermediate or senior teams should turn out. There are only five weeks before the Bronze Baby struggle, and it is essential that the team be picked as soon as possible. At McGill their team has been playing exhibition games since November, so it looks as if there will be some stiff opposition.

At the workout tonight permanent practice hours will be arranged, so it is important that everyone be there. Hazel Brown, who managed the intermediate team very competently last year, has been appointed manager for the senior team, and this should prove to be a very wise choice. If you are unable to attend the practice tonight, please inform Hazel at Ki. 3614.

The St. Hilda's badminton club is also stirring with activity. Plans are being made to run off some kind of tournament, on the courts at St. Paul's Anglican Church. The Saints have some very good players, who should form a strong team, in the persons of Betty Clement, the president of the University Badminton Club, Elspeth Chisholm, and Mary Becker, and have hopes of doing big things.

MEDS DEFEAT U.C. IN CLOSE GAME

Exciting Floor Play Shown in First Junior Tilt During Last Rally

The upper gym at Hart House yesterday afternoon was the scene of a lively and exciting basketball game between the junior teams from Meds and U.C., in which Meds emerged the victors by the score of 25-23.

Since this was the opening game of the interfaculty series the combination play of both teams was not what will be expected later in the season, but it was a lively and exciting game due to the closeness of the score and the rugged and strenuous brand of play.

Junior Meds opened the scoring and from then on it was a see-saw battle with first one and then the other team taking a slight lead. With a minute left to play U.C. were leading by 4 points, but Meds forged from behind to tie it up and with barely a second to go scored their winning basket.

Kimsey and Wise with five baskets each were the big guns for Jr. Meds while Holden played a nice game at guard. Botsford led the scorers from U.C. with 7 points, while Spring and Tepperman each had two baskets.

Jr. Meds: Laski, Kimsey 10, Wise 11, Cash, Metzler, Wales, Stewart 2, Holden, Dunn, Cork 2.

Jr. U.C.: Spring 4, Wigle, Beckett 2, Tepperman 4, Applebaum 2, Gerstein 2, Constam, Holt 2, Shiver, Botsford 7.

Prizes are to be awarded at 19 colleges and universities to those seniors who acquire the most interesting library during their college years—Carnegie Tartan.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George Vair

At a regular meeting of the T. and D. Basketball Association last night four men put through a vote to allow O'Hara and Murchie, two men who had signed and practiced with Broadview Seniors, to play for Danforth S.M.C., a team in the same group. The fireworks started when Mr. Silberburg, the playground representative, voted to re-open the O'Hara-Murchie case on the grounds of further evidence and was seconded by the Church League representative. The chairman moved it out of order but was overruled and the motion went through, but only after five voting representatives had walked out, evidently disgusted. Coach Rennick of Broadview; Mr. Harry Kennedy; Mr. Charters, Y.M.C.A. representative, and Mr. Baird were those who left.

The whole situation seems peculiar since two of the four men who passed the motion had missed the previous meeting and therefore did not know both sides of the case. It is further understood that the two players in question did not ask to have their case re-opened. Who then was behind last night's motion?

The solution of the situation may be reached when the Toronto Basketball League representatives hold a meeting tonight. In a previous meeting they decided not to allow O'Hara and Murchie to play for Danforth so anything may happen. It would be unfortunate if the league broke over a small matter which should have been settled long ago.

Tonight Varsity's senior hockey squad continue their futile search for victory in the O.H.A. series when they play Oakville at the Varsity Arena. The Villains are considerably stronger than they were at the first of the season when Varsity forced them to a 3-all tie, but like the Maple Leafs, seem to be in and outers. Playing like champions they defeated the powerful Toronto Dukes 1-0 but hit the skids in their next appearance, losing to Hamilton 10-2. Bailey's proteges are long overdue and with the advantage of playing on their own ice surface should make the Villains step for what is considered a soft two points in these days of sponsored teams, commercial clubs, and what have you?

Contrary to all previous newspaper reports Charles Pocius, Varsity heavyweight boxer, will not appear on the amateur card at Maple Leaf Gardens on Wednesday night. Johnnie Millson, IIS intercollegiate champion, who won his last fight in downtown competition, or Smith, will find a place on the card, however. Pocius is slated to meet the winner of tomorrow night's heavyweight fight in two weeks' time. Outside competition is just what these boys need since they get ring experience which cannot be had around the University. Thanks to the efforts of Frankie Brown, Dr. Les Black and the fighters themselves this year's boxing team looks to be the tops and it should earn valuable points in the intercollegiate assault at McGill early next month.

University College, which boasts the largest enrolment of any college on the campus (1137 students) can only scratch up enough baseball players for one team according to C. Laskin at last night's baseball meeting. With the current schedule already in print and the series underway somebody is in for some extra work straightening things out. The big college may lead in the production of musical comedies but they are slipping badly in the athletic line. How about it U.C.?

London—"Back to the Charleston" is the order for ballroom dancing in London this season. Five hundred teachers of the Imperial Society of Teachers of Dancing, the arbiters of ballroom dancing, have agreed unanimously that the Charleston shall return.

Vancouver, B.C.—Vancouver will apply to the postmaster general of Canada for the issuance of a special series of postage stamps commemorating the city's celebration next year of its golden jubilee, it is announced.

Reidsville, N.C.—Those who play with ice will get burned. Reidsville women have learned. Prizes were offered women who could hold a piece of "dry ice" longest. For several weeks the women nursed blisters.

Judging from evidences on the campus, education is learning as much as possible about as many things as possible—to enable one to be as narrow minded as possible about all of them.—Oklahoma Daily.

VIC TROUNCES TRINITY IN BASEBALL COMBAT

In the big gym of Hart House yesterday afternoon Trinity College lost the opening interfaculty baseball game to Senior Vic by a score of 16-2. The play was featured by many fumbles, but neither team has had a practice yet. Vic owed its win largely to the fine pitching of Saunders, who allowed only a few scattered hits. The losers failed to take advantage of their opportunities and the outfield especially let in several undeserved runs.

Trinity: Howitt, Campbell, Kernaghan, Carruthers, Nock, Delaney, Greenfield, Martin, Deeks, Bull, McNaughton. Sr. Vic: Ferguson, Colmer, Saunders, Folis, Fisher, Rannels, Tiller, Faux, Rodway, Beatty.

HEALTH PLAN CAUSES COMMENT

"We keep tab on the girls whose health we consider rather poor, and have them come in to be looked over periodically, during the academic year," Dr. Gordon stated. "But there always stands an open invitation for any members of the University who care to consult me, and I am only too glad, if they choose to do so."

Dr. G. D. Porter, Medical Advisor for the men, stated, "We have no method for getting definite record of every individual in the University, but no man may participate in athletics of any description without first undergoing a medical examination, in order to ensure a certain standard of health before taking part in energetic sports."

being and should be allowed to make up his own mind as to whether or not he wants relief. The case worker is there to help clarify his individual problems.

Miss Livesay continued, stressing the need for co-operation between social worker and unemployed. "They both want the same things," she said, "cash relief, trade union wages, and so on. And they have a common interest—security. Social workers themselves are not sure of their jobs or of their wages. This has led to organization, which idea is growing stronger, especially among relief workers."

CHANCE TO ATTEND OTHER COLLEGES

Under the plan the universities are divided into four groups—the University of British Columbia, the Universities of the Prairie Provinces, the universities of Ontario and Quebec, and the universities of the Maritimes.

Scholarships may be awarded only where a student of one university wished to obtain a scholarship at a university in a different "division". This is subject to one exception—Ontario students may apply for scholarships to French-Canadian universities in Quebec for the purpose of taking special studies in the French language and vice versa.

Any student, male or female, may apply if he is, at the time of his application, in the second year of his course or, in the case of five year courses, in the second or third year. It is a condition of each appointment that the Exchange Scholar must return, at the conclusion of his scholarship year to complete his course at his "home" university. Consequently a sophomore taking the usual four year Arts course may be awarded a scholarship for his third year; in the case of a five year course the scholarship may be awarded either for the third or fourth year. The scholarships are particularly easy to arrange in the Arts pass course. It is not necessary that the candidate be in his second year at university, so long as he is in the second year of his course.

An Exchange Scholar is expected to be a representative student of his home university in every way. It is not necessary that he should have a first class academic standing but he must be a competent student who will be able to enter freely into the life of the exchange university without fear of classroom consequences.

About eighty students have received Exchange Scholarships during the past seven years. This year a total of thirteen are enjoying the privileges of the Exchange Plan. In most cases the saving in tuition fees more than balances the transportation costs involved. Applications must be handed in to the N.F.C.U.S. representative before 1st March, 1936.

Moustaches Generally Deplored "Misplaced Eyebrows" to be Stored

A "slinky" woman, this paper is informed, is one with snake-like hips which wriggle in a fascinating fashion. And a recent survey revealed that non-slinky women prefer slinky co-eds. Non-slinky women are pacing the campus, in non-wriggling motion.

For, they say, 1936 is Leap Year. And what men prefer in women is of no account. This year the women have inherited the earth. The important thing to ascertain is what women want in men. And here it is.

"Do you," thousands of co-eds were asked yesterday, "prefer slinky men?" "We would rather," came the answer, "have men with no hips, especially on a crowded dance floor." Also, it was pointed out, flasks fit less conspicuously on hipless hiccupping co-eds.

"And finger-nails," they were asked, "are they to be tinted rosy red in our city?" The co-eds were embarrassed. They blushed. "Certainly not," was the unanimous reply, "in our city we want no such men." All that they asked was that the underside of the nails be free of foreign soil.

But on other matters the ideal man was portrayed in varying styles. The majority of co-eds preferred blondes, somewhat after the manner of the ancient Greeks. Moustaches were universally deplored, particularly those coloured ones the owners of which used eye-brow pencil which was not kiss-proof. Heavy shoulders were an essential, but wasp waists were not popular. "Give me a good substantial man—one with a beard," shouted one young lady from the window of a university residence to a fleeing blonde-moustached reporter.

Discussing the age-old custom whereby girls propose to men during Leap Year, no reluctance (to propose) was shown by the thousands interviewed. One young reporter came back engaged to be married to six different Annesley girls. Another—perhaps more chaste and beady—sent a telegram from Niagara Falls. It merely said—"Wish you were here too."

We Wish We Were too.

Wish you were here too.

CANADIAN PICTURES DISCUSSED BY LISMER

In commenting on the individual pictures after his lecture, Mr. Lismer pointed out especially the contrast between the type of subject usual in Canadian pictures and such young cultures as that developing in South Africa. The South African scene he typified as classical, with an emphasis on mass images; the Ontario scene, on the other hand displayed Gothic characteristics, with an emphatic tendency towards the centralization of form.

CRIME A DISEASE—ROGERS

forces of the law during the last 25 years, Professor Rogers told how he began with a civil case in Hamilton and later investigated criminal cases, usually poisonings. Comparatively recently he has taken up the study of "bullet holes" and their significance.

In one case which he cited the professor said he retired to the country carrying a service rifle and some clothes and proceeded to fire bullets into the clothing until he was satisfied that service ammunition did leave powder stains. He was quite astounded, he stated, to find that the cordite used in the explosive, left hair-like traces around the bullet holes, when the shot was fired at close range. It is quite a different stain from that left by ordinary powder.

In speaking of alcoholic poisoning, which seems to be a common occurrence judging from the number of instances spoken of, Mr. Rogers said that many cases resulted from over-consumption of what he termed "good liquor" but that many more were caused by the drinking of "swamp" whiskey, that is, poorly made and unaged liquor.

Continuing, he said that when the blood contains from 1 to 3 parts per 1000 of alcohol, the subject is in a convivial mood; from 4 to 6 parts brings on an ugly temper (this is the condition which is the cause of many major crimes) and that 7, 8 or more parts per 1000 bring about a stage where he is "blotto". It was made clear that the determination of the percentage of alcohol in the blood at the time of an accident or crime is of great importance in enabling the court to place the blame.

In the course of his discussion Professor Rogers told of methods used in detecting counterfeit coins, in determining the type and quantity of poison contained in a human stomach, and of common practices of persons committing arson.

Concluding, he stated the case of a very neat job of double suicide and said that it was in his view the job of a woman.

"Not knowing much about psychology," he said, "I feel quite qualified to use it, and I have generally found that where a man, when provoked, likes 'shotgun methods', a woman prefers some course of action which does not involve a mess."

Charity Grant, a member of the German Club, plays the part of his wife, Susanna, the daughter, is played by Madeleine Cummins. The role of Adolf Beringer, Susanna's fiancé, is played by Arthur Wells. This part is that of a civil servant who finds his public career endangered by the supposed action of the burgomaster. The rest of the cast are also members of the German Club and are promising good support, especially in character roles such as that of Josef Schweigel, the owner of a brewery, and Arthur Bernstein in the role of a retired major, a brother of the burgomaster.

The play itself, a realistic modern comedy, is a fine choice. The talent of the German Club should shine undimmed in Hart House, we are glad to see them there and hope they shall have the support which they deserve on the opening night, that of January 27.

U.C. Juniors and Seniors
Herald Big Event Next Week

NOTEWORTHY PATRONAGE

With the announcement of plans for the University College Junior-Senior Formal, considerable interest in this event has been forthcoming. The dance, which will be held on Friday, January 24, at Hunt's Savarin, has assumed a flavour entirely different from any such function hitherto staged. Formal dress and refreshments are two innovations which have elicited very favourable comments. Programs will be provided for the dancing, which will be to the strains of Eddie Stroud's popular nine-piece Savarin orchestra. Rumour has it that the ballroom will be resplendent with decorations in University College colours. Most important of all, the Junior-Senior Formal is being hailed as the first formal party easily within range of the undergraduate's pocket-book capacity.

Miss M. B. Ferguson, Dean of Women in University College, and the wives of Principal Wallace, Dean Cochrane and W. J. McAndrew, Registrar of University College, have kindly lent their patronage to this eagerly anticipated function.

London, Jan. 13: Prime Minister Baldwin was assailed by members of the Conservative party when he suggested the support of the Dominions secretary, Malcolm Macdonald in the forthcoming by-election.

Aided by Professor Thompson of the Royal Ontario Museum, great care has been taken to ensure authenticity in costumes and settings, one of the officials of the Fountain Club, sponsors of the play, informed The Varsity yesterday.

The Fountain Club, an organization of youthful players, are endeavouring to discover, study and produce three-act Canadian plays in this city. They feel that with such aims they are deserving of the support of university men and women.

CLASSICAL SOCIETY HOLDS MEETING

Modern Biology Is Indebted to Aristotle for True
Scientific Spirit

COVENTRY SPEAKS

Professor A. F. Coventry, speaking to the Victoria Classical Society on the influence of Aristotle to the field of modern biology, stated that his most important contribution was the true scientific spirit, a fact which is all the more remarkable since he carried on scientific thought in a century devoid of all scientific equipment.

In his biological studies he described no less than 520 species of animals, a great achievement for his time. The comparative method was introduced by him in this treatise, on which all modern scientific treatises are based. Although known by his forerunners, it was not a method with which they were greatly concerned and it was Aristotle who developed it.

Aristotle put animals into three classifications: plants, animal, and man, plants being a neuter soul in the sense that they are alive; animals with a sensitive soul, and man with a rational soul. By this he came to the conclusion of a unity underlying all superficial diversity, a theory which became one of the props of Darwin's evolution doctrine.

Embryology was his most brilliant work although he was handicapped by a lack of instruments and he developed the principles of recapitulation, that is, that a higher animal goes through a series of conditions which resemble a

CALLAGHAN WILL WRITE A PLAY; MENTIONS DEBT TO HEMINGWAY

Tely Appreciates Yorker's Humour

The Varsity's own waggish columnist, The Muddy Yorker, has entered into Toronto's municipal political controversy through the medium of the Evening Telegram. Yesterday the Champus Cat, commenting on the fact that Mayor Sam McBride's family coat of arms included a raven added that "So is Sam most of the time."

Thinking it a bright quip the Tely, who championed candidate Hunt in the mayoralty contest this year and lost, put it on the front page at the top and the Yorker's fame spread through the whole 150,000 net paid circulation.

Callaghan Criticizes Well Known Writers

LAUOS TOLSTOI'S PROSE

Describing Sherwood Anderson as his "intellectual father", Morley Callaghan, speaking in the Hart House Library last night claimed that writer to be the strongest influence in his life. Mr. Callaghan addressed some hundred and fifty graduates and undergraduates at Library Night on "My Leisure Reading."

"Reading Sherwood Anderson," he said, "shaped the course of my life. His work stimulated me and opened up a world that was familiar to me. Most American writing that is vital began with Anderson, he claimed, and at his best he is to be ranked with Chekhov and De Maupassant."

English writers of the near past came under the verbal fire of this foremost Canadian novelist. Arnold Bennett he said was a tradesman, and of H. G. Wells it "is sad to see him settling down to be an old hack." Galsworthy he said he had always deemed a second rate Flaubert, vastly over-rated. Of Kipling he said that no one had ever written better. "He is a man," he claimed, "who, if he had died fifteen years ago, would have been a great" (Continued on Page 4)

DR. STEPHEN LEACOCK RETIRED FROM MCGILL GOING TO HARVARD

Boston, Jan. 14.—It was rumoured here today that Dr. Stephen Leacock, professor of political economy at McGill University, and noted essayist and humorist, is being considered for appointment as the first of the inter-department professors at Harvard University.

Prof. Leacock is being retired from McGill University next August. Commenting on the plan of the McGill authorities to retire him, Prof. Leacock said several weeks ago: "I will have plenty to say; and I will have all eternity to shout it down to them."

Harvard officials declined to comment. The plan for the roving professorships was recently announced as part of Harvard's observance of the tercentenary of its founding. Thomas W. Lamont, New York financier, recently gave the university $500,000 as the endowment for the professorship.

Eminent Canadian Novelist to Write Play, American in Subject Matter

'NOVEL NOT PASSING AWAY'

Believes His Best Book was
"They Shall Inherit the Earth"

By John F. Peterson

Morley Callaghan is writing a play. The eminent Canadian writer has temporarily left the field of the novel, in which he has had marked success, and has gone over to the theatre, he informed this paper last night, following his address in Hart House Library.

Engaged in research for the past month, Mr. Callaghan has just begun the actual writing of his play, and little information was available concerning its subject matter. It will be distinctively American, he said, to the same extent that his other work has been. But he pointed out that no work can be distinctive to Canada alone. It can be local, and as such would differ from a play of the New England states or Ohio, but it would still be true of a large part of the United States.

Asked to name the book by his own hand which he considered to be his best, Mr. Callaghan unhesitatingly replied that it was his latest, "They Shall Inherit the Earth." "It is undoubtedly my most ambitious work," he said. In reply to a question asked as to the Canadian sale of his books, he said that they are not of great importance. "I am dependent entirely on the readers of the United States for my living," he stated.

It is difficult to estimate his indebtedness to Hemingway, he said, for he knew that writer before either had begun to write. Hemingway was the first person who encouraged him and had faith in his ability. They worked together for some time on the Toronto Daily Star.

Mr. Callaghan refuses to believe that the day of the novel as an art form (Continued on Page 4)

Toronto Males Lack Technique? Them Gals Have a Lot of Cheek!

The girls at the University of Toronto just don't seem to have the courage of their convictions. In search of a story about what leap year means to them, this reporter stopped several girls most of whom had very definite ideas and stated them. But when it came to a question of giving their names, the lassies were coy and needed plenty of coaxing. And even when they got it, they wouldn't give in.

Kay Killoun and Gen Conlin, however, both of St. Mike's, who expressed themselves frankly and freely, broke the jinx by commenting.

The Misses Killoun and Conlin were heartily in favour of the old leap year traditions. Miss Killoun was slightly worried though, because of eight proposals, she had only received one dress. The other seven had accepted. Miss Conlin thinks it's up to the boys to complain. Personally, she's for the leap year traditions and will use them if she has to.

Constance Bailey of U.S. thinks there's no need of leap year traditions. She just lets the men come to her, rather than chase them. Dorothy Brandon, U.C., doesn't see why leap year is necessary, anyway. May Taylor also thinks it's a bad idea but "nice for some people". Bessie Hadler had almost the same line.

Winifred Alston, U.C., is all for the old traditions, although she doesn't intend to make use of them. Edna Aziz thinks it would be a good lesson to men.

The Southern drawl sisters, Midge and Polly Shaw, are heartily in favour. Polly thinks it's a good chance for girls to show men how things should be done. Midge says that even the supposedly sophisticated men of Toronto lack technique.

Miss Brandon, previously mentioned, spoke of a law which has gone into effect in some small Canadian town. Any man bothered by a leap year lass can have the girl prosecuted.

The men interviewed all claimed that they would be perfectly willing to be asked instead of doing the asking this year. All, except one, declared gently but firmly that he wouldn't shave his mustache for any girl. The one was on his way home to remove the lip adornment when stopped. Incidentally, of all girls interviewed, only Miss Conlin disliked mustaches.

CONDITIONS BETTER AT MAIN LIBRARY

Staff Members Responsible for Many Missing Books

FEWER FINES TO OATE

Borrowers of books from the University Library are now keeping them in better condition than usual. Fines to date are below average. The chief offenders in the matter of missing books are staff members, graduates, and a few others with access to the stack room.

The wholesale mutilation of books that existed at the library last year does not exist at present. Mr. Wallace attributes the improved situation to severe penalties imposed on a few offending undergraduates last year. The exhibition of spoiled books had a tempering effect on the students, he said. While no major destruction of books are occurring, petty offences have not ceased. A great number of readers insist on emphasizing passages with pen and pencil marks.

As a rule the fines for retaining books overdue vary but slightly from year to year. However, this year the penalties imposed in regard to late books have diminished considerably from last year.

Few, if any, books are lost from the reading room and open shelves. Those permitted to use the stack room are the cause of many lost books. Professors and graduate students take the books from the shelves and neglect to enter them in the register. Very often such books are misplaced by the users and there being no record of the whereabouts the library cannot recover them.

Mr. Wallace gave an example of this, an incident that happened recently. The estate of a deceased staff member was being closed and his library sold to bookshops. In the lot were found two volumes inadvertently removed from the University Library. The dates on the cards indicated it had been taken out before the fire in 1897.

SNYDER WILL DELIVER ALEXANDER LECTURES ON ROBERT BURNS

Robert Burns is to be the general topic of the Alexander Lectures this year. They are to be delivered by Dean Franklyn Snyder of Northwestern University, who is a well-known authority on the subject. His book, "The Life of Burns" is perhaps the most complete and thoroughgoing that has been written on the subject.

There are to be three lectures, the first, on January 29th has for its topic "His Personality"; the second, on January 30th, "His Reputation"; and the third on January 31st, "His Art". The lectures will all be delivered in Hart House Theatre at five o'clock and as the topics indicate, promise to be most interesting.

Dean Snyder is dean of the Graduate School of Northwestern University and is also head of the English Department there. This will be the first time he has spoken at the University of Toronto, but his reputation has preceded him, and has assured the popularity of the lectures this year.

RIPLEY SCORES

Allen Bros. Best for Oakville;
Varsity Defence Show
Big Improvement

By Frank Lamberti

In a spirited, bitterly fought contest the Varsity senior O.H.A. squad dropped further into the limbo of the defeated as the shifty Oakville sextet slanted off the Varsity Arena ice surface last night with a 4-1 victory. Throughout the game both teams resorted to wide open playing and the Varsity cohorts gained a slight edge in the exchanges, but the fast moving Teno was equal to the occasions as the Blue men pressed hard in the Oakville territory.

The Allen brothers, Pearcey and Saral, were outstanding in the Oakville victory, scoring three counters, while Ripley, McIlquham and Jeffrey stood out for Varsity. The defensive work of Charles and Driscoll showed great improvement, and checked many Oakville sallies to a standstill.

The intense rivalry between the two squads as the game continued finally flared up in the third period as P. Allen after being buffeted around in a sea of Varsity defensive waves, attempted to slash Valiquette, resulting in a fast exchange of blows, with both players being sent off to the penalty bench.

SEVERAL FOUND MUTILATED

Of the many books which have been taken from Hart House library, only one has been returned to date.

When questioned, a member of the library committee emphasized the fact that books could be left at the Hall Porter's desk and no questions asked. He further stated that there are possibilities of again locking the library, which has now been thrown open, thus making its privileges inaccessible to all members of Hart House unless those guilty return the missing books.

The upkeep of the library is paid for out of the $10 fee, the payment of which is made compulsory for all undergraduates. The cost of buying new books is covered by the Massey Foundation.

The committee member remarked that at a recent meeting of the committee, a resolution was passed that in the future no more pocket-size books be purchased.

It was also learned that besides a great number of books pilfered, there were many, still in the library, bearing the marks of vandalism. Among those with pages torn out or cut up are Briffault's Europa, D. H. Lawrence's Women in Love, and Morley Callaghan's Such is My Beloved. The (Continued on Page 4)

Amateurism Throttled By Hand-made Rules

The recent furore in basketball circles regarding the position of two basketball players who are signed to play with one team and wish to play with another is merely another indication of the fact that some serious thinking regarding athletics is long overdue.

For some time it has been evident that amateur sport is becoming strangled in its own red tape. Sentiment and figures may still attempt to elevate it to a pedestal above that of the much maligned professionals, but the instances where amateur bodies, after several seasons of apparently successful operation find themselves unable to send competitors to compete in national events is too numerous to be overlooked.

Amateurism has long been regarded as a branch of sport in which gentlemen only competed. But gentlemen must eat. Unfortunately the fare has often been slim indeed in the amateur ranks, while professionals have been living in luxury. Percy Williams, once a national hero, an amateur whose name was a by-word, with such drawing power that it attracted thousands into the stands to see him perform, but a man who remained amateur, will serve as an example. Contrast his present position, that of a poorly paid salesman, with the position of Jimmie McLarnin, a boy from the same town, who also became a national hero, but turned professional—and became independently wealthy. The advantage is all in favour of McLarnin. Such examples are numerous. And all point to the fact that the amateur code is somewhat picturesque but useless.

It has long ceased to be regarded as a social sin to accept remuneration for any hobby at which a person may be proficient. In the case of sport there seems to be little room for exceptions. If the amateur officials get paid for their services, why then should it be such a horrible offense for the performers themselves to be paid. Spectators pay to watch them. The staff of the Arena or Stadium get paid. The officials get paid. It is in every way a business proposition. Everyone gets paid but the people who actually put on the show. Viewed purely objectively this does not appear to balance.

The players in the basketball question appear to want to play somewhere else than where they have signed. Just why any man should not play when and where he wishes to play since he is doing it purely for the love of the game is slightly obscure. True, he may cause inconvenience to the teams—but is he not himself suffering some inconvenience when he devotes his time and energy to the entertainment of others?

Amateur squabbles have been so numerous in the past few years that they are rapidly becoming a joke. Always there is the same charge. Someone has violated some hand-made rules and therefore stands suspended from the form of athletic endeavour to which he devotes his time. Petty politicians and armies of officials have usually been the cause of the entire proceedings. And it all amounts to inefficiency.

As we see it, amateurism must either shake off the shackles of convention and follow the dictates of reason or succumb to the influence and superior drawing power of the professionals. As it stands it is bankrupt. Why men who want to play for the fun of playing should be so restricted is a minor problem. Why red tape plays such an important part in the proceedings is also a minor problem. But these, together with several other minor problems constitute a major problem which must be solved. If they wish to turn professional, why not? If they wish to play for fun, then why impose on them rules, regulations and official machinations which limit them even more than do the rules which govern the professionals who play for a living and not for enjoyment.

National Scholarships

A plan for national scholarships is to be launched at the next session of the House of Commons. Legislatures move slowly; the same bill was under discussion a year ago, but though late in arriving such a measure is to be greatly applauded.

This scholarship scheme, which if adopted will provide university education for 1,000 boys and girls who would otherwise not be able to pay their way, has as its basis the desire to train for leadership. The scholars will be chosen, not merely for scholastic ability, but chiefly on the qualifications of character and temperament.

One of the greatest lacks in present-day society is trained and experienced leaders. Men hate to admit that they are mortal and that a time will come when someone else must take their place. History is full of instances where good and efficient administrations fell to pieces on the death of a strong leader because he had neglected to train a successor.

Undoubtedly there are many such persons who, not being brilliant scholars, do not qualify for existing scholarships which are awarded on a competitive basis judged by an examination system which is almost universally admitted to be no real test of ability. For these people a new day is about to dawn if the proposed bill goes through.

Athletic Hypocrisy

Action of the Southeastern conference in opening its doors to athletes for financial assistance has drawn considerable comment from other sections of the country with many university officials and coaches expressing approval of this frank move.

The adoption of this amendment which places athletic ability on a high plane in determining student values was generally interpreted by coaches of that sector as a step to eliminate hypocrisy.

The amendment contains a clause limiting the financial assistance an athlete may receive to "legitimate expenses" which naturally enough include fees, books, board and lodging. While this clause may offer a loop-hole through which rival institutions may conduct wholesale biddings for services of valuable athletes, the light of publicity would undoubtedly prove a boomerang to such activities.

Colleges and universities from coast to coast have for many years assisted athletes in various financial ways in spite of conference rulings strictly prohibiting this practice.

Unfavourable public opinion, gained from erroneous impressions and sensational headlines has been regularly loosed upon those schools unfortunate enough to be tagged guilty. Their ends could only be accomplished through hypocrisy and secrecy although their offense in this connection was no greater than hundreds of others.

The taint of criminal conspiracy attached to such practices in all probability will soon be erased with the enactment of similar legislation in other sections of the country. The trail has been broken and another antiquated idea is due for an overthrow.—Oklahoma Daily.

Group Legal Service

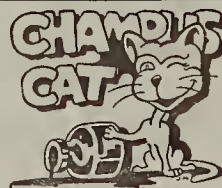

High schools and colleges over the nation are debating the question of socialized medicine and this theory has been put into practice in a number of communities.

Equally interesting is socialized legal service which has not yet been given much serious consideration.

A recent magazine article gave facts concerning a plan devised by an attorney who was retained for a nominal fee by a number of labouring families. Through this service each family was enabled to procure the services of an attorney when they needed advice about property deeds, accidents, wills and the number of occurrences which draw private citizens into the network of our American judicial system.

The additional fees are specifically limited. By this means men who would otherwise be unable to afford an attorney and would be lost in the maze of legal technicalities and the red tape of our metropolitan courts are adequately provided for.

In the future this plan may prove to be one of the methods for giving to the middle class the comforts and necessities which the capitalistic system denies them.—Oklahoma Daily.

The polished bards of ancient Rome,
As Horace and Catullus.

Propound a creed in massive tome,
With wish that they should gull us.

"Wine, women, song," they advocate,
Can easily drown all sorrow;
And these, they say, obliterate,
All care about the morrow.

Alas, that men as great as these,
Should be so much mistaken,
When any man makes trial, he sees,
That they were surely fakin'.

For wine indulged in to excess,
Intent to drown all sorrow,
Bequeaths to man, we must confess,
A headache on the morrow.

And woman too with all her charm,
(Or else that you may call it)
Promotes incalculable harm,
And empties purse or wallet.

Excruciating agony,
Is caused by modern music;
Blues when sung in harmony,
Have made more than a few sick.

Instead of these, I advocate,
A call I can't refuse;
To all your cares expatriate,
Invoke th' elusive Muse.

And all you men who've suffered long,
Take heed, receive a tip from me;
Give up your women, wine and song,
And take to writing poetry.

About Books

"Where shall I begin, please your Majesty?" asked the White Rabbit. "Begin at the beginning," the King said, gravely, "and go on till you come to the end, then stop."—Alice in Wonderland.

Taking His Majesty's sage advice, then, we begin at the beginning.

This is a literary column in the sense that it is intended for discourses on literary subjects in general. It is not a column for book reviews, nor for learned dissertations on modern authors and their works. There will be no appeal to the illuminati; all we wish to do in this column is to discuss, leisurely and informally, those books which we have found to be of value to ourselves in our reading.

Whatever expressions of opinion which may be found in this column during the course of these literary rambles will be the personal opinions of the writer himself. We have no axe to grind; no doctrines or particular viewpoints to urge. Nor have we any greater ambition for this column than that it will be worth your while to read it. We are going to write about books; about all ages, all sorts, all conditions of books; our function is that of a reporter with a note-book turned loose to wander over the whole wide world of writing. Today we may report from the present or the future, tomorrow from the middle ages or goodness knows where.

One thing more; as has been stated above we emphatically repudiate the use of the term "book-reviewing" in connection with this column. We have no mind to sit in the seat of the scornful—not at our time of life. We lay no claim to superior wisdom; your opinion is as good as ours, and you are quite entitled to disagree with our opinions or our conclusions. If you have a trenchant pen and a ready flow of language in which to express your disagreement, so much the better. Let us hear from you.

AUTHOR DISCUSSES WRITING OF NOVELS

Book Reviewing Is Considered Good Training for Young Novelist

BARBARA STURGIS SPEAKS

"The main thing in writing a novel is to see how much of it you can pare away, and still preserve the essence of the characters and situations," Miss Barbara Sturgis, author of "The Young Barbarians", in an address to the Women's Press Club, gave this advice on the writing of the novel. "You must decide what your novel is really about, and then when you have the centre of the story, begin working from this focus."

If the writer is inexperienced, he should deal with a subject with which he is absolutely familiar, said Miss Sturgis. Even to write a novel about life fifty years ago, raises many problems which leave one completely at sea. There are, however, many things which one knows instinctively when one begins to write a novel—what kind of cushions the villainess uses, and what kind of books the hero likes.

"The most encouraging thing about the novel today is that it is living art form, it is constantly being developed and taking on new aspects." Here Miss Sturgis gave as an example Strang's new novel, "Sunset in Ebony". The action of the novel takes place in only one day. Each chapter too, said Miss Sturgis.

BASKETBALL TRIPLE-HEADER AT HART HOUSE TO-NIGHT

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

The basketball practice last night was a bit disappointing. Both the coaches were there, but only ten girls turned out. Billy McGarry and Kay Grubbe of last year's senior team were there, but Kay Brown and Edie Ardag were among the missing. Because of academic work Edie won't be playing this year, and her absence will certainly be felt.

The next practice will be on Friday, from six to seven-thirty, and it is hoped that many more will be there. The coaches would like to see Erna Laing, Marjorie Leslie, and Muriel Beaton of Vic, and Pat Pethick, Betty Robinson, Alice Elshout and Enor Kennedy of U.C. out on the floor, and many others of intercollegiate calibre. There was any amount of freshie material in the interfaculty games, and surely enthusiasm hasn't died yet. There are only five weeks before the Bronco Baby struggle, so let's have some action.

Don't forget about the intercollegiate hockey practice today, from one to two in Varsity Stadium. It's an awkward time we know, but it is about the only available hour. Since the girls can play both intercollegiate and interfaculty this year, chances for a Varsity team look pretty good.

There will be a meeting of the Swimming Club executive and college representatives tomorrow at five-thirty in the Physical Education office in the Lillian Massey building. The purpose of the meeting is to decide upon a date for the interfaculty swimming meet, which will probably be held in Hart House as usual.

Attention!

The training season of the U. of T. Rowing Club officially opens today at 5 p.m., when the portals of the rowing room will be thrown open to all comers. No previous experience is necessary and as there are both light and heavyweight crews, all types of men are welcome, and will receive coaching. Prospects for a big season are very bright and there are plenty of vacancies in personnel to be filled. The rowing room is beside the swimming pool gallery, north-east corner.

Johnnie Millson Meets Mel Glionna

There will be five fast rounds at Maple Leaf Gardens tonight when Johnnie Millson, Varsity's only intercollegiate champion, steps into that crafty veteran of the mitt-game, Mel Glionna. Chas. Pocius will not appear on this card but will probably meet the winner of the heavyweight bout a week from Thursday, January 23rd.

Johnnie Millson will be hard-pressed to maintain his record of not a single loss in open competition in two years, his opponent, having perhaps the best record of any amateur boxer in Canada. Glionna has regularly defeated leading boxers of both Canada and the U.S.A. and has turned down more than one chance to go to the Olympics. However, after more than ten years in competition, Glionna is becoming dangerously old and may well find his match in the fiery-headed, hard-hitting Varsity lad.

Johnnie Millson, who last year won the 118 lb. intercollegiate title, will give a pound or two weight advantage to Glionna, who will be fighting at 126 lbs. This means little—only a few weeks ago Johnnie defeated a 130 lb. opponent. Johnnie boxes with a regular style without a lot of fancy footwork and is particularly adept at coming in fast at opportune moments. He can take a lot of punishment if need be, and make no mistake, he can hand it right back. A number of knockouts bear witness to his ability to hit.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crocker

By the time this is being read the Blue basketballers will be well on their way to Schenectady, N.Y., where they are scheduled to meet Union College tonight. Tomorrow evening they are to visit Williams-town where they engage Williams College. Friday has been left open for rest purposes and on the following night the Blues will be the guests of Rochester University in Rochester. This, the last half of the annual U.S. tour should turn out to be quite a holiday for the boys as they'll be visiting the home town of both Hughie Marks and Joe Connelly. Now if the Blues can bring back a victory or two and if nobody on the squad develops symptoms of measles, mumps or scarlet fever, everything will be fine. The team will be under the care of Mac McCutcheon, as Warren Stevens did not accompany the squad. The Blues will be weakened defensively as Phil Gold, the captain of the team couldn't get away.

For most of the games played up at the Arena this hockey season Ace Bailey's squad enjoyed the support of about two hundred or more students who could be counted upon to attend regularly. However, most of these student "regulars" stayed at home last night and as a result missed one of the best games the Blues have turned in this year. The score was four to one in favour of Oakville but the final count fails to really reveal just exactly how close the play was. It was great hockey and for the most part Bailey's lads were on even terms. Had the breaks of the game gone the other way the final score might easily have been the other way around. Referee Bruce Paul was very lenient with wrong-doers and everyone expected fireworks to break out. The trouble finally broke out in the third period when P. Allen and Valiquette tangled in the corner. Somehow or other Lenahan got mixed up in the clinch and the trio hit the ice with a bang. It took Paul almost two minutes to separate the fighters. Then the argument started. Paul sent Lenahan and Allen off for majors. Ace refused to go so Paul turned on Valiquette. The latter also was very reluctant to depart from the scene of his recent victory but was finally persuaded to leave.

Charles Driscoll, playing with Bruce Charles on defence, adopted a body-checking offensive last night and the Highwaymen of Oakville didn't like it a bit. They actually became angry. Pearcey Allen was singled out for special treatment and the speedy winger received many hard jolts. Driscoll hit him so hard on one occasion that the older of the Allen brothers had to be led off the ice for a short rest. The fans liked this new plan of action at the Varsity blue line so let's have more of it. Just as a final word we'd like to add a word of praise Horton Shipman in the Blue nets turned in a splendid effort all through the game. The four goals registered against him were well-earned.

The junior hockey squad received another setback last night, this time at the hands of Native Sons. As a result their chances for a position in the group playoffs received a deadly chill.

Six basketball teams will be paraded for the fans in Hart House tonight and the price of admission is only ten cents. The Varsity Seconds must win to keep close to the heels of the fast-travelling West End Y squad who have yet to taste defeat.

SR: VIC, SR. U.C. WIN BASKETBALL

Typical Early-Season Games with Wild Passing, Poor Shooting

S.P.S. PLAY ROUGH

Two interesting interfaculty basketball games played in the upper gym yesterday afternoon resulted in Sr. U.C. winning a hard-fought game from Trinity 33-20, and Sr. Vic defeating Sr. S.P.S. 24-21.

The first game was a weird exhibition of wild passing, rough checking and generally loose basketball. Both teams showed lack of practice.

Sr. U.C. opened up the play right from the start and earned an 8-3 lead but Trinity came back with a surprising rally to be ahead at half-time 16-12. In the second period, however, Trinity, because of faulty shooting and tight-checking by U.C., were held to four points while the men of Mirsky were garnering 21 for themselves.

Eaton, with 5 baskets, was top scorer for Trinity while Damsky with three baskets and a foul shot and Casson with 5 baskets and a foul shot were outstanding for U.C.

MacCutcheon's II's All Set to Repeat Victory Over Senecas

Tonight finds Hart House gymnasium the scene of a triple-header basketball battle with W.E.Y., Senecas, and St. Michael's scheduled to meet the Varsity junior, intermediate and Grad squads respectively. Judging from the number of fouls made in previous tilts, it is predicted that a variety of rough tricks will be unleashed and that plenty of excitement can be expected by the cage fans.

With Powers, Hogg and Daugherty playing the same outstanding game they played on Monday against W.E.Y., the Varsity IIs may reasonably be expected to repeat their former success against the visiting Senecas. Coach Mac McCutcheon has tuned the Varsity team for a "slay", and with the Senecas rumoured to be showing particularly good form lately, plenty of action may be expected in this match.

PHARMACY SLUGGERS DEFEAT SR. SCHOOL BY ONE-SIDED SCORE

Pharmacy swamped Sr. S.P.S. in an interfaculty baseball game played in the Hart House gym yesterday afternoon by a score of 11-2.

At 5 o'clock, which is the deadline for interfaculty baseball games, only three and a half innings had been played but, since S.P.S. only scored two runs in the first half of the fourth, the final score was taken as it stood at the end of three innings of play. The poor showing of the School team was partly due to the fact that they have not held any practices this season.

Pharmacy accumulated two runs in the first, three in the second and ran wild in the third to score six runs, with the whole team coming to bat at least once in this inning.

CALLAGHAN CRITICIZES WELL KNOWN WRITERS

man. As it is, all his friends are busy trying to prove that he is still a great writer." But in intellect he said Kipling is still an English public school boy.

Mr. Callaghan, while considering Charles Dickens to be possibly the greatest novelist in the English language, said that he is not attracted to his work. "And I would never be a member of a Dickens Club." Comparing Dickens with Priestly, he said that "If Dickens is an English plum pudding then Priestly is one that has gone cold." Thackeray he described as a snob.

Placing the "Confessions of a Young Man" of George Moore as "a landmark in my life", the speaker asserted that writer was among the greatest of any age. "When he died the last figure in English literature passed." Through Moore he said he was introduced to the whole field of French writers who, he said, have been of great value to him. Flaubert's "Madame Bovary" he saw as "probably the greatest novel ever written."

From the French writers, Mr. Callaghan moved on to the English. Chaucer, he said, he found to hold a certain naive quality that makes his work such that it could almost have been written today, were it not for the language. "Shakespeare was never a great stimulant to him, he went on, and the only blame for that he laid to the fact that he had been taught his works in school at an early age.

"Dostoevsky, Tolstoi, and Chekhov are now the most important writers to me," he continued. "I would say that Tolstoi is the greatest writer in prose the world has known."

Asked his opinion of the work of James Joyce, Mr. Callaghan said, "I think Ulysses is the one book written in the last fifteen years which will live."

In the discussion which followed the address, Mr. Callaghan was asked his opinion of the work of Alexander Woolcott. "The influence of Woolcott is simply horrible," he said. "I think he's a terrible writer. He's just an old softie," he concluded.

CALLAGHAN TO WRITE AN AMERICAN PLAY

is passing. "Only writers pass away," he said. "The novel will live on in the work of others." The poetic drama he does not see as an important art form. And between the prose and poetry of the present day he finds little difference. "Poetry and prose are now almost entirely fused into one form," he said.

Speaking of the place of "preaching" in the novel as a work of art, Mr. Callaghan said that a certain amount is permissible, but that it must never be accentuated to take the important place in the book. He agreed that Conrad's credo, as expressed in the Preface to the "Nigger of the Narcissus", was possibly the greatest standard any writer could adopt. He told of having read Conrad practically in his entirety, but denied having been influenced to any extent whatever by his writings.

Morley Callaghan was graduated from St. Michael's College in 1925, after a course in General Arts. He took part in debates, and was a speaker at the first Hart House debate. It was in the library of the house that he first became interested in reading, he said, and he spent long hours there, curled up on one of the chesterfields, reading.

of Horton Shipman was superb, thwarting the Oakville thrusts, until in a gangling attack S. Allen came through to score Oakville's first counter on a pass from Campbell. Jeffrey missed a great opportunity to tie the score as he had a clear shot on goal, but the puck went wide of the mark.

Captain Normie McClelland broke fast on the opening gong of the second frame to try Teno, but the Oakville goal custodian turned it aside. Play opened considerably and on a fast breaking rush by P. Allen and Townsley, Oakville notched its second counter.

The Varsity defense began harassing the Oakville forwards and moved play into the Villans territory, and with but minutes to go Ripley put the disc past Teno.

Continuing their hard checking attack Varsity tried time and again to beat Teno but with no result, as Oakville maintained their lead in the final period. On a rush P. Allen was slowed up considerably. S. Allen put the Villans further in the lead, beating Shipman from close in and Peer, the hard-working right wingman, finally had his efforts rewarded as he flipped the puck past Shipman for the last goal of the night. The University of Toronto sextet carried play well into the Oakville territory as P. Allen and Valiquette were sent off for fistic endeavours, but no further counters resulted and as play terminated at the final gong the scoreboard read Oakville 4, Varsity 1.

Jr. Hockeyists Lose Playing Weak Defence

Blues Go Well First Period; Loose Defence Cause of Defeat

FREMES SCORES GOAL

The junior Blues' prospect of reaching their group playoffs were considerably cooled at the Gardens last night by a 3-1 victory for the Native Sons hockey squad. Varsity carried the play in the opening period, but left goalie Campbell in complete control of the defence assignment during the final forty minutes. This state of affairs has been screamingly apparent in the junior games this winter.

Four minutes after the initial face-off Fremes rustled the string in the Sons' cage on a duet rush with Crichton. Leslie and Lindsay gave McQuestion a few merry moments with their drives before the first bell rang.

Native Sons started things briskly in the middle frame with Weiler and Bowman scoring to put Varsity on the short end of a 2-1 count. Wilson nearly caused more sorrow later for the blue and white as his shot bounced off the goalpost. Varsity had five men whacking around inside their opponents' blue line when Bowman broke away and slipped the rubber under Campbell with five minutes to play.

Crichton, Fremes, and Lindsay played fast hockey for Varsity while McQuestion in goal was best for the heavy-checking Native Sons.

Varsity: Goal, Campbell; defence, Brown, Botterell; centre, Giddings; wings, Fremes, Crichton; alternates, Lindsay, Leslie, Learmouth, Langford.

Native Sons: Goal, McQuestion; defence, Foster, Bowman; centre, Wilson; wings, Powers, King; alternates, Love, Excelby, Powers, Hinechiffe.

Everyone out. Preparations for the Annual Concert will be made.

Parliament has appointed Isadore Benjamin Weinstein to the position of Poet Laureate Ex Ordine (ex ordine—out of order).

Many other names appear on the list of honour, which will be read at tomorrow's meeting of the Parliament. The subject before the House will be "Resolved that this House Favours the Granting of Titles to Canadians." E. Shortt will be the Prime Minister and E. McCann the Leader of the Opposition.

WIN BASKETBALL

The second game which ended with Sr. Vic winning 24-21 was quite like the first as far as the type of basketball is concerned. S.P.S. looked very good in the first half but because of a lack of finish when around the basket were trailing 12-8 at the interval.

In the second half Vic continued their merry way and soon ran up a lead of 20-11 over the luckless engineers. However, the latter did not give up until the final whistle and put on a rally with 4 minutes to go, bringing their total up to 21.

Vic hung on, however, for the last two minutes and added a foul shot to their total. The Schoolmen played the man rather than the ball. Even at that only two fouls were called against them.

For Sr. Vic Gladish with 10 points was the best while McArthur with 3 baskets was outstanding.

U.C. (33): Damsky 7, M. Mirsky, Casson 11, Humanick 4, Sliarpe 5, Smith 4, Lipman, Vaneck, J. Mirsky, Shortt, Davis 2.

Trinity (20): A'Court 3, Eaton 10, Fiske, Grant 3, Harvie, Beverley, Muir 4, Anderson.

Sr. Vic (24): Faux 2, Toole 4, Gladish 10, Vaughan, Elsey, Dalziel, Price 6, Rutledge 2, Goudie, Dunlop, 4, Anderson.

Sr. S.P.S. (21): McArthur 6, Tilley 4, Mitchell 2, Miller 1, Sherwood, Rosenblatt, Dunn 2, Verity, Lattimer 4, Chernofsky 2.

The University of Toronto has been forced to cancel its subscriptions to a large number of German scientific publications due to the great rise in their price, caused by the rapacity of certain German publishers and the Nazi control over the German universities.

W. S. Wallace, Librarian of the University, said the situation has developed into a veritable "racket". In Germany, scientific works are not published by the universities but by commercial concerns. One publisher, Springer, has a monopoly in this field, and has raised the prices to many times their original amount. These conditions

The evening's entertainment promises to be too good to miss, for in addition to Sherlock Holmes, which has been adapted from stories of that famous fictitious character by Margaret Howe, who is also directing it, Professor Victor Lange is presenting a second play, Sweeney Agonistes, by T. To sustain the interest of his group in Current Events, Mr. R. G. Riddell has turned over succeeding meetings to the students. They will, in turn, prepare papers on questions of interest at the moment and after the delivery of the essay the meeting will be open for discussion.

The work taken this fall consisted of a summary of the trend of developments in Europe since the Great War—the settlement at Versailles, the League of Nations and its work, Fascism and the Dictators. So far all the work has been done by Mr. Riddell. With the background given he hopes that the group enthusiasts will be able to discuss intelligently current problems. The term's work opens this afternoon with an informal talk by Mr. Riddell on "The Far Eastern Situation".

OTHER LIBRARIES SUFFER

The epidemic of library closings around Hart House continues with the announcement that in future the S.C.M. library will be opened only on application for the key at the S.C.M. office. The loss of several books of the expensive variety is given as the reason for the step.

The S.C.M. library differs from the Hart House room in that books from the former may be taken out if desired. All people are asked to do is to sign the book supplied for that purpose. Thus, the missing books, eleven in number, may have been taken by outsiders who entered the library, or they may be in the hands of persons who removed them for a short time but who failed to sign for them. In the latter case, of course, it is expected that those responsible will return the books as soon as they read this article.

Similar situations are reported from former years, when more books have disappeared from the library than have

Staff Chess Match Rouses Enthusiasm

Faculty Determined to Defeat
Students—Latter Have Won for 13 Years

GUESTS INVITED

On Monday evening at 7.30 in the Faculty Union, Hart House, the fourteenth chess match since the war will take place between the Faculty and the Students. In the previous thirteen encounters the students have had the best of their more learned opponents, winning six matches, losing three, while the other four have been drawn. During this period the students have won 53 games and lost 44. Last year the students won decisively by 5 wins, 2 losses and 1 draw. This year the Faculty team captain, J. Hivitsky, reports that he has a very strong team who will go the limit to end the domination of the students. He deplores the general apathy on the part of the student body to this match—the only event in the year's calendar when professor and student meet on a common battleground. He therefore invites the members of Hart House who are interested to be present at the proceedings on Monday evening. The team captain for the students, A. D. McConnell, is rounding out a squad which he hopes will repeat last year's win.

COACH LOUOON RETURNS

Last night in the corridors surrounding the big gym could be heard again the familiar staccato of rowing machines banging in unison, indicating that in the oarsmen's sanctuary near the swimming gallery another training season had begun.

Professor T. R. Loudon is again coaching the Varsity crews, and the premier training night proved that he will be lacking in neither numerical strength nor enthusiasm among his proteges. Not only were many newcomers present to learn the mysticisms of the manly art, but also a host of "Old Colours", including such stalwarts as "Lofty" Willis, Russ Eaton, Herb Miller, Paul Bridle, Murray Armstrong, John Macdonald, and many others.

Henceforth, the heavyweights will train Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, while the lightweights will receive their rowing education on Tuesdays and Thursdays. As no previous experience in the sport is necessary, newcomers are welcome, and will receive attentive coaching.

Last season Varsity not only retained the intercollegiate title against McGill but also defeated every other junior heavy Canadian crew at the Henley and was a close second to the Detroit Boat Club in the finals. As Detroit automatically become a senior crew, it Saul F. Rae of University College and Robert B. McIntyre of the Faculty of Applied Science, have been nominated for the Massey Foundation Fellowships it was announced yesterday. Nomination is equitable to receiving the actual award. The Fellowship is tenable for two years and is valued at a thousand dollars a year.

Robert McIntyre has obtained first-class honours in mechanical engineering throughout his academic course. He served as president of second year, vice-president of the Engineering Society, and in charge of the supply store in his third year, and is very popular in all School activities. Mr. McIntyre will go to Cambridge to continue his studies, probably in aeronautics.

Saul Rae has a first class academic record, having headed the Sociology course every year. He has had an enviable record in the University College Athletic Society, and this year holds the office of president. He is an active member of the Students' Administrative Council and Speaker of the House in the Hart House debates. He has won wide fame as producer, writer and star of the University College Follies. Mr. Rae intends to continue his studies at the London School of Economics.

HARVARD FELLOWSHIPS IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass.—A limited number of Fellowships, not to exceed six in number, with a variable income for not more than three consecutive years, will be granted to students who plan to enter the Government or other forms of Public Service as a career.

Of the three years, the first will be spent at Harvard University in preliminary research and study; the second, in field work or a "public internship"; and the third, again in Harvard, in order to integrate the theory and practice of public service.

The fields of public service for which the holders of the Fellowships would be prepared fall under four comprehensive heads:

1. Administrative Officials (Federal, state or local governments).
2. Legislative and Political Officials.
3. Trade Association Officials.
4. Publicists.

While it is presumed that applicants will have a genuine interest in the public service it is not to be implied that undergraduate concentration in political science or other social sciences is a requirement.

Applicants should have a B.A. degree or its equivalent or anticipate the award of a degree not later than July 1, 1936, and should be not less than eighteen and not more than twenty-four years of age.

All requests for information or application blanks should be addressed to 774 Widener Library, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Applications must be filed before March 1, 1936.

Joe College: The Myth Hangs On!

One of the problems under discussion at the recent convention of the National Federation of Canadian University Students was that of the relationship which exists between Canadian university students and the general public. The convention deplored the fact that the impression given by the daily press of the university life is erroneous.

To those who have no personal experience of the University, especially to those not living close to the University centre we appear as a frivolous, pleasure-seeking group whose opinions on any subject are either radical or sensational. Our more prosaic serious work is glossed over.

A serious debate on a political subject into which the speakers have put much thought and study may get a three line mention in the downtown press. But if a parliamentary club announces its intention of discussing birth control or freer divorce laws it makes the front page. It is not then surprising if the average reader, his attitude coloured by what he reads in the newspaper, considers the taxes he pays for education might be spent in better ways. It is not suggested that the condition exists as a result of any deliberate desire on the part of the city press to discredit the University. It arises naturally from the well-known journalistic custom of using school-boy pranks as feature stories. More people appear to be interested in hearing that the University is a den of vice or a stronghold of Communism than that it has covered itself with glory in any academic or scientific achievement.

It is a problem with which we find it extremely difficult to cope, as it is quite impossible to reach the general public with our own student publications. The radio debates organized a year or two ago may help to bring up our credit with the country at large. It would be immensely to our benefit if we could show it that we have among us a large body of men and women seriously and definitely interested in subjects of national and international significance.

In a democratic country where public opinion carries so much weight we must vindicate ourselves and prove that the frivolous side of college life is, after all, only one and not the most important side. The College Humour caricature is all too frequently believed by our fellow citizens. We must seize every opportunity of bringing ourselves to their attention in a more favourable light. To do this we may be obliged to curtail our thoughtless pranks which the world does not always accept as pranks.

When Will We Learn?

The columnist of the News-Herald, one D. F. H., has challenged the appointment by the Board of an American to the position of athletic supervisor, asserting a seventy-five percent qualified Canadian is preferable to a hundred percent American.

This is a very narrow attitude. The practice of favouring one's own countrymen and of disregarding merit lowers the standard of competence in all countries involved, just as thoughtless tariffs lower the quality of goods in all countries involved. If the Americans acted in the manner which D. F. H. would wish us to, there would be far more Canadians out of work than Americans.

It is stupid to restrict interchange between two countries so close in economic and social life as Canada and America. And arguing completely selfishly, whatever restrictions are made are certain to damage Canada more than America in the long run, anyway.

It is interesting to observe how our strictest nationalists are the first to be incensed by their American counterpart, Mr. Hearst.

—The Ubysses.

S.A.C. Again A Philanthropist

The formation of a University Dramatic Association marks a decided advance in the field of theatrics for the University. For some time such a venture has been under consideration, but it has just recently materialized.

The organization was aided materially in its formation by a grant from the students' council. The grant was necessary to defray the expenses of royalties, books, and other forms of equipment which must be had before any revenue from the venture can be produced.

In granting the body $50.00 and giving them a loan of an additional $50.00, the Students' Administrative Council was performing one of the many philanthropic acts which have been of such service to the students of the university.

A few of the other things which are made possible through the aid of the council are, the printing of the directory, the graduation garden party, the students' band and the university orchestra.

At the present time the Council pays one half the cost of the directory which amounts to $750.00. Two years ago it paid the full cost of $1500.00. The value of the directory does not necessitate any explanations. The various other services the council performs are equally valuable. Perhaps none is more so than the maintenance of the students' loan fund and the employment bureau. These are but a few of the functions of the students' council, which is perhaps one of the most valuable, but least publicized, organizations on the campus of the university.

Bouquets to The Exchange System

(Submitted)

Several Canadian university heads have expressed high approval of the Exchange Scholarship Plan sponsored by the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

President R. C. Wallace of the University of Alberta thinks the plan has worked well. "The important thing seems to me to be," Dr. Wallace has said, "that students of ability be sent out as ambassadors, who will not be so bound down to their studies, because they find their studies difficult to keep up with, as to be unable to mingle in the student life. They ought to be able to bring back to their university both sides of the university they have visited... I think we all agree that the scheme is a statesmanlike one and we ought to remember to the credit of our Canadian undergraduates that they initiated it by themselves."

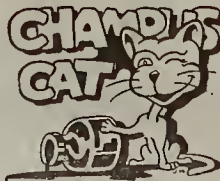

President Murray of the University of Saskatchewan, in whose opinions Principal Wallace of University College concurs, thinks that there are two excellent reasons for supporting the scheme. The first reason is educational. "There is a great tendency for our students to become too restricted in their outlook," Dr. Murray said. "The other reason is a national one. I foresee great danger of estrangement between East and West in years to come, and every movement that brings the people of East and West together is of great national value."

An Exchange Scholarship permits the holder to study for one year at a Canadian university other than his "home" university without paying tuition fees. Full details may be obtained from the local N.F.C.U.S. representatives, Mr. E. A. Macdonald and Mr. S. F. Rae. Exchange Scholarship candidates need not have first-class academic standing. He must be a reasonably competent student and a representative one.

While we hesitate to criticize a document of such high authorship, we must say that we have been unable to find certain highly significant information among the hopes, ambitions and achievements, the losses and new appointments, and the general record of the last academic year of the University of Toronto, as published in the President's Report. ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Eaton Auditorium

Last night Kenneth Sakos, the new Greek-Canadian tenor, made his first appearance before the musical world of Canada. Mr. Sakos, who is only Canadian by adoption and not by birth, began his musical career ten years ago in Kitchener, later studying in Italy. His program included ancient Italian arias and classical songs as well as a group of operatic selections and another of Greek folk-songs.

The first group was definitely a little disappointing, in particular the first song in which his voice was very thin, and he even seemed at times to be singing through a closed throat. In the O, del mio dolce ardor, the continual vibrato was decidedly unpleasant, and he was hampered also by a lack of control and flexibility.

In the second group, the operatic selections, Mr. Sakos seemed suddenly to find himself, and to get into the swing of the music. He became more lively, and showed more power and verve altogether. This group came to a climax in the aria Ah, non mi ridestar from Massenet's opera Werther.

The English songs in the second part of the program were very difficult to understand, due to the fact that the singer failed to enunciate very clearly, but two numbers from this group were particularly pleasing: Nichava, and The Hills of Grusia, in which Gwendolyn Williams as accompanist did a very nice job. As a general rule, her accompanying was on the self-assertive side, and this was very obvious in the Mozart and the Faure numbers.

The two really excellent selections were the Pagliacci and the Greek folk song, The Maiden Zacharoula. In these, Mr. Sakos let himself go, and the result was very enjoyable, as was also the encore O sale mio, which received a great ovation.

Mr. Sakos seemed more at home in the folk-songs and the operatic selections, and one felt that he might have made a happier selection of his program. Nevertheless, he provided an enjoyable evening, although one could not help noticing his blatant deficiencies. S.R.C.

Cycle Goes Down and 'Round

How do you feel today? Would you like to ring door bells? Do you feel like skipping around lamp posts emitting Indian war-cries at the top of your lungs? If this isn't your usual condition we'll tell you all about it. It is either a carry over (usually known as a "hang-over") from imbibing a little too much Christmas cheer (or New Years' cheer), or you are now at the "up" stage of a psychological cycle.

The afore-mentioned psychological cycle is universal, they tell us. Every one has it or is it a case of 4 out of 5 have it and the other one wants it? The length of time varies with the individual, some people going through the whole gamut of human emotions in a couple of months, others in a week. Some gamutting!

At the other end of the cycle from the bell-ringing stage is the tying-tin-cans-on-cats-tails, or the "Dis is de end, fare-well crool world" stage, commonly known as the "I want to be alone" feeling (with the proper accent, and the proper person).

Now the point is, how to take advantage of all this. Someone ought to figure out a way of getting all the pros to find out how their cycles work, and then convince them that the only time to set a paper is when they're feeling "whoopieish", and to finish it up properly, that the only time to mark them is when they're feeling especially "Razz m' tazzish". VARSITY SWIMMERS TO INVADE U.S.A. THIS WEEK-END

BLUES' OPTIMISM HIGH; McCATTYS BACK IN LINE

Expect to Repeat Last Year's Victories at Buffalo and Rochester

RECORD SPRINTERS DN VARSITY SQUAD

By Les Vipond

Varsity's big time swimming season gets under way this week-end as the intercollegiate team journeys to foreign territory in an endeavour to bring back two triumphs, one from Buffalo and the other from Rochester.

Both localities—the Buffalo State Teachers' College and the University of Rochester, succumbed to Varsity's frothy speedsters last year. Judging by the appearance of the team in its last few work-outs, the score will stand the same this time as it did last.

Rochester, however, who were just nosed out in the meet last year, will take a lot of beating in this contest, as they have improved considerably in some of their departments—notably backstroke.

The local swimmers fear nothing on that score, however, due to the splendid form which Cressy McCatty is exhibiting in that particular race right now. Cressy is doing his distance in faster time than he ever did. He, along with his aide, Russ Dilworth, would be a formidable factor in any man's race.

Winston, another member of the McCatty family, can be relied upon to come through without any difficulty in the quarter-mile race. Wins is doing well under six minutes now and could easily take off more with some opposition.

The sprint races are well provided for. Outstanding among shorter distance men is Hugh Main, who hails from Manitoba. Main is doing around 58 seconds for the hundred yards. Other sprinters are Scott and Otter, both of whom can break 26 seconds in the 50 yard race.

Vince Collins is clipping off the distance very smoothly via the breast stroke. The two hundred yards breast will be a major event in these meets. In the pool try-outs last Tuesday, the race was a touch-and-go between Collins and Ian Jennings. "Curly" Stratton and Woods are in charge of the diving department and have appeared to be pretty capable in the work-outs to date.

The meet with the Buffalo State Teachers' College will be in Buffalo tomorrow evening. The meet with the University of Rochester will be at the U. of R. Saturday afternoon.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George Vair

The continued existence of the Toronto Senior Basketball League as a four team group is seriously menaced by the threats of Coach Rennick of Broadview and the West End moguls who at Tuesday's meeting of the T.B.L. maintained that they will withdraw their teams from the league should Murchie and O'Hara take the floor for Danforth against West End Saturday night. When questioned about the two men who were released and given permission to play with Danforth by the T. and D. basketball association last Monday Manager Frank Doughty said that it was not the custom to announce the line-up four days before a game. That means that Saturday's Danforth-West End game will see the bombshell explode, if any. In the light of the last few weeks it scarcely seems feasible that Danforth will abstain from using the two men they fought so hard to obtain. Looking at it from any angle one would be inclined to think that a surplus of log-rolling has been indulged in.

As far as this department can find out the University of Toronto team has little if any interest in the matter although Harry Kennedy, president of the league, stated at the last meeting that he had information to the effect that Varsity would join Broadview and West End to form an outlaw league if the worst came to the worst. Coach Stevens said yesterday that Varsity wanted no part in the affair and that it is strictly a matter between the two clubs.

The U. of T. Rowing Club started its annual grind yesterday. Last year's crew, weighing 175 lbs. and averaging 6.1 in height, plan to stay together again this year for their fourth term. If this crew show the same interest and determination which carried them to victory over every Canadian crew in their class last season, they will have an excellent chance to defeat Hamilton Leanders, present Canadian champions, for the right to represent Canada at the Olympics.

The club have under consideration a plan to purchase a new boat and to establish new training quarters, a new boat being almost a necessity for the heavy crew which have outgrown their present shell, which was originally designed for a 160 lb. crew.

Professor Loudon, former coxswain of Argo eights in the days of Joe Wright Sr., will be back at the helm after a year's absence in Europe, where he obtained a wealth of new ideas concerning rowing teaching. There will likely be three crews, two heavyweights and one lightweight, so that all interested in rowing, whether experienced or inexperienced, will be very welcome at the workouts, which are held at five o'clock each evening in the rowing room at Hart House.

Interest in the current interfaculty water polo series has reached fever heat as nine squads go through their workouts under the guidance of intercollegiate exponents of the game. Victoria College will be seeking to defend their laurels of last season and some attention should be focused on the Trinity team as they have Cressy McCatty, former intercollegiate senior aquatic star available.

The groups are made up of St. Michael's, Trinity and Victoria, Jr. Meds, Jr. S.P.S. and Dents, and Sr. Meds, Sr. S.P.S. and U.C. The race for interfaculty honours should prove arduous and undoubtedly water polo is one of the sports in which condition plays an important factor. The games will be of fourteen minutes' duration with a five minute rest period and on January 20 at 4.30 the schedule will get under way.

CYCLE STILL GDES 'ROUND BASKETBALL TILT SEES KNOX DOWNED BY EMMANUEL, 16-11

Emmanuel defeated Knox in a scheduled interfaculty basketball game in the upper gym, Hart House, yesterday afternoon by the score of 16-11. It was the first game of the season for both squads.

With the score tied 8-8 at the rest period Emmanuel opened a fast offensive in the second half which gave them a well deserved win. They played a short passing game which proved effective against Knox's short passing game.

Gladman, with 5 points, was high scorer for the winners, while Neilson led the losers with two baskets and a single.

Emmanuel: Griffith, Jones, Gladman, Gardner, J. Bates, B. Bates, Ropson, Edwards, Todd.

Knox: Weir, Evans, Slements, Neilson, Smith, Slaw, Keith, Oswald.

Official: "Whitey" Miller.

AGILE BASKETEERS SHOW THEIR WARES IN THREE GAMES

Varsity and St. Michael's Intermediates Easily Trim Senecas and Graduates

BLUE JRS. LOSE DEBUT

Are Overwhelmed by West End "Y" Juniors in Sloppy Contest by 22-11 Score

The fast travelling Varsity intermediates handed the coach-less Senecas a 40-18 setback in the second game of a tripeheader in the Hart House gym last night.

Warren Stevens was subbing for Coach MacCutcheon, who is away with the senior team in the U.S.A., and kept his charges well in hand all through the game.

Varsity started with a rush, scoring nine points before Senecas creased the twine. With the careful checking, fast breaking Varsity team outplaying and outscoring them Senecas had to shoot from well outside the defense with no marked degree of success. At the half way mark the score stood at 20-5 for the MacCutcheon-coached squad.

In the second half the Senecas fought hard, holding the intermediates to 20 points, while they scored 13 themselves. For Varsity Peters and Powers were high scorers with seven points each. McLaughlin and Green were close behind them with six points each. Senecas' threats were Bottomley and Archibald with two field goals each.

Varsity ff: McLaughlin, Hogg, Peters, Powers, Dougherty, Marling, Cooper, Harlock, Barrow, Green.

Senecas: Cherry, L. Barnett, C. Barnett, Bolton, Hall, Robertson, Cunningham, Marr, Bottomley, Archibald.

In the second intermediate contest of the evening St. Michael's College scored a 28-22 victory over the Grads. The fresh, although obviously short in the matter of practices, were too clever for the Grads and for three-quarters of the contest were immensely superior. A last minute rally by the ex-students made 10 points for them, but they were unable to overtake the Bay Street team. The Grads have yet to win a heat in the series.

In their initial appearance of the season in the Hart House gym the Varsity junior basketballers absorbed a 40-15 trouncing at the hands of the (Continued on Page 4) evening was that of Jimmy Clark, of Jamestown, N.Y., Olympic welter-weight champion, who knocked out Gordon Schmalz of Kitchener, in fifty seconds of the second round. In the final bout, Lenny Stein won a five-round decision over Art Anderson in a weak exhibition of heavyweight boxing.

Other winners were: Beverly Carter of M.L.B.C., at 135 lbs.; Jack Doherty of Apex A.C., at catchweight; Bobby Armstrong of Toronto, at 120 lbs.; Norm Hurdman of M.L.B.C., at 147 lbs.; B. Hurdman of M.L.B.C., at 160 lbs.; and Cecil Sharp of M.L.B.C.

U.C. PLAYERS' GUILD

attempt is being made to produce representative drama from classical to modern times. There will be three evening productions and among the plays slated for the afternoons, are Ario do Capo, by Edna St. Vincent Millay, directed by Jack Graham; Tovarich, directed by Gordon Robinson; and Anatol, by Schnitzler, which Don Stewart is producing next Wednesday afternoon.

It is possible that on some evening in the near future there will be a joint meeting of the English and History Club and the Players' Guild, at which a paper will be read on some author, portion of whose work will then be interpreted by members of the Guild. Arthur Bernstein, backstage manager for the Guild, told The Varsity that he was waiting with open arms (sorry girls, it's the lads he wants) for people interested in any of the broadening tasks he has to offer. Here's your chance boys—step right up and develop the Guild way!

GERMAN PERIODICALS

have been further aggravated by the unfavourable exchange between the Canadian dollar and the German gold mark. A periodical which in France or England and formerly in Germany cost about ten dollars a year, now costs one hundred dollars.

Furthermore, Mr. Wallace explained, these periodicals are "padded" with worthless material, and their value has decreased since the Nazis have forced so many of the leading scientists out of the country.

An even worse condition prevails in the purchasing of "continuations", that is, a set of books, published volume by volume. The first volume is sold at a fair price, but when the later ones are issued a very excessive price is demanded, which must be paid if the original volumes are to be of any value.

The American Library Association has bitterly attacked these conditions and have succeeded in having the prices generally reduced 25 per cent. However, the feeling is so strong against these unscrupulous practices, it now looks as if Germany will lose all this valuable trade. A scientific library in Boston recently cancelled all their German subscriptions.

The Library Committee of the University gives each department an appropriation for the purchase of such works. In the medical faculty, the situation became so bad during the past year that all their grant had to be used for periodicals and consequently there was no means with which to buy any new scientific monographs. Consequently many periodicals and continuations had to be cancelled until the situation can be rectified.

its citizens, the lecturer will claim, and is particularly important in the great producers of new ideas. Since genius comes from every rank, it is only with general good health that assurance is made doubly sure that all the exceptional people will have the chance to develop their peculiar, individual qualities. Dr. Holman will point out.

In support of the belief that most great men are at their best when about fifty years of age, he will cite a number of famous people whom we would probably never have remembered had they not lived to do the things which made them famous well after this age.

War is only a disease of the body politic but the greater war is the everlasting one between bacteria and all men, and should have even greater wealth devoted to its prosecution because the harvest of its success is for the benefit of all mankind, in Dr. Holman's opinion.

Professor Holman was born in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, graduating from McGill University in 1903 with the degrees of M.D. and C.M. After two years on the staff of the Royal Victoria Hospital he spent a year in research work at the John Hopkins University, later going to Germany as a hygiene instructor in the University of Breslau. He was later connected with the University of Pittsburgh for eight years, going to Stanford University in 1920. Following two years as Associate Professor in John Hopkins University, he joined the staff of the University of Toronto and was appointed Professor of Bacteriology in 1928.

would appear that this is going to be Blue and White year at St. Catharines. The Olympic trials are in the offing and Varsity seems to be the only crew that can contest the Hamilton Leander's trip to Berlin.

There is a fair possibility that the Blue crews will have new quarters this summer, providing the present plans for a big, brand new clubhouse materialize. No further information is available on this subject at present, however.

Again, if you, gentle reader are interested in rowing, come up to the Rowing Room any night after five—it's free and a lot of fun.

ing recovery before reform, a national commission to investigate unemployment, housing and slum clearance, social insurance, protection for the worker and farmer, protection for honest business men, re-distribution of wealth, and retrenchment in expenditures. The only parliament member who wears a bowler during sessions, Mr. Richard Bell, characterized it as "a plagiarism from every known political platform in this and other countries, including old platforms of the Liberal party and most of the Conservative policy, omitting only the Communist manifesto and Hitler's twenty-four points."

The crowded meeting was opened ostentatiously with the installation of Hon. G. N. Gordon, who is actually an old deputy-speaker of the Federal Parliament, as Speaker of the Osgoode Hall House. After "going to the Senate" to fetch the throne speech from the absent governor-general, the Speaker read the address, a copy of which lay before every member. Then the verbal fireworks started.

J. M. Godfrey, accepting the speech, expressed gratitude at the wisdom of the Canadian people in not making the same mistake twice, namely choosing a Conservative government, and then fired a sharp volley at the protected textile industry, which the C.C.F. leader later characterized, along with other baby industries, as showing signs of mature pubescence. Nationalization of the central bank was added to the Liberal program by T. F. Flahiff, a policy which was later criticized by the opposition parties as going too far and not far enough. Despite the eloquent gibes levelled at the government by Opposition leader J. W. Graham, for getting an absurd majority of parliamentary seats and a minority of votes in the country at large, and despite his demands for electoral reform, the Prime Minister refused to be disturbed and expressed pride at the splendid vote of confidence granted his party by the Canadian people. During his speech Premier Grant referred to the traditional Liberal policy of sticking to the middle of the road and said: "Even if the rest of the world is moving toward socialism (cheers from the C.C.F.) Canada will be the last to adopt it" (vociferous applause).

The music goes down and round and comes up at Queen's tomorrow night when the Arts Forum is held with Jean Campbell swinging the baton in front of his Washington and Lee orchestra. This is in line with the Queen's policy of having outstanding bands, often imported from the United States, for major parties. Favours are guaranteed to be unique, different, useful and attractive—a big order. Campbell has one of the most popular orchestras in America, being especially in demand for collegiate affairs. He has had extensive European contracts.

The University of Saskatchewan is building a new stadium, to be the finest in the West, if not in all Canada. The stand is to be so placed that spectators will be protected from the wind and so the sun will be from the side.

The Manitoba co-ed debaters have staged a strike, refusing to debate on the advisability of having professionals in the glee club and in dramatics. They are afraid that personalities would be involved. They don't say who is likely to be personal, and whether they have more to lose than their opponents in such a case.

By the way, when Thelma Hermanson, last year's Manitoba student on exchange to Toronto, was asked how she liked Toronto she said that what she liked best of all here was Hart House.

At Wellesley, American women's college, the students have always had to supply their own table napkins. As the girls objected to this, it has been decided to change the system. The authorities at first proposed raising the fees to cover the necessary expenditure, but this is unpopular, so they now offer that, if the students will donate their present supply of the articles, to the number of 2,000, the new plan will be carried.

From the Southern California Daily Trojan, we find that "Lindsay College, in Ontario, Canada", held a survey of co-eds, discovering that only one girl wanted to become a good wife for some man. Others chose careers, with teachers leading the list.

A Boston psychology professor forbids students to take notes in his class, dubbing such a course "substituting the hand for the brain". Why haven't we professors like that?

A student in an eastern college realized at the last minute that he had an essay due. He selected one from the fraternity library, wrote it, and handed it in. The paper was returned with a large "A" on it, and a note to see the professor.

"Did you think this essay worth an 'A'?" he was asked. He replied that he would have been well satisfied with a "B".

"Well, it's worth an 'A'," said the professor. "When I wrote it, fifteen years ago, it got a 'C'. I'm glad it's had proper recognition at last."

BASKETBALL TRIPLE GAME

West End Y juniors.

The game was a sort of scramble-ball with wild torays interspersed. At half-time the score was 22-11. Neither team showed very good co-ordination; Varsity players especially showing up very poorly in the matter of team play.

Adams, a Windsorite, for West End, played well, scoring 13 points while his team-mate Rider scored 10. For Varsity, Olch, with three field goals, and Mark stood out.

West End: Sandford, Adams, Petrie, Valentine, Rider, McBean, Altman, Cox, Shaper, McTaggart.

Varsity III: Molson, Mark, Brown, Olch, Anderson, Dawson, McGowan, Keller, Feasby, Halversen.

SEES PALESTINE AS A BUFFER STATE

Prestige of British Would Be Weakened By Arab Federation

Baruch Zuckermann Speaks on Absorptive Capacity of Palestine

AT CHUDLEIGH HOUSE

Says Palestine Will Absorb Jews Fast as Economic Nuclei Permit

"Palestine will absorb Jews as fast as the new economic nuclei can establish positions for them," was the opinion of Baruch Zuckermann, representative of the Jewish Federation of Labour for Palestine, as expressed to an audience last night at Chudleigh House.

In the course of his lecture on "The Absorptive Capacity of Palestine," Baruch Zuckermann pointed out that the main problem facing the Jew was the policy of the British government in the Orient.

The British government must use Palestine Jewry as a buffer against the possibility of an Arab federation which would weaken Britain's prestige with her Eastern dominions. On the other hand, she must maintain friendly relations with the Moslem world because they are her chief supporters in India.

NEWS OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

London: The condition of Rudyard Kipling, famous British author, was announced early today as "very critical," and his wife and daughter were called to the bedside.

Trenton, N.J.: Twenty-eight hours before he was due to be executed, Bruno Richard Hauptmann received a 30-day reprieve last night from Governor Hoffman. A move to impeach the Governor probably will be started in the New Jersey General Assembly on Monday night as a result of his action, a responsible source said last night.

Paris: Great Britain now has 75,000 troops in Egypt, a cable from Cairo stated yesterday. The troopship Seythia has arrived with 3 battalions, bound for the Libyan border.

COLLEGE STUDENTS CAUGHT IN ACT

Almost Spent Night in Jail for Taking Display Cards from Theatre

Only the timely intervention of the manager of the Uptown Theatre saved two university students from a night in the cells last term. The two students were caught in the act of stealing display material from the front of the theatre at an early hour of the last Sunday morning of the autumn term. The fact that they had in their possession a hammer and screw driver for removing the scenery made the charge which might have been laid against them a serious one.

FEE DELINQUENTS WILL LEARN FATE

Course of Action to be Taken will be Announced Next Week

Procrastinating fees-payers will learn their fate next week, stated Mr. A. B. Fennell, Registrar of the University, in an interview at his residence last night. By that time, a course of action will have been decided upon by the committee.

At the present time, the names of all those who have not paid their fees are under review by the committee. Each case is being considered separately, and an attempt is being made to find out the reason for the delay. The authorities are loath to take any drastic step until every other avenue is closed, said Mr. Fennell.

Asked about the proportion of unpaid accounts, the Registrar stated that the number is about the same as in former years. No definite figures could be released until later, however. So far, nobody has had his registration cancelled this year for non-payment, although such a step may yet be made necessary.

MAUVAIS ARTS BALL AN ANNUAL MASQUERADE WITH 'ESQUIRE' MOTIF

Featured by a gala array of startling and unusual costumes, the Mauvais Arts Ball shattered the peace and propriety of Parkdale last night. The ball, a masquerade which is rapidly assuming the proportions of a major campus event, is an annual party of the Architects' Society of S.P.S., held this year in the Argonaut Rowing Club.

Smooth dance music was supplied by Jack Ryan's orchestra, in surroundings specially decorated by the architects with a prevailing Esquire motif. Costumes ranged from the sedate prize-winning Spanish outfits to burlesques on Haile Selassie and Tarzan, with a grass-skirted hula-hula girl for romantic interest.

Professor H. H. Madill, dean of the department of architecture, and Mrs. Madill welcomed the guests, and Kent Barker, club president, acted as master (Continued on Page 4)

Hart House Debates Twelve Year Feature

Warden Bickersteth Behind Innovation of 1924—300 Attend

NEXT DEBATE JAN. 29th

Twelve years ago last night the first Hart House debate was held in the House and nearly 300 undergraduates and members of the faculty attended.

The motion for the debate was "That this house views with confidence the formation of a labour government in England and would welcome the development of a party of a similar type in Canada." The ayes carried the motion by a vote of 184 to 88.

"The debates were first organized 12 years ago to introduce into this university the type of debating prominent at Oxford and Cambridge," Mr. Bickersteth, the warden, said yesterday. "They have proved to be popular from their inception and their success continues to be manifest in the quality of debates and the high attendance."

Mr. Bickersteth was responsible for the innovation of the Hart House debates at this university. Back in 1924, the warden and Professor Gilbert Jackson, formerly of the economics department and now with the Bank of England, organized an ad hoc committee and the plans for the debates were laid. Four times a year since 1924 the debates have been held with prominent speakers, ranging from prime minister down the whole gamut of professions (Continued on Page 4)

YELLOW PERIL SEEN BY RIDDELL'S GROUP

Effects of Russo-Japanese War not yet Over, Says W. B. Curry

"In the Russo-Japanese war, the victory over the western nation has effects still to come. It has shown the yellow race that the white is by no means invulnerable, and that the yellow race has some reason for living." Thus W. B. Curry attacked the problem of the "Far Eastern Question" in Mr. R. G. Riddell's Current Events Group, yesterday afternoon, in a very comprehensive paper.

Students' Brains Can't Be Sound Prefer Music 'Round and 'Round

By John Springer

'Round and 'round the campus yesterday afternoon an enterprising Varsity reporter conducted a survey on the popularity of the song hit, "The Music Goes 'Round and 'Round." He discovered that few indeed were the college men and women with whom the song is not popular.

Fred Blum, cheerleader-room-mate of Hugh Marks and Joe Connolly, who are on the basketball trip, spoke for himself and for his athletic room-mates. "There's a radio in the room next to us, and one in the room upstairs," he said. "No matter what time it is, if any orchestra starts to play 'Music Goes 'Round,' they have instructions to come and get us. We could listen to it all night."

Helen Scott, however, thought it was becoming tiresome. The tune is catchy,

SPONTANEITY LOST IN MODERN MUSIC CLAIMS LECTURER

"We moderns have lost the spontaneity which caused primitive man to sing a chant of victory over his fallen enemy," Miss Wilma Stevenson said in her talk on Folk Songs yesterday afternoon at the Music Appreciation Group held in Wynilwood.

Miss Stevenson informed the group that in primitive societies of isolated communities music was the only form of universal self-expression; it was part of every man's life. He sang songs of love, invocations to the unseen deities, lullabies and chants of victory and achievement. These songs were preserved orally through centuries until about a hundred years ago when interested music lovers began to collect them before advancing civilization should push them into the limbo of forgotten lore.

Miss Marion Copp, the guest singer, sang a group of folk songs of the British Isles—Hebridean, Irish and (Continued on Page 4)

U.C. PARLIAMENT DEPLORES TITLES

Government Goes Down to Defeat by Large Majority

CHARGES OF GRAFT LAID

A heated debate featuring crossfiring wit, resulted in the U.C. Parliament defeating the government's motion, "This house favours the granting of titles to Canadians", by 28-10. At the conclusion of the debate Premier R. Shortt tendered his resignation and Opposition Leader McKay assumed office.

During the discussion Premier Shortt repeatedly clashed with his ex-minister of finance who chose to speak against the motion. Premier Shortt emphasized the high tradition of titles. He maintained that restricted titles would add prestige to the white collar class. Referring to the New Year's honour list of U.C. parliament he denied any titles had been bestowed on the Opposition by bribery. The Premier repudiated charges of graft in the titles, that his former minister levelled at him.

Others supporting the motion contended that if the titles were free of political influence they would serve to divert public opinion from journalistic sensationalism. The leader of the opposition centred his arguments around the incompatibility of democracy and (Continued on Page 4)

W.U.A. FEATURES JEAN McLACHLAN IN SUNDAY MUSICALS

Dr. Cody Pays Tribute to Outstanding Figure in Profession

FUNERAL SATURDAY

One Son Graduated in Commerce and Finance—Second Attending U.C.

Dr. Wallace Seccombe, Dean of the University Faculty of Dentistry, died suddenly shortly before six o'clock yesterday evening. Suffering for some time from pernicious anemia, he was nevertheless able to continue his duties, and was working in his office as late as Wednesday morning.

Dr. Seccombe has been connected with the Faculty of Dentistry for the past thirty years, and was the first Dean of the Faculty when it was incorporated into the University. He was also the founder of the chair of preventive dentistry at the college, and editor of the Oral Health Dental Magazine.

Dr. Cody, President of the University, paid tribute to the Dean last night.

"I feel his loss deeply. It is a loss to the University and to the dental profession. Dean Seccombe was esteemed by his colleagues and by his students."

"He was a wise, sane and progressive administrator. The Dental Faculty of which Dean Seccombe had been the head since its union with the University, has functioned admirably and without friction under his leadership."

Dean Seccombe was born in Toronto, and educated at Dufferin School. He was graduated in dentistry in 1900. (Continued on Page 3)

JUNIORS HOLD PARTY FOR GRADUATING YEAR

Hunt's Savarin to be Scene of University College Farewell Dance

With the University College junior-senior formal only a week away, students of that college are having a rest-less time waiting for the night of the dance to roll around.

The primary purpose of this party is to give the U.C. junior undergraduates an opportunity to extend the members of the graduating year a fond and formal farewell. J. J. D. Brunk, who has charge of the formal, reports that if the present state of plans is any indication of the success of the function, this farewell will be remembered by those graduating long after other university experiences have been forgotten.

The whole ballroom of Hunt's Savarin will be transformed with University College decorations. Eddie Stroud and his Savarin orchestra will offer his special arrangements of numbers which have won fame at the University College Follies. At 11.30 all will sit down to an elaborate supper of tomato juice cocktail, chicken a la king on toast with French fried potatoes, ice cream, cake and coffee.

Preliminary ticket lists will not be issued, but members of the college are reminded that the sale of tickets will be next Tuesday, and that no tickets will be available at the door next Friday night.

Youthful Paganism

When a question of current morals arises it usually occurs that the more old fashioned persons involved are dubbed with the name Puritans, while the alleged social rebels prefer to be termed Pagans. Invariably, as we see from the current novels, pictures, and incidents of life, when a school girl feels she has outgrown her habit and begins to brandish a cigarette, paint her face, finger nails and toe nails, mix large cocktails of gin and lemon juice which are as poisonous as they are objectionable, and in general do everything which her old fashioned parents find irritating, she will confide to some sympathetic listener, "I guess I'm a pagan."

The purpose of this confession is to avoid any mistaken impression which one may have gathered, that she is a Christian. She has never heard of any other antithesis except that of Christian and Pagan, or perhaps, Puritan and Pagan. But the amusing thing is that she might just as logically have called herself a Puritan as a Pagan. The use of the word Pagan to describe playing the goat in this manner is one of the most astonishing historical blunders ever made.

The word Paganism is used by historians to designate the culture which preceded Christianity and which had its most cultured centre around the shores of the Mediterranean. Should the bright young thing who chooses to be called Pagan, have come in contact with that civilization she would probably have mistaken it for Puritanism. The heathen humanity which she fondly believes represents a social paradise had its virtues and its vices. And its virtues would be hated by the modern heathen more than its vices.

When the modern heathen announces that it is his or her life to live as she likes she may bring down the paternal wrath, with the result that she is spanked. In a truly Pagan family that child might have been killed. The old Pagan law of Rome gave the father the right of life or death over his children. It was Christianity which introduced some freedom into the family.

Another and better side of Paganism, which the Bright Young Thing would have doubtless found even less attractive was the consecration of every act to the poetry of religion. The modern whoopee boys and girls would find a twenty-four hour visit to a Pagan home very enlightening.

Should she want a cocktail she must pour the first on the floor as a libation to Bacchus or the Household Gods. The boy friend who wishes to take his girl friend for a one-way spin in the car could not merely dash around, pick her up and be off. Ten to one, if he were a Pagan, he'd have to go and first sacrifice a goat to Venus or Cupid as a conventional necessity of the enterprise. The whole life of the Pagans was stiff with conventions. The Pagan was held by conventions, the family and the state, far more rigorously than are the modern Pagans. It was Christianity taught man he had a soul of his own.

The "Slum Clearance Project"

Probably stung into action by Lieutenant-Governor Dr. H. A. Bruce's biting statement in the press recently, the Canadian Youth Council of Toronto has launched a "Slum Clearance Project". Last December Dr. Bruce stated: "Not only has no action been taken (on the Housing Committee's report) but not even a pretense of interest has been evinced in the welfare of citizens condemned to live in dwellings that outrage every sense of humanity."

The Canadian Youth Council decided that some action should be taken; they recognized that young people had more to lose by slum conditions and more to gain by abolishing them. The report of Dr. Bruce's committee proved this beyond doubt. Last December, the Council decided to carry out some sort of "campaign" to interest the young people in the problem, and hoping that from it would result some constructive assistance to the committee which has been vainly seeking for more than a year the clearance of intolerable housing conditions in Toronto.

The first form of activity was to invite Professor E. J. Urwick, vice-chairman of the Housing Committee, to address an "open forum" meeting. Professor Urwick spoke of conditions he himself had seen; he emphasized that the problem was one of prime importance to youth; and in so doing he criticized the older generation for its apathy.

The Council has formulated ambitious plans. For the next two months, by every possible means, it will seek to interest the youth of Toronto in slum clearance and re-housing; the Council is planning a research campaign to find slum areas not covered by the Housing Committee's investigations, on the assurance that there are many such areas in Toronto. By speech, by illustrated lecture, by distribution of a condensation of the Bruce report, by sermon, by "open forums"—by every available device the Canadian Youth Council intends to carry on a vigorous campaign.

University students and student groups, in common with others, can do a great deal toward bringing about this urgently needed reform. Students can assist in the research investigations; they can make themselves and others acquainted with the problem and its solution; they can write essays; draft plans for re-housing; participate in the organizational work by the Council; contribute financial assistance. Students can be of tremendous value in the endeavour to bring about slum clearance and re-housing in Toronto. It is a problem as real to students as to any other group—and from other than humanitarian reasons, such a project in Toronto would have concrete economic advantages for every student.

A Fable in Modern Tempo

Once upon a time a big country, whose inhabitants were called Faseses, had a very high form of civilization. On the other hand the Zulus were an ignorant tribe of barbarous people. Looking upon these Zulus with compassion, the Faseses suddenly realized that it would be a noble thing to civilize these barbarians by implanting in them the culture of the Faseses. They therefore made war upon the Zulus.

The implacable Zulus, being ignorant and therefore having no knowledge of ethical restrictions, cut off the head of one of the Faseses whom they captured. The Faseses, however, having had their culture for centuries, knew all the niceties of the Moral Code. Whereupon they decided to begin to teach the Zulus the rudiments of civilization by imparting to them a knowledge of the Moral Code. They then proceeded to show the Zulus that they were all wrong in cutting off the head of the aforementioned gentleman.

This they did, one dark night, by slipping through and slitting the throats of all the injured and dying Zulus, and also shillalating two of the medicine men.

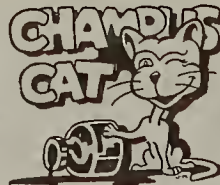

The Zulus were quick to grasp the lesson involved. Seeing the superiority of the Faseses' civilization they decided to submit to their rule, whereupon the Zulus lived happily ever after.

Moral—Do unto others as they would do unto you, but do it first if possible.

And now, with the alleged discovery of new evidence in the Hauptmann case, will the United States repeat the cheap and sordid drama of the original trial, in which the accused was held up to the public like an animal to be sneered at, shuddered at, and photographed for and by the morbid sensation seeker?—The Sheaf.

Il Duce is finding that the Ethiopians are getting less amenable to his particular method of civilizing every day. If the stiff resistance that Ethiopia is putting up continues and drags out the war, Mussolini is going to have to civilize a full sized revolution at home.—The Sheaf.

Recent contributions include a few verses from Herman the Wiley. But we're still exercising the discriminating taste.

The Cat has become so literally a figure head at the top of this column that it is seldom we think of it as a feline entity. A friend of ours who left the salt sea breezes of the Bluehouse country to spend a year on the campus has been worrying about the Cat as a cat, and by the following communication would seem to be little pleased with it.

"What I could never figure out, Mr. Yorker, was why your column is called the Champus Cat. I mean, there's something sneaky about a cat which doesn't fit in with the spirit of Champus. Cats are untrustworthy beasts, they do unexpected things, they take you by surprise when you are least expecting it, they—wait, I'll tell you my story.

"We had a cat at home. It was a fine cat. We thought a lot of it. It used to sit on my lap and purr at me for evenings at a time as I worked. It was most affectionate, and the whole family liked it. We called it Peter.

"Peter used to live in a barn. Then he got the habit of coming to our house around meal-time; and gradually he spent more and more time with us, until we could hardly get him out of the house at all. He had adopted us, for better or for worse. We became great friends, and I was convinced that finally I had found a cat that was above the sneaky tricks of most of his kind. Then came the terrible awakening.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

The Fountain Club

Greek drama in a Polish theatre in Toronto may sound unconvincing, but last night's production by the Fountain Club, "Head Winds", by Louis McKay, was admirable. The pursuit of the glamorous Helen is vividly depicted in a modern version of the Greek tragedy wherein Ulysses mourns, "My God, it's a wearisome job having to think for 10,000 men", and complains that Menelaus wouldn't kill a louse playing leap-frog on his eyebrow. Such levity lightens the essential tragedy of the theme which on the other hand is heightened by the actual consummation of Iphigenia's death.

The cast was well chosen but more practice would have produced more finished acting. As it was, the men were in every way superior to the women in casting and character interpretation. The scenery and lighting effects were adequate. The play itself is admirable, and if finesse was lacking in the production, the complete effect was decidedly favourable.

M.E.T.

Eaton Auditorium

Ethel Bartlett and Rae Robertson presented an outstanding program of two-piano music last night, to an enthusiastic but somewhat undiscerning audience.

The highlight of the opening Bach group was the Prelude in E major, which brought out the amazing sensitivity and unity of these two players, the multitude of melodies weaving flawlessly from one piano to the other.

The second group included the Andante and Variations, by Schumann, a work which is attempted by every ambitious two-piano team, but rarely done as well as it was by Bartlett and Robertson. A modern group followed, including Bax's "Poisoned Fountain"—one of his best bits of impressionism—and Scott's rippling "Danse Negre", which, unfortunately, was repeated. The

By E. S. W.

Several important matters were discussed at the meeting of the Swimming Club executive yesterday. The date of the interfaculty meet has been set tentatively for March 13, which is exactly eight weeks from today. That doesn't leave much time for practice, so you'd better get busy right away. The faculty meets will be held a week or so before the big splash, and the last week in February seems to be most favoured.

Physiotherapy are entering a team for the first time, and St. Mike's has also decided that swimming is a sport to be cultivated. You will remember that the Physiotherapists sprang a few surprises in the interfaculty basketball games, and they may turn out to be the dark horses in swimming as well. With two more teams in the meet, competition will be very keen, and the Social Scientists had better look to their laurels.

There was also a discussion about the possibility of having an intercollegiate meet. Queen's are very anxious to have one, and have written to the Executive to find out how matters are here. Yes, you've guessed it, there's no money, and the powers that be seem to think there isn't enough enthusiasm. However, if enough enthusiasm is forthcoming, the money may be produced from somewhere. So it's up to you to decide what's going to be done. What do you think of the idea?

Don't forget about the intercollegiate basketball practice tonight from six to seven-thirty in O.C.E. gym. Let's have a big turnout.

BLUES MEET TIGERS MINUS MACPHERSON

Out for First Victory of Season Against Flashy Hamilton Squad

ON HAMILTON ICE

Fresh from their effort against Oakville, in which, although they didn't win, they gave the Villains a bad scare and a thorough shaking-up, Varsity's senior hockey team will be seeking their first O.H.A. victory with renewed vigour down in Hamilton tonight when they step into the fast-moving Tigers.

The Blues will be without the services of their ace-man, Jimmie MacPherson, who is still in the hospital due to a leg injury which may keep him out of the game for the rest of the season. It appears now that the injury is more serious than was first thought.

Varsity hasn't met the team from Tiger Town since back in December when they received a 9-4 trimming in their own arena. However, since then the Blues have perked up considerably, and the Hamiltonians will have a battle on their hands no matter what the score is.

DENTS, JR. S.P.S.
SCORE TRIUMPHS

St. Mike's Beaten in Overtime
19-17—Pharmacy Trimmed
21-17

Two more games of basketball, the fifth and sixth of the present interfaculty series, were played in the upper gym at Hart House yesterday afternoon, in which Dents squeezed out a narrow victory over St. Mike's, winning 19-17 in an overtime affair, and Jr. S.P.S. defeated Pharmacy 21-17. Both teams came from behind to win.

None of the four teams competing had played a game before yesterday and as a result some of the wildest passing, loosest checking, poorest shooting and generally roughest play of the season was displayed as a substitute for basketball. In the first game St. Mike's built up a 9-3 lead at half-time by means of good work around the basket and loose checking by Dents.

Dents came to life in the second half and slowly lowered the Irish lead until, with two minutes to go, they tied the score at 15-15, and so it remained as full time elapsed.

Up to this point, the game had been a drab spectacle, but an argument livened up the overtime which was thrilling until the end.

The final score was 19-17 for Dents. For Dents Kinsberg with three baskets and a foul shot, and Hurovitz with two baskets and a foul shot were outstanding. Blum, with three baskets, was best for St. Mike's.

In the second game Jr. S.P.S. won 21-17 over Pharmacy in a better display than the first. Pharmacy held the lead during the first half, but were weak in the second. Lazarus of Pharmacy was top scorer of the game with nine points.

TRACK TEAM MANAGER—

Applications for manager of the indoor track team are to be handed in to the Athletic Office before 5 p.m. on Monday, Jan. 20th.

SR. VIC BASKETBALL—

Practice today 3 to 4. Vic gym.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crocker

Ace Bailey and his charges will probably be burdened with another load of grief when they meet Hamilton's Tigers in the Mountain City tonight. The Tigers are tripping along at a very respectable gait right now and are fast overtaking the league-leading Toronto Dukes. Consequently that big goose-egg which adorns the win column of the Varsity squad in the Senior O.H.A. race will probably be as large as ever on the morrow. It takes plenty of courage to turn out night after night giving one's best and yet fail to win that coveted reward that would erase that big zero in the win column. And all of those sarcastic remarks which are to be heard floating around certainly do not help matters for the Blues. It must be remembered that the Blues are in a group of high-class teams which have been built up carefully with plenty of importations. The fighting spirit which the Blues do put into every performance despite the fact that their chances for a victory are very small has earned for Bailey's men the praise of all fair-minded persons. When faced with immense barriers all one can do is give one's best and that's what every member on the Varsity squad has been doing.

While on the subject of hockey we might add something about Varsity's entry in the T.H.L. Major series. We have never run into a situation which was handled so carelessly as is the U. of T. entry in the Major series of the T.H.L. On Saturday afternoon we wandered into the Blue dressing room. There were five players present, all at some stage of denudation. All were cheerfully wondering whether there would be enough players present for a team. A sixth player strolled in, was welcomed with loud shouts and the announcement that he would play defence. All that was then needed was another defenceman and a couple of wingmen. The next one to struggle in was given the same loud ovation but it was all wasted as he had loaned his skates to someone. And so it went. At playing time Joe Carruthers had eight men dressed and these fellows playfully ambled out to accept a hearty pasting. We are very much against such haphazard methods of handling a team. In fairness to the officials of the league and the paying fans a serious effort should be made to have a full team turn out at all games instead of leaving the personnel of the team to chance. If the league is not deserving of the whole-hearted support of the Varsity hockey officials the Blue entry should be withdrawn without further delay and so put an end to the farce.

Native Sons and Varsity Juniors play a return hockey match Saturday afternoon. The Sons handed the Blues a 3-1 trimming last Tuesday and the Blues are eager for revenge in the repeat performance.

Varsity's travelling basketball team, under the guiding hand of Mac McCutcheon, absorbed a 41-36 defeat at Schenectady on Wednesday evening. The Union College squad is rated as a very strong quintet and it is considered that the Blues made a very nice showing. Tomorrow the squad will play at Rochester and will then return to the serious business of keeping the home fires burning.

A strong swimming squad will this year again invade Buffalo tonight and then Rochester tomorrow. Last year the Blues walked off with top honours in both cities and with this year's squad slightly stronger than last year's they promise to again bring home all the laurels. The meet in Rochester is to be held in the afternoon and as a result the Blue matadors will be able to get to the basketball game in the evening and help their fellow students with loud cheering along the path of victory. With two full squads of Blue athletes in Rochester over the week-end there should be lots of fun somewhere—don't you think.

The basketball schedule which appeared in yesterday's issue of The Varsity was really the baseball schedule. It also contained an error for Feb. 10. The game on that day being between Jr. Meds and Jr. S.P.S. instead of Jr. U.C. Managers in doubt should consult the schedules posted in both upper and lower gyms at Hart House.

Dr. Secombe was instrumental in bringing the Faculty of Dentistry into the University, and became its first Dean in 1923. Later he was appointed chairman of the Carnegie Corporation Curriculum Survey of Dental Education for America, studying the courses presented by all the dental schools of the continent, the only survey ever made in that field.

He founded, and edited for 25 years, the Dental Magazine of Oral Health, devoted to the interests and advancement of dental science. He was recognized as an authority throughout America on preventive dentistry and dental education, and his advice has been continually sought by American as well as Canadian dental associations and universities.

Dr. Secombe has been a staunch supporter of Eaton Memorial Church, while for some years he acted as superintendent of the Sunday School at the Sherbourne St. Methodist Church.

The former Dean is survived by his wife, the former Margaret B. McKendry, and two sons and two daughters. "Mac" Secombe received his de-

IN BASEBALL GAME

The hard-hitting Forestry nine smashed out a 9-5 victory over Wycliffe at Hart House yesterday afternoon in an interfaculty baseball game. The Anglicans committed several costly errors at the home plate and could not punch out the ball in the pinches.

Cardy batted in two runs for Wycliffe in the second inning with a double but loose fielding provided the three men with a five-run lead at the end of the third frame. Both teams crossed the plate twice in the fourth and Wycliffe reduced their opponents' lead by one run before the final out in the next inning.

The funeral will be held from Convocation Hall Saturday at 3 p.m. President Cody will be unable to be present, as he has accepted an invitation to preach the University sermon at Harvard University next Sunday morning and cannot make the necessary train connections.

huge birthday cake has been prepared with a suitable number of candles to mark the 92 years of the Chief Justice of Ontario.

Sir William, as he approaches the century mark, is not looking back over the years in retrospect because for him his career is still being written. "I am still living on borrowed time," he said quietly yesterday. "I quite realize that my span of life may end at any moment. Truly I am living on borrowed time, but I enjoy it all the same."

Sir William said he felt just as well physically as he did a year ago and he had not changed his living habits to any great extent. "I still go to bed when I feel like it and eat and drink what I like. I give Providence credit for my long span of years and am not any praiseworthy of regular habits," he added.

He still takes an active part in his legal duties and every day goes to his offices in Osgoode Hall. "My court work goes on just the same as ever," he said. "When am I going to retire? I have no plans for the future. One only knows from day to day what one's intentions are. I have no plans; they will develop from day to day as long as Providence spares me."

The last official appearance of the Chancellor on the campus was at the convocation held to confer an honorary degree on Lord Tweedsmuir, governor-general.

He later decided not to lay a charge against them, and they have given an undertaking not to repeat their offence.

"The frequent losses which we suffer through theft of theatre advertising material must stop," said Mr. Daley. He expressed the hope that university students would respect his property, and leave intact the display advertisements, many of which are very costly. He said that he had withdrawn action in connection with the two men only on the understanding that his losses would cease.

a feudal country, said Mr. Curry, and the scramble for colonies in the 19th century made a deep impression on her. Her foreign policy has always been self-assertive, as is evidenced by the way she took Formosa.

Mr. Curry continued his paper with a treatment of the situation during the Great War, during which the Germans were forced out of the province of Shantung by the Japanese. This war in the east created a "political vacuum" and it was an open invitation for any nation to come in and fill that vacuum. This Japan did, regarding herself as the mistress of the East. The European nations paid no attention to China and Japan due to the tremendous adjustments of the post-war days.

In 1928 under the guise of protecting herself from bandits, Japan entered China and in 1931 she completed the conquest. The rest of the world was in the midst of the depression and could not be aggressive, so that Japan, "flushed with victory" defied the League and the world.

STUDENTS PREFER MUSIC WHICH GOES 'ROUND

F. N. O'Flynn was interrupted in the midst of a bit of classical piano playing at Hart House to be asked whether he knew how to play the mad melody. He did, and likes the piece, but Joseph Morton, who doesn't care for it at all and does like classical music, was considerably riled at the intrusion.

Karl Mueller, who likes the piece, was playing it for about the fourth time at a dance. Sunny McLaughlin and Kay Killoran, who don't, said so, but sang it just as loudly as anyone else. Alberta Maxwell thinks the song owes its popularity to the swiny rhythm, tricky words and the fact that it is so easy to remember. Eve Gregory and Florence Falstern echo each other's enjoyment of it.

D. F. Dodson surprisingly enough, when asked to comment, said he never heard of it. He didn't look serious.

Let's Go Places

The filmization of at least one best seller will cause its author no misery about what Hollywood has done to his book. It is "The Magnificent Obsession" current at the Uptown, which has been sympathetically and intelligently adapted from Lloyd Douglas' well known book of the same name. Universal Studios, usually producers of mediocre films, only occasionally come forth with a film which shows genius in the production of the picture. But this time they have clicked definitely with a picture, which will probably be found on many "10 Best" lists at the end of 1936.

The story is too well known to need recounting. Suffice to say that the picture receives most of its emotional force from the story itself, which is often not the case in a movie. The cast is splendidly chosen. Irene Dunne gives an unforgettable performance as the lovely young widow, blinded in an automobile accident. Her work, particularly in the scene in Paris, where she learns that she will not see again, is admirable in its restraint. Robert Taylor shows himself much more capable than we would have believed. Occasionally, he is awkward and ill at ease, but in many scenes reveals great potentialities. Charles Butterworth is a vital asset to the picture with his clever foolishness, and Sara Haden is reminiscent of Aline MacMahon in similar roles, but is too good an actress to be merely an imitator. Betty Furness, Beryl Mercer and Ralph Morgan all deserve more than passing notice, and that delightful delineator of butlers, Arthur Treacher, and Henry Armetta aid Mr. Butterworth in the comedy.

The picture is an unusually long one and has little action, but its emotional strength is so great that one cannot become bored. It is a triumph for Universal, for John M. Stahl, the director, for Miss Dunne and for Lloyd Douglas.

It is decidedly one of the better pictures. Johnny Green, who looks like a cross between the two Georges, Brent and O'Brien, and has a very smooth orchestra, performs in a better than average short subject, which with the News completes the Uptown bill.

The funeral service of the late Dr. Wallace Secombe, Dean of the Royal College of Dental Surgeons at the University of Toronto, was held on Saturday afternoon in Convocation Hall. The service was followed by interment in Mount Pleasant Cemetery. The Reverend Dr. Trevor Davies officiated.

Due to the unavoidable absence of Canon Cody, Sir Robert Falconer, ex-president of the University of Toronto, gave the obituary speech. In summarizing briefly Dean Secombe's active career he showed that the Dean had done a great deal towards making the Faculty of Dentistry recognizably one of the best on the continent.

The Conference, he continued, is entirely opposed to the support of the League of Nations or of sanctions against Italy, which other anti-war organizations have placed themselves on record as advocating.

CHESS-BOARD WIZARDS SHOW REAL FORM IN CLOSE MATCHES

During the past month two more rounds of the Varsity chess championship have passed into history. A third round game between Scheffer and Rubinoff resulted in a win for the latter. At one stage Scheffer missed a winning combination involving the sacrifice of a rook and a bishop. In the fourth round Rubinoff won by default from Hughson. Hayes easily defeated Watson. The Scheffer-McConnell game saw the trapper trapped. McConnell accidentally transposed two moves of a combination that would have netted him a piece. The result was that he lost a piece and thereby his first game. Shankman underestimated Jennings' strength and consequently lost.

The score at the end of five of the seven rounds is Hayes and McConnell 4-1; Rubinoff, Shankman, Scheffer, 3-2; Jennings 2-3; Watson 1-4; Hughson 0-5. The tournament will be completed by January 31.

Agnes Moncrief

COMMUNISM PREVALENT

National feeling in China is rapidly on the increase, stated Miss Agnes Moncrief in an interview Friday afternoon. University students throughout the country are the main factors in this new feeling; and they are, at the present time, the only organized opposition to Japanese control of the land.

Miss Moncrief has spent five years in China in connection with the work of the Student Christian Movement. She will return in September to continue her duties, probably in the intellectual centre of Peiping. Her task includes the interesting but difficult work of attempting to co-ordinate the work of the church and state universities, between which somewhat strained relations sometimes exist.

The student force of the country is rapidly on the increase, and has already reached large proportions since the new educational system was introduced in 1904. At the present time, there are a dozen universities in Peiping alone, with over 25,000 students enrolled. The students' system of organized demonstrations, as well as their practice of passive resistance, is proving (Continued on Page 4)

In a closely contested debate the opposition defeated the motion of the government that "In Canada East is East and West is West and Never the Twain Shall Meet" at an open meeting of the Trinity College Literary Institute on Friday evening by a vote of 38-31.

George Ignatieff, first speaker for the affirmative, demonstrated that the east and west are economically incompatible. The maritimes are almost isolated from the rest of Canada and look to New York and Europe as a market for their products. SWIMMING CREW SHOWS FORM DESPITE HAZAROOUS TRIP

Wince McCatty Adds to Family Laurels, Piling Up Ten Points for Blues but is Beaten by Stratton in Exciting Backstroke Battle—Leads His Rival by Split Seconds in Main Relay

By George Vair

Buffalo, Jan. 19.—University of Toronto's crack swimming team maintained its perfect record in international aquatic competition when the Blue fin shakers came through with two clean cut victories over Buffalo State and Rochester University on the past week-end. Friday night's meet at the comparatively new State Teachers' Pool, Buffalo, was the scene of their first success when the Lowndes' coached swimmers ran up the overwhelming total of 58 points to 28 for State College and both clubs combined to shatter four records. The Yellowjackets of Rochester proved sterner competition with split seconds separating the competitors at the tape in almost every event, but the homesters failed to overcome Varsity's early lead and were forced to accept defeat, 48-36.

"Varsity" Masthead

The picture of The Varsity masthead will be taken at George Freeland's at 2 p.m. sharp on Tuesday, Jan. 21. A full turnout is requested.

Both meets attracted capacity crowds who either sat in a tense silence while their respective favourites churned their way through the crystal-green waters or cheered heartily as records replaced records before the devastating onslaught of the swimmers, who displayed grace, stamina and the speed worthy of champions.

The Buffalo meet saw Varsity chalk up three new marks to one for Buffalo, while the Blues added an additional two the following afternoon. Despite the fact that they had just completed a hazardous trip over ice coated roads in a driving sleet storm minutes before they plunged into the pool to engage in a thrilling duel with the Rochester sharks.

The State Teachers' College presented a highly improved team over their 1935 club but were still no match for the Blues, who won six events out of nine. C. McCatty started the records tumbling for the visitors when he bettered his own 150 yd. backstroke mark. Bickell made it two for the Blues (Continued on Page 3)

Rochester, Jan. 19.—Climaxing a four day tour of the eastern colleges the Varsity senior basketball squad dropped a hard fought battle to Rochester University 29-26 at the River Campus Palestra in a game which saw the Yellowjackets as heavy favourites to trounce the Blues, but they emerged victorious only in the dying moments and then by a 3-point margin. A home flavour was added by the visitors who trotted out five former Rochester boys and thereby added an incentive to every squad to win the ball game.

Rochester opened the game with a speedy attack and at half time maintained a five point margin. Toronto found their feet in the second half and counted ten points halfway through the period to take the lead 23-21. From there on the score see-sawed with Rochester gaining a three-point lead (Continued on Page 3)

Sandringham, Jan. 20.—The Empire's hopes for the King-Emperor were encouraged to-night by the news that came at 7.45 p.m. from the royal country home, reporting a quiet day and no change in His Majesty's condition. The fact cannot be hidden, however, that he is, due to his age, in a dangerous state.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—Toronto citizens who reposed confidence in the recently established matrimonial bureau will regret to hear that its existence was brought to an abrupt end by detectives last night and the proprietors are up on a charge of fraud.

Enlightened Cast Most Obscure About "Power of Darkness" but All Agree it is a Great Play

Toronto is to be made "tall-story conscious" if our Little Theatre Movement has its way. Nancy Pyper, the latest to fall for Russian drama, presents The Power of Darkness opening at Hart House tonight.

The reporter sent to see the impresario, met the fate of most journalists in quest of the illusive great Mrs. Pyper was not available, but a young blonde, holding down a desk, plus two members of the cast, cross-legged, pipe of peace style on the floor, were most helpful.

Facts concerning the play that all should note:

1. The costumes and scenery are

- authentic. Madame Gedonoff and the whole Russian colony say so.
- The play is a gruesome tragedy.
- The play is a roaring comedy.
- "The play is lightened at the end by the triumph of good over evil."
- The fence is cut off at three feet.
- The play is concerned with the life of the lower classes "Sordid but not immoral."
- George Bernard Shaw thinks the scene between the soldiers in a hay loft better than any love scene he has ever had the pleasure of witnessing.
- The play presents "life as it is, but there is idealism as well."

Right to Silence

A certain Mr. Martin Mooney, one of Mr. Hearst's more promising reporters, was recently hailed into court and charged with contempt because he refused to divulge the source of some information which led to the arrest of several men in New York's racketeering profession. While his information proved valuable to the court, the police thought that the source of information would prove even more valuable. They were of course disconcerted when Mr. Mooney steadfastly refused to divulge his sources. He was tried and convicted. He appealed and the Court of Appeals gave its decision. And according to them newspapers have no right to withhold the source of confidential information.

This is an alarming state of affairs. In fact it is highly probable that half the reporters in the profession are culprits. But it is very probable that they will remain outside the good graces of the law rather than divulge the sources from which they receive their information.

The freedom of the press is one of the most necessary things in our democratic state. Legislation has never yet been able to legislate a check on its own abuses which can correspond to that wielded by public opinion. And the press is the only means by which the public may keep informed. A check on legitimate practices of the press will certainly stifle the thought and expression of the limits of influence of the press.

When Mr. Mooney received his information it was in the form of a confidence. His work based on his information achieved considerable good in the community. Yet he is relegated to the category of a convict because he refused to violate a confidence. The act which the reporter perpetrated rendered a service to the community. Anyone rendering public service should be granted the right to reserve a confidence even from the court. His ability to continue to render this service depends directly on the way in which he treats his confidants. Should he violate this trust, this avenue of information is definitely and permanently closed. In remaining true to his promise he was doing a greater good to the community than he would have rendered in divulging his source. Such is the code of journalism—and such must it remain while the newspapers remain the source of information which they now are.

How Students Spend Their Time

In a recent issue of the New York Times Magazine, there appeared an article entitled "The Undergraduate Today: A Case Study", in which was discussed the problem of the average student's use of leisure time. The basis of the discussion was a survey of leisure time activities in a Midwestern university in the United States. It was found that the average male students in arts had, outside of the classroom and the library, 42 hours a week to devote to whatever form of activity he chose. These hours were employed by him as follows:

"Just loafing" 7 hours
Reading (extra-curricular) 6 hours
"Bull sessions", talking aimlessly 5 hours
Listening to particular radio programs 3½ hours
Dancing (exclusive of other forms of dating) 3½ hours
Athletics (informal or organized) 3 hours

Movies (5 pictures in four weeks) 3 hours
Non-athletic games (including bridge) 2 hours
Organized campus activities (clubs, discussions, etc.) 1½ hours
Drinking (exclusive of parties, dates, etc.) ½ hour

The remaining seven hours a week were divided between driving his own or someone else's car, other forms of dating besides dancing, drinking on parties, and cultural activities such as plays, concerts and debates. "Reading" meant the perusal of newspapers, magazines (Esquire and Photoplay) and light novels.

We wonder what the result of a similar survey of our own campus activities would be. The honour student, of course, has more hours of lectures per week than the pass-course student, and the non-resident student has less opportunity to enter into college activities than the resident. Certainly, for the non-resident students, a considerable amount of time is spent in getting from their homes to the college buildings and back again. The feminine portion of the campus population puts in at least one hour a day in the discussion of their contemporaries, male and female. Both sexes when solvent set aside about half an hour three times a week for a mid-morning, tea-time, or evening visit to a local soda-fountain or coffee shop. "Just hanging around" seems to take up a lot of our time. Organized campus activities would perhaps account for three hours a week, since almost everyone is interested in some kind of club or organization, and attends its meetings fairly regularly. Athletic activities would rank high in the first and second years, being compulsory. The "Proms" and the Saturday afternoon concerts at Massey Hall might bring up the average for cultural activities, but we doubt if our reading is any more "high-brow" than that of American students. Since the installation of radios in some of the women's residences, we don't doubt that the girls spend easily 3½ hours a week listening to Bing or Rudy or some other luminary of the ether.

On the whole, it is probable that we put in our spare time in just as aimless, unproductive and thoroughly agreeable ways as our American contemporaries, and we would resent with equal indignation any attempt on the part of the University to turn our surplus energy to other and more purposeful channels.

Poet of the Empire

... And the elements

So mixed in him, that Nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"
(Shakespeare)

We call upon England's greatest poet as we would pay obituary tribute to Rudyard Kipling. We cannot add to what has already been said in honour of that great Briton. It is sufficient, at this time, to reverently nod our approval.

Those who appreciate the literary work of Kipling are to be found wherever English is spoken. He is ranked among that very small group of men who see things as they are. He stands apart, even from that select group, with the gifted few who have the power to portray what they see.

His understanding of human nature in its variety of aspects; his courage to paint, with master strokes, his visions; his love of life's activities endeared him to millions of his fellow-men.

Together with his steadfast belief in the achievements and possibilities of mankind is that crowning greatness which recognizes human limitations. It was Rudyard Kipling who framed the prayer of a united humanity in words which will endure until the end of time.

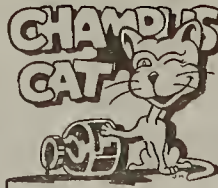

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

Neighbourhood joins some and religion others.
But there is one thing only which gathers people together into seditious communities, and that is oppression.—Locke.

To be 70 years young is sometimes far more cheerful than to be 40 years old.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Believe me, every man has his secret sorrows which the world knows not; and oftentimes we call a man cold when he is only sad.—Longfellow.

All great discoveries are not made by deep thinkers. Most of them come by accident.—Charles P. Kettering.

After spending the Christmas holidays disguised as a bottle of ink in the Chase and Sanborn advertising offices, we are in a position to provide our readers with an idea of the popular acclaim accorded the military microphonist, Major Bowes. Our imagination is incapable of comprehending just how startling the revelations might have been if we had not been thrown out at the ten day mark.

Chase and Sanborn,
c-o N.B.C.
Dear Sirs:

I read in the papers that by buying coffee I helped the amateurs get a start. What I want to know is just how much coffee I have to buy in order to get rid of Major Bowes.

That was pretty good wasn't it. I think up things like that naturally and if you want me to have an audition, just write me and I will hitch hike to New York right away.

Disgruntled.

Chase and Sanborn,
c-o N.B.C.
Dear Sirs:

I want you to know how much I adore that whimsical man Major Bowes. And the good work he is doing. Really, when I think of all the evil that tempts our young people today and how he removes them from it and puts them on the stage, really I am overwhelmed. I don't think everyone appreciates him, do you? It is only we few people that can get away from the hustle and bustle and enjoy the finer things that really understand him. Really, after the program finishes on Sunday, I just sit there and think.

I have been taking Fleischman's yeast

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Conservatory String Quartet

Last Saturday's recital by the Conservatory String Quartet included works by Beethoven, Sibelius and Haydn.

The Beethoven Quartet in A Major is one of his earlier works, and is based on the model set by Haydn and Mozart. The work is robust in character, well-constructed, but showing no trace of the intensity of his later works. The performance was disappointing, even the lovely andante movement sounding a trifle prosaic.

The Haydn Quartet in D Minor was more effective than the Beethoven, although both works seemed to lack the final polishing of phrase and cadence essential to music of this type—the type which is supposed to represent the utmost refinement in music.

The Quartet, Opus 56, ("Voices Intimate") of Sibelius, is his only essay in string quartet form. It is not very formal in style, and bears the stamp of its Nordic origin. There is something about Sibelius' music which is analogous to the cold, ruthless vitality of our modern Canadian paintings. The work is extremely interesting in all its five movements, particularly in the spirited "Vivace". T.D.N.

Friday Afternoon Recital

Those who attend the Friday Afternoon Recitals are beginning to realize what a multitude of talented young musicians Toronto possesses. Bobby Spergel, 'cellist, is no exception. Mr. Spergel has that rarest of all qualities among musicians, musicianship, and no doubt he will eventually acquire the certainty of technique and interpretation which only age and experience may bring.

Mr. Spergel opened his program with a group of Bach transcriptions, including Leo Smith's well-known arrangement of two Gavottes, and the less known but extremely suitable Harriet Cohen arrangement of "Bist du bei mir".

The Elgar Concerto, from which two movements were played, is perhaps the finest of all cello concertos. It is a

SENIOR SQUAD MEET DEFEAT AS LOSING STREAK CONTINUES

Blues Play Well on Defense but Fail to Click in Scoring Goals

PENALTY COSTLY

Shipman Unable to Check Savage Onrush During Second Stanza

By Al Rose
The "Magnificent Obsession" of Varsity's senior hockey squad remains unabated up to date as the Blues absorbed an 11-2 licking last Friday night in Hamilton. The Tigers were clashing with all fours during the game and the Varsity legends were simply out-classed all down the line.

As yet Varsity has failed to secure a single victory in senior O.H.A. competition since the 1933-34 season. However, Bailey's men did not give up without a tidy struggle and every man while in the game gave all he had in an effort to gain a win right in Tiger-town, something that has occurred only about two or three times this season.

The McMaster boys, the big, burly, broad-shouldered Apps and his comparatively diminutive pal Williamson, each scored four goals for Hamilton, while the remaining counters came from the sticks of Hastie, McGowan and Mackie. Thus the Mackie-Apps-McGowan line accounted for 6 goals and the Hastie-Chisholm-Williamson trio provided the other 5 markers to complete the Tiger total. Jeffrey and Driscoll counted for the Blues.

Varsity: Goal, Shipman; defence, Charles, Driscoll; centre, Lenahan; wings, Valiquette, Jeffrey; subs, McClelland, Kerr, Ripley, MacLiquham, Sissons, Caswell.

Hamilton: Goal, Teno; defence, Dunn, Hoch; centre, Hastie; wings, Chisholm, Williamson; subs, Radice, Kerr, Mackie, Apps, Johnston.

O.C.E. Batsmen Swamp Jr. Vics

O.C.E. swamped Jr. Vic in an inter-college baseball game played Friday afternoon in the Hart House gym by the score of 11-2.

Beare, pitching for O.C.E., held the Vic team to 3 hits while the Teachers got 8 hits and as many walks from the offerings of Marks, who pitched for Vic. The game was called at the end of the first three innings due to the five o'clock deadline.

Vic: Burgess, Casserly, Le Grice, Cumming, Wilkinson, Walker, Marks, Stewart, Bennett.

O.C.E.: Pollock, Fletcher, Oakley, Langdon, Darbyshire, Stroud, Griffith, Book, Beare.

Damning with faint praise: "This is a pretty good short story for a freshman."—Utah Chronicle.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By George Vair

Congratulations to Coach Roy Lowndes and his crack swimming team who repeated their last year's victory against Buffalo and Rochester last week-end. In addition to making a clean sweep in their annual southern invasion the Blue natators shattered five records. Rumour had it that the Blues were going down to defeat against a stronger Rochester squad but the student swimmers upset the dope and came out on top with 11 points to spare.

The second win is more significant considering the existing conditions. The trip to Rochester from Buffalo took 3 hours and was made in a blinding sleet storm over icy roads with visibility at a new low. Minutes after the boys arrived in the "Genesee" town they were in their swimming suits and battling it out with the Yellowjackets. If it had not been for the engineers who evidently learn enough in the little red school house to install windshield defrosters we would still be driving!

The Rochester meet was especially successful, both from a financial and competitive standpoint. A capacity crowd was in attendance and personally the events were the best we have ever seen. With such interest in games across the border and considering the badly mangled condition of amateur sport in Canada international competition is well worth attention as a permanent move.

Incidentally the swimming team drew headlines over the Louis-Retzlaff fight in the Rochester papers. Canadian officials could have learned a lesson in officiating at Rochester where nine events were run off in one hour and a quarter, including the diving, which takes up quite some time. Quick action, no delay and keen competition are always crowd drawers.

After listening to local gossip in Rochester regarding their strong basketball five this department had it doped out that the Toronto boys would be in for a drubbing. The final score read Rochester 29, Varsity 26, and would indicate that Canadian college basketball is going places fast. Remember basketball in the U.S. is almost a national pastime.

With indoor sports travelling at top speed we see no reason to stop us from telling you about a hitherto neglected sport in this column—indoor track. This season the club plans the usual Tuesday afternoon meets at Hart House, meets with the "Y" teams, in Hamilton, and possibly Montreal. Under the guidance of "Hee" Phillips the old guard are practicing daily but new blood is in demand. How about it, runners? If you have a spare moment drop up to the upper track tomorrow and see the 50 yd. dash and half-mile run off.

ugly sisters.

John Anderson, first speaker for the negative, put forth that it would be foolish for part of Canada to join the United States or become independent, because in every way she is developing into a national state, with east and west dependent on one another. Their natural resources are complementary and the railways are the chief cause of their unity. In spite of provincial differences there is a common Canadian sentiment and tradition which binds the people in one federation.

Roxalyn Read, second speaker for the affirmative, claimed that the social and cultural differences of east and west are too great to allow a harmonious union. The cast looks on the west as Europe does on America, with disdain, and the westerners resent it. British Columbia is a logical adjunct of the United States, the only objection being that the people are more British than the British. The cunning of the King St. and St. James St. money barons enrages the open-minded westerners, their temperaments are fundamentally different and there will always be a smouldering dislike between east and west.

Shirley Pettit, second speaker for the negative, spoke of the culture of Canada, which is producing a common Canadian loyalty. The Little Theatre, Canadian plays, the Group of Seven, music festivals, Canadian poets and novelists and the Canadian National Exhibition are all doing their part in uniting the east and west, French and English into one national unity.

down for two more goals in the final stanza.

The Beavers played their regular team with the addition of Shipman, Lenahan and Valiquette. The Tely were helped by Boston a strong defenceman brought up from the Oakville senior squad. Sissons was the outstanding man for Varsity with Shipman in goal second.

After about two minutes of play Boston opened the scoring for the Royals on a lucky play. Selkirk chalked up the next on a powerful rush assisted by Hamilton. Finally Varsity began to click. Valiquette took the puck, went down fast, outwitted the defence and passed it across in front of the net to Stavart, who slammed it home. Sissons made a fine solo attempt getting right in to the goal mouth but was unable to beat Carey, the capable netminder for the Tely.

Although no goals were scored in the second period it was the fastest of the game. The Beavers showed much improvement over their first appearance and led in the play throughout.

Beavers: Goal, Shipman; defence, Sissons, Wilson; forwards, Lenahan, Valiquette, Stavart; alternates, Galway, Boddington, Bigelow, Burchill, Disher.

Royals: Goal, Carey; defence, Upper, Boston; forwards, Johnson, Nicholson, McPherson; alternates, Hamilton, Selkirk, Adams, Fysher, Nugent.

and then managed to stall their way to victory in the final two minutes.

Russ Anderson led the point-gainers with 14 points and proved a hard man to handle throughout. Connolly and Marks were standouts for Toronto with 7 and 8 points respectively.

Varsity: N. Sullivan, Connolly 7, McGregory 3, Marks 8, T. Sullivan 5, Krakauer, Bedford 3.

Rochester: Van Graaf, Spies 1, Mason 8, Schafer 2, Brinker, Malibou 4, and Anderson 14.

when he nosed out Gardiner in the 220 yd. free style to replace the previous mark of 2:24 1-10 by 2:23 5-10.

Sarri, State's star swimmer, broke two records, finishing one length ahead of Jennings (Toronto) in the 200 yd. breast stroke and being forced to the limit to win over Scott in the 100 yd. free style and clip seconds from the former marks.

The meet at the River Campus Palestra pool, Rochester on the following afternoon was packed with thrills and excitement from the starter's gun of the first event until the last finishers climbed from the smooth, tiled green and white pool to end the meet. Every event was keenly contested with the Yellowjackets boasting a stronger string of men than lost to Varsity by two points last season, keen to make the score 1-11. Vince McCatty, captain of the Blues, was the keyman in Varsity's win, adding 10 points to the winners' tally.

Toronto took a four point lead in the opening event when Main, Scott, Otter and Bickle entered in the 200 yd. relay and engaged in a duel which had the fans on their feet till the finish. The first two swimmers finished in a dead heat, then Otter gained half a length and Bickle stayed on Smith's driving finish to touch the pool end a winner in the record time of 1:43 2-5.

Collins and Jennings placed first and second in the breast stroke to give Varsity a lead which was never relinquished but nevertheless seriously threatened at all times.

The third event, the 150 yd. back stroke, saw the defeat of Cressy McCatty at the falling hands and thrashing feet of Stratton, who is rated as the eastern states' crack backstroke artist, but only after a thrilling and pulsating battle. Dillworth was unfortunately disqualified for a faulty turn and Hooker finished in the third slot to give Rochester six points, their highest total of the day for one event.

Smith showed that he is still a top notch water cleaver when he won the 50 yd. dash over Otter and Scott by a respectable margin.

Wince McCatty swam a heady race in the 400 event, finishing strong to beat Platt, who set a fast pace from the start but faltered in the 15th lap and dropped into second place. The time was 5:44 or 4.5 seconds faster than the previous record. Three events later Wince came back to take the 220 yardly from Perigo and Griffiths. Undoubtedly a third record would have changed hands in this event had the competition been stiffer since the time was but a second shy of the existing mark.

Main lengthened the Blues' advantage when he won the 100 yd. in front of Svalback and Smith. Swett repeated his 1935 performance by annexing first place in the diving by a wide margin although Woods and Stratton finished second and third to count four points.

With Varsity leading 42-33 and certain winners the Hart House natators continued to pile up the points, adding six in the three man relay. The interest never flagged for here Cressy McCatty met Stratton who led him home in the backstroke and once the gun went the deal was on. The first three laps saw them swimming neck and neck but Cressy gained inches on the last turn and sped through the last lap, a winner by a head (more or less). Jennings added to the lead at De Wessie's expense and Mair covered the remaining distance.

School and the Royal College of Dental Surgeons, graduating and entering private practice in 1900. It was in 1925 during his term as dean that the School of Dentistry became a Faculty of the University of Toronto, and he was looked upon as one of the outstanding Deans of Dentistry of his time. In addition he was the founder and Professor of the Chair of Preventive Dentistry.

Dr. Secombe was the only Canadian to be elected president of the American Association of Dental Schools, and he served also as chairman of the Carnegie Corporation Curricular Survey of Dental Education for America. He was recognized as one of the best authorities on preventive dentistry and dental education, his advice being sought constantly by Canadian and American universities and associations. He was also the founder and editor for twenty-five years of the dental magazine "Oral Health".

Dr. Falconer observed that Dr. Secombe looked upon dentistry in a humanitarian way as a profession and not as a money-making concern. He had also beneficent interests outside the field of dentistry and his broad vision and interest in world affairs led to the founding in 1931 of "Canadian Comment," a national magazine of current events.

to his prime. A genius usually does his most useful work after the age of fifty but unfortunately in the past a large percentage have been killed off by diseases which are now under human control.

Among these great men were many who died as martyrs in the cause of humanity while they were seeking out the causes of the virulent diseases. Some died through ignorance, as was the case with Keats, who nursed his brother dying of tuberculosis, and contracted the disease himself. In the ignorance of medical treatment of the time he was starved, bled and made to take exhausting walks, all of which probably brought on even more quickly his untimely death at the age of 26.

Most of the diseases which formerly swept away these geniuses are now under control, the only one now to be feared to any great extent is influenza. Paul Peel died of this fearful disease in Paris at the age of 31 and Robert Burns was another victim at the early age of 37.

a veritable stumbling-block in the path of Japanese dominance of the country. Communism is fairly common among them, although it is kept under cover by a vigorous suppression policy on the part of the government.

The various Chinese boycotts of Japanese goods have been surprisingly successful considering the fact that they have no government backing, said Miss Mounier. It has been estimated that in the south, they have been about 89 per cent successful and 56 per cent effective in the north, where the people are more stolid and less easily moved.

Nor is the anti-foreign feeling confined entirely to the Japanese, although it is much less evident and deep-rooted toward other nations. All important nations, however, have at some time or other, taken advantage of situations in China, and the Chinese have not forgotten, although more enlightened policies of European governments in late years are doing much to lessen the feeling.

work in which orchestra and cello are carefully balanced and contrasted, the unique properties of every instrument having their place in the general scheme. Hence, it is as futile to play the concerto without the orchestra (for the piano is no substitute) as it would be to play the concerto without the cello. The work contained some interesting passages, but, like all such transcriptions, was unbalanced and completely lacking in unity.

Mr. Spergel closed his program with three short pieces; "Prayers," by Ernst Bloch, and two works by Davidoff, a prolific composer of music designed primarily to add spice to a cello recital.

French Club Play

"Ces Dames aux Chapeaux Verts," a romantic comedy by Acrement, will be presented by the University College French Club as their feature production this year. In making their choice of this play the officials of the society feel that they have something modern with a definite appeal of humour and charm.

Professor Finch and Miss A. G. Cole, who have directed the club's productions in the past, will be assisted by a newcomer to the staff of the University, Jean Houpert, late of the University of Chicago. Under their direction will be many of the actors and actresses who have taken part in former presentations by the society and several newcomers to the French drama. Stanley Aquarone, who carried off the title role in "M. Perrichon" last year and Eric Medcalf are two of the veterans who will be assisted by such capable performers as Anita Paessler. The play will be presented on Thursday evening, February 6.

Sunday Evening Concert

A delightful program was provided by the New World Chamber Orchestra last night. The program began with a group of 17th century music, including the richly harmonious "Aria," by Teagalia, a lively tambourin by Aubert, the tender, familiar Boccherini Minuet, and a glowing, multi-voiced fugue by Bach.

The Mozart Divertimento, on the borderline between the ancient dance suite and the later sonata form, was a masterpiece of dainty precision.

The final group consisted of several well-known modern pieces: Shostakovich's "Valse Triste," a work of shuddering sadness and very beauty; the vividly descriptive "Flight of the Bumble Bee," and Debussy's lovely tone-poem: "La Fille aux Cheveux de Lin." The Danse Espagnole, by de Falla, is not quite effective in a Chamber Orchestra, being reminiscent of those shimmering ensembles which play musical comedies against a background of clattering dishes.

Two encores were played: a playful fantasy entitled "Peacock Pie," and the racy "Molly on the Shore" by Grainger.

When, in the title role of Sylvia Scarlett, Miss Katherine Hepburn is good, she is very very good; but when she is bad, lousy is no word for it.

Which comment may have a familiar ring, but it was never so applicable to any motion picture as to the current presentation on the Imperial screen. The young and girlish Sylvia Scarlett becomes the young and boyish Sylvester C. at the beginning of the picture, to live a carefree outlaw life with her widowed father who has a weakness for easy money. The idea is to build up to a meeting with a handsome young artist, Brian Aherne, living at an English seaside resort, with whom Sylvia falls in love. From this point on Miss Hepburn gives charm and humor to her characterization of the young Sylvia who, turning boy again, tries so hard to overcome her acquired boyish awkwardness and her inexperience in affairs of the heart, in order to win the affection she desires.

But the first part of the picture, the "build up", is absolutely painful in the looseness with which succeeding sequences are tumbled together, and the weakness of its action which more than once is allowed to degenerate into the most inappropriate slap stick. As for photography, there is a moonlight garden party which looks as if it had been taken under a blazing California sun, and probably was. Too bad, all this, for the real story is in the second half of the film which is delightfully entertaining in the best Hepburn manner.

The "Symphonic Hour", with Reginald Stewart directing the Imperial symphony orchestra on the stage (69 pieces—69 this week) offers a varied and popular classical program. Mr. Stewart's penchant for Russian compositions provides the dominant tone of the program, with selections by Rimsky-Korsakov and Tchaikovsky, and also the tone poem Stenka Razin, built about the popular Volga boat song theme.

R.G.A.

The presentation at Loew's this week seems to be based on the hope that the people who got into the habit of dropping in to see the Marx Bros. two or three times a week will absently continue the practice. The feature presentation, Rendezvous, is only average entertainment and the paucity of the short subject lowers the tone of the whole program.

Rendezvous is the melodramatic account of the conflict between the U.S. intelligence department and a German spy ring during the war. Like most melodramas, the story is perforated with many inconsistencies which we found difficult to digest. William Powell, who looks like he would be physically classified in section J 45 row Z, spends a good part of the picture trying to get overseas. However the intelligence department cannot get along without him so the setting remains in Washington, for which we should all be thankful. Rosalind Russell, playing the feminine lead, gives a very inconsistent characterization. Her role is that of a comedienne but she depends on two irreconcilable sources for the laughs. For half the picture she comes forth with much brilliant repartee which is meant to lay us in the aisles but for the other half she gives a lower upper class version of Gracie Allan. During the whole show she remains attractive enough to raise the animal in William Powell, who, judging from the circles under his eyes, must be in the midst of the roaring forties.

ANTI-WAR CONFERENCE

presented the Workers Party at the Conference. Mr. MacDonald declared that the workers were in danger of being deluded into fighting a capitalist war by the slogan "Fight against reactionary fascism." The workers must not unite with the bourgeoisie in defence of democracy, against fascism, but rather make the coming war into one of victory for international socialism. The League of Nations he described as a "League of bandits formed for the preservation of the spoils of the last war." Organization into a unified front and a militant struggle against capitalism were, according to Mr. MacDonald, the only weapons against imperialism war.

The present-day situation in the Communist International was compared to that in the Second International at the outbreak of war in 1914 by Thomas Mill, representative of the League for a Revolutionary Workers Party. The workers were betrayed at that time, since each national section of the International was advised to act as it saw fit in the crisis, he continued. "Today we are given advance notice of the betrayal, and still have time to prepare." Mr. Mill declared that only working class opposition could be effective against war. "We must keep alive the principle of working class internationalism at all costs," he concluded.

EMPIRE MOURNS KING GEORGE V

ROUTINE OF CLASSES WILL BE CONTINUED STATES DR. WALLACE

Caput will Arrange Memorial Service that will not Interfere with Work

CANCEL NIGHT CLASSES

Dr. Cody's Return Eagerly Awaited by Heads of University

Lectures in the University will be continued today, said Principal M. W. Wallace of University College, last night, when informed of the death of the King.

"Dr. Cody will be back in the city early tomorrow morning," he announced, "and the Caput will no doubt meet to make suitable arrangements."

"Plans will certainly be such that they will not unduly interfere with the work of the University," Principal Wallace said.

Mr. A. B. Fennell, Registrar of the Confederated Colleges, stated that to the best of his knowledge the ordinary routine will be followed. When asked if the new King held a degree from this University, Mr. Fennell volunteered the information that both King Edward VIII and the late King George had been conferred honorary degrees. When King Edward VIII received the honour, he wore the same robe of scarlet that was worn by Lord Tweedsmuir at Convocation Hall recently.

Evening classes scheduled for this evening have been cancelled as were those of last night, it was learned from Mr. W. J. Dunlop, Director of University Extension and Publicity.

"I should think," said Mr. Dunlop, "that a Memorial Service will be held here in the late King's honour."

GEORGE THE BELOVED

HIS MAJESTY KING GEORGE V OF ENGLAND

WEAKENED HEART CONDITION ENDS MOMENTOUS REIGN OF MONARCH OF WORLD'S GREATEST EMPIRE

Universally Beloved Sovereign Died Shortly before Seven O'clock E.S.T. at Sandringham Surrounded by His Immediate Family

A SUCCESSFUL RULER AND A WISE LEADER

Sir William Mulock, University Chancellor, Pays Tribute to Dead Monarch—"Not Only a Prince but a Great Man Has Fallen"

Britain's Imperial monarch, King George V of England, died just before midnight at his estate at Sandringham and today a sorrowing Empire mourns the loss of their King who reigned for a quarter of a century during one of the most epochal eras in history.

Surrounded by his family, the King died at 11.58 p.m. (6.58 E.S.T.) and the Prince of Wales automatically became sovereign of the British Empire. At 41 years of age he becomes King Edward VIII.

Queen Mary cried softly as she held her husband's hand and listened to his last labored breathing.

Lord Dawson of Penn, physician to the King since 1907, announced the King's death, addressing himself to the Prince of Wales. "Your Majesty," he said, "your father is dead."

The flag at Sandringham fluttered to half mast and as the fateful word was flashed to the waiting world by cable and short wave the Union Jacks of the Empire were lowered in respect to the King, so loved and respected by his 500,000,000 subjects.

University undergraduates and members of the faculty were shocked at the news, expected as it was after the physicians gave up hope for his recovery late yesterday afternoon.

Chancellor's Tribute

Sir William Mulock, Chancellor of the University of Toronto and Chief Justice of Ontario spoke with great emotion in giving a tribute to the deceased monarch.

"Although His Majesty did not manifest the qualities of a great man nevertheless the hold he had acquired on the hearts of his subjects and on the whole world goes to show that today not only a Prince but a great man has fallen in Israel," said Sir William.

President Cody, returning from Boston where he addressed a gathering at Harvard University, was informed of the King's death while his train passed through Albany, N.Y. He will arrive in the city today and it is believed a special meeting of the Caput will be held.

Throughout yesterday afternoon, the short wave from England brought the latest bulletins on His Majesty's condition and hundreds of University students listened anxiously for the statement from the doctors.

Old Malady Proves Fatal

Taken ill last Friday, the King developed bronchial catarrh and although hope was held for a recovery his condition grew steadily worse yesterday.

"The King's condition is unchanged," was the brief message that Canadians heard through the rumble of the static at noon.

Then dramatically at five-thirty Lord Dawson of Penn issued the statement that sent gloom around the world to every corner of the Empire.

The official bulletin, pregnant with meaning and foreboding, said, "The life of the King moves peacefully towards its close."

Throughout the evening the breathing of His Majesty became heavier and more forced. He was given oxygen but all the genius of his doctors could not prevent him slipping closer to death's door. His last act was to sign a document, in a quivering hand guided by his doctor, appointing counsellors of state to assume most of the royal duties during His Majesty's grave illness.

Then as the midnight hour approached, his family was admitted into the sick room and just before the stroke of midnight the Empire's monarch passed to his reward.

Deeply Affected by Sister's Oath

The King has just passed through the year of the Silver Jubilee celebration and had spent Christmas with his family at Sandringham House. The strain of the Jubilee and the death of his sister early in December, undoubtedly had taken toll of his strength. Intimates said the King's last wish had been granted—that his last hours be spent in quiet and peaceful Sandringham House.

For the new King Edward VIII there were but a few hours of (Continued on Page 4)

Edward, Prince of Wales, succeeded to the Crown immediately upon the death of his father last night. It is believed that he will assume the title of King Edward VIII, for, informing the Lord Mayor of London of the death of King George, he signed the message "Edward."

The message to the Lord Mayor said: "I am deeply grieved to inform you that my beloved father, the King, passed away peacefully at 11.55 tonight."

The proclamation of the new King will follow in a day or two and will probably be signed by the male members of the Royal Family, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Privy Counsellors in attendance, and the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and other officials of the City of London. A little later the Houses of Parliament will meet to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy. A formal public proclamation of the new King will follow at St. James' Palace. It will be read in public by the Garter Principal King of Arms. Immediately after the (Continued on Page 4)

C.O.T.C. Dance, St. Joseph's Ball Among the Functions Postponed

JR.-SR. DANCE INDEFINITE

The C.O.T.C. dance, the University of Toronto's one big military social event of the year, which was to take place Friday night, has been cancelled, due to the death of His Majesty, it was announced last night.

Plans for the U.C. Junior-Senior dance also scheduled for Friday night, are indefinite. It will be decided today if the dance will take place.

"Owing to the death of His Majesty, King George V, the annual ball of the Canadian Officers' Training Corps, previously scheduled for January 24th, will be postponed until early in March," was the statement made last night by Col. H. H. Madill. It was made known at the same time that there would be no C.O.T.C. parade.

Jack Brunk, handling the Junior-Senior dance of University College, announced that the executive had not decided as yet whether or not it would be cancelled. The sale of tickets, however, which was to take place today, has been tentatively put off until Wednesday. (Continued on Page 4)

Student Body Pays Tribute with Lowered Flag and Cancelled Functions

NEWS RELAYED BY RADIO

Undergraduates of the University of Toronto made preparations today for a fitting tribute to the memory of their beloved monarch who died last night. The University flag pole facing Hart House will carry the flag at half mast until the funeral ceremonies have been completed.

Last night theatregoers unaware of the passing of the King were turned away from Hart House Theatre. The Board of Syndics had postponed indefinitely the production of Tolstoy's Power of Darkness scheduled to open this week.

The joint meeting of the University College Literary Society and the Women's Union Association planned for Wednesday night, has been cancelled by executives of both organizations, according to the president of the W.U.A., Miss Joyce Arnold.

Students in the University residences received the news of the death of the King by radio. Throughout the late (Continued on Page 4)

Empire Pays Tribute To The Dead Sovereign

Throughout the length and breadth of the British Empire the Union Jack is today flying at half mast, a mute tribute from 500,000,000 mourning subjects bowed in sorrow at the death of their sovereign.

The world-wide sympathy which is expressed at the passing of King George V is in itself the most eloquent commentary which could be made to the nobility of character of the deceased king.

Throughout his youth when, as the Duke of York, and later as the Prince of Wales he acquainted himself with the interests of the Empire he was to rule, he manifested a sympathetic understanding of his people which endeared him to their hearts. In his twenty-six years as sovereign this same quality, together with his zealous efforts to promote the welfare of his people has ever been apparent.

The reign of King George V was a momentous one in the history of the world. Kings and emperors have wavered and toppled from their thrones; governments and nations were destroyed in an age of political and social upheavals—but the British Empire has not lost in prestige. Nor has the prevailing revolt against authority, which has tended to disrupt social structures, been felt as keenly within the Empire as without.

Powerful and influential in an unobtrusive manner the dead king brought the throne of England closer to the people than it has ever been before. So today the thoughts of British subjects throughout the world centre in the little English town where a sovereign lies dead surrounded by the royal family bereaved beyond human comforting.

Hauptmann Case A Public Side-show

Last night Bruno Richard Hauptmann received an eleventh hour reprieve. With this stay of execution, the greatest sideshow of modern times will hammer down its stakes more securely and put up some garish new pictures out front. That sideshow barker, the press, all set to wind up his spiel with last tidbits about the electrocution, will again pound his drum and the gaping audience can settle back comfortably to enjoy more of the biggest show on earth.

Although everyone agrees that it was a very good one, the main performance, played at Flemington, New Jersey, has aroused a strong criticism for the way in which it was staged. The press, which has ridden the divine right of freedom of press to the limit, has been the principal target of criticism, probably because it is the most obvious one.

Without defending the newspapers for their action in covering the Hauptmann trial, it may be pointed out that the other news agencies have been no less offensive.

The newsreels, which took talking pictures of the court procedure after the bench had forbidden photography; the radio, with its hordes of "commentators" who listened intently to the testimony for an hour or two and then rushed to microphones to assure the nation of the defendant's guilt—they, too, are to be blamed.

And the bar, which in purple-faced indignation denounces the press for trial by tabloid—is it in a position to smash halos? Court procedure and judges, which permit turning a trial into a travesty are no credit to lawyers and law.

Above all, the Hauptmann case is an indictment of the American public; a public that fought to get into the New Jersey courtroom and turned the night into a carnival when the jury condemned a man to death. A public that bolts all the publicity trash and asks for more. The Hauptmann case has tried American life and institutions and finds them guilty.

Student Government

The Students' Assembly has shown commendable foresight and initiative in planning a convention at the University for campus leaders of the colleges and universities of Texas to discuss common problems of student life and means to increase services of their respective student governments.

Student government is the object of criticism by many persons on the grounds that "those college kids, not knowing what is good for them, would do well to abide by the rulings of their elders and concentrate their efforts to getting an education." Needless to say, student government generally has many faults, but its benefits far outweigh its deficiencies.

One of the outstanding points in favour of student government is its tendency to cause students to become acquainted with those institutions with which they are connected, learning the shortcomings of those institutions as well as their own. Much of the educational progress made in this and other countries has been the direct or indirect influence of the thoughts and efforts of the younger generation, seemingly ever ready to improve on the status quo.

This tendency has been termed radical and immature. Perhaps it is. Nevertheless, things are not improved by inactivity. And youth is ever ready to act.

The trouble is that the desire to act has caused much wasted effort. Not knowing in which direction to move, youths have been found butting their heads against stone walls while a ladder has been hidden in the bushes nearby.

It is expected that through the student government convention here, the University might serve other institutions in pooling the better governmental procedures of each for general consumption. And the University has plenty of room to receive whatever benefit might await.

Student government has been called powerless. But student government has plenty to do. Most of its powers, privileges, and potentialities lie waiting. The greatest need of student government is to know what they are and how they may be best utilized.

Intelligence?

Despite desperate attempts of the enlightened few to stem the tide of distorted opinion which sweeps over even the "educated" campus-folk, the vast majority still hold stubbornly to their opinion of the "intelligent" student. Somehow, somewhere was instilled in us the idea that intelligence can be measured only by the ranking which a member of the student body receives at the end of the academic year. Nay, even those who deny the validity of this orthodox opinion to the world at large, keep faith with it in their hearts. Nor can the logic of experience dislodge this idiotic illusion.

It is, of course, impossible to doubt that academic achievement is of the utmost significance. Impossible because it would throw a bombshell in the midst of the misguided many, and rude awakenings are banned in student life. The ability to concentrate, to cope with certain types of doctrinary theory or mathematical formula constitute, yes, intelligence. But were one to discuss with some masters of their respective fields on a common sense basis, matters of a different sort, these "intelligent" ones, having not studied definite problems or compared obvious opinions, flounder in a morass of undisguised ignorance. Yet those who demonstrate adverse reaction to that crooked measuring rod known as "examinations", those who can discuss clearly, coherently and with logical inference, matters of general interest, because of the former and despite the latter, are "stupid", "ignorant" or "unintelligent".

Efforts, to be permanently useful, must be uniformly joyous—a spirit all sunshine—graceful from very gladness, beautiful because bright.—Carlyle.

"Man, who began as an ape afflicted with melancholia, is now essentially a savage who fancies himself civilized."—Dr. Inge.

Hither and Yon

The Sheaf, University of Saskatchewan paper, last term published an interesting though uncomplimentary commentary of The Varsity, but we did not receive that or succeeding copies of the publication, and thereby, as Kipling would say, hangs a tale. It seems that The Sheaf was also frank about R. B. Bennett, the British Empire, and the Regina riot trial. Apparently treating The Varsity and so on with disrespect savours of sedition to the Attorney-General of Saskatchewan and the Canadian Legion. Accordingly mailed copies of that dangerous newspaper were seized in the mails, and not delivered.

Incidentally, the western college papers are pretty radical in their outlook, especially supporting the Regina trekkers to the limit.

The grounds foreman at the University of Georgia is poetically inclined, and, as a result, the Georgia campus displays this sign:

"U. of Georgia son or daughter
Do you love your alma mater?
If so—it should be your duty
To protect her vernal beauty.
Man or woman, youth or lass,
Please don't step upon the grass."
Here they use fences.

The University of Wisconsin is the only institute of higher learning on this continent which sells beer in its buildings. The university president says that you cannot even mention the horrid word in other student unions. Wisconsin prides itself on freedom of speech and action. Last year a night club was opened on the campus under college control acting on the principle that it is better to have the students wine and dine and dance on their own health than to have them seek their pleasures in non-collegiate entertainment spots.

A freshman at the University of Texas caught handing in a copied theme was halted before the faculty tribunal where he received loss of credit for the theme plus a year of disciplinary probation by way of punishment. Had he attended the university more than one semester he would have been expelled.

Queen's University has the type of college spirit which is most worthy of emulation, according to President Murray of the University of Saskatchewan. Acadia, Dalhousie and McMaster are close behind says the president, calling on all his students to rally to the support of their alma mater with renewed zeal now that Saskatchewan is to have a fine new stadium.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Massey Hall

Nothing is quite so terrible for a concert violinist as a reputation for the more extravagant forms of virtuosity. If he does not put on a display of double-harmony, precarious runs, incredible trills, do everything, in short, except stand on his head and wiggle his ears, his audience goes away disgruntled. If, on the other hand, he behaves as he is expected to, he is sure to get the critical raspberry. It is a painful duty to bestow it herewith on Jan Kubelik.

His concert in Massey Hall last night was a cumulative exposition of technique—technique above reproach and apparently effortless. Except in Bach's Concerto in G Minor, for two violins, his interpretive faculty had hardly a chance to show itself. In this he was joined by Anita Kubelik and together they did a restrained, musicianly performance. Raphael Kubelik playing the orchestral score on the piano, completed the ensemble; a reminiscent picture of the Victorian family music party.

Goldmark's Concerto in A Minor was a highly ornamented piece of no value. The second movement (Air) was charmingly done.

After the intermission, Kubelik played short compositions of Tchaikovsky, Paganini, and his own. His Ballade was quite up to the Walse Scherzo of Tchaikovsky, a greatly overrated composer. Two numbers by Paganini, whose execution Kubelik is said to resemble, were naively complex.

"Murder Pattern"

On January the 24th and 25th, at the Central High School of Commerce, Herman Voeden is presenting "Murder Pattern", his most recent play for a symphonic theatre. "Murder Pattern" continues the experiment undertaken in "Rocks" and "Hill-and", and employs the same devices—lyrical voices, and stylized settings, on which play rapidly changing lights and colours.

Two plays precede the presentation of "Murder Pattern". One is a delightful farce comedy based on a Russian folk tale, by Virginia Coyne Knight, "The Mighty Mister Samson", in which the heroine, a widow and a "managing woman", employs very humorous tactics in her desire to out-rival the attractions of her pig.

The other play, "Barent's Son", is by Jameson Field, whose "Street of St. John", was produced by the Play Workshop last year. The scene of settlement of United Empire Loyalists "Barent's Son" occurs in the early in the Bay of Quinte district.

The interfaculty hockey practices are getting under way now. St. Hilda's are having their first one tonight from seven to eight. Vic have had three or four already, and although they have lost a number of last year's players, they have still got a lot of good material. Molly Slater of last year's all-star team is coaching the girls, and it is hoped that there will be two teams.

Maisie Cowan, Gladys Wagg and Ruth Leavens will again be playing for the Scarlet and Gold first team. Most of last year's second team are turning out, and there is some promising new material. Joy Brownlee and Mildred McGillis are two freshies who are expected to do big things for their college.

There will be a meeting of the Hockey Club Executive at four-thirty today in Room 82, in University College. Betty Mark, the President, is hoping that the schedule can be drawn up very shortly, but the hours at which rinks can be secured are as yet very indefinite.

BURNS TO BE TOPIC OF SNYDER LECTURES

American Professor to Discuss Poet's Personality, Art, and Reputation

THREE LECTURES

This year, the Alexander lectures will be delivered by Professor Franklyn Snyder of Northwestern University. He has chosen "Robert Burns" as his topic.

Professor W. J. Alexander was for many years head of the department of English in University College. As a teacher of English he became internationally famous. On his retirement a few years ago his friends, among whom were many who had studied under him, raised a fund to be used as a memorial to the great work he had done during his long and honourable career. These friends decided that it would be best to establish an annual lectureship in English.

Each year, some distinguished scholar is selected and is asked to deliver three lectures on some topic that comes within the field of English literature. Professor Alexander, who is still active and in good health, occupies a seat on the platform during these lectures.

Professor Snyder will treat his subject, "Robert Burns", under the three headings, "His Personality", Reputation" and "Art". These lectures will be delivered at 5 p.m. in Hart House Theatre, on January 29, 30, and 31, respectively.

STAFF WINS VICTORY OVER STUDENT TEAM IN CHESS MATCH

The annual staff-student chess match was characterized by a particularly strong team for the staff. The students were short one of their players but made a creditable showing by winning 3 games, and losing 5.

At top board R. B. Hayes crashed through the centre for a mate after a couple of indifferent moves by V. C. Smith for the staff. A. D. McConnell was also successful for the students in a steadily played game against C. A. Ashley which was featured by thrilling moments. A. R. Grahame-Joy lost in surprisingly rapid time to G. H. Needler after a bad start. G. H. Perrin blundered at the very last against J. Hvilivitzky, but his position was clearly bad. A. L. Rubinoff was the third shining light for the students in his defeat of B. de F. Bayly. At sixth board D. L. Turner put up a losing battle against C. F. Morrison. D. Scott was very unfortunate in losing his game after having a clear win against C. Barnes.

Believes Dunning's Scheme of Economy

TWO PLANS FOR LOANS

Dominion Government Aims to Bolster Canada's Credit
by Proposition

"It is not clear whether Mr. Dunning's plan for a loan council for Canada involves a proposal to replace old debts with new issues at lower interest rates." Such is the opinion of A. F. W. Plumtre of the Department of Economics as expressed in an interview granted yesterday. Contrary to the views of Toronto's daily papers, Mr. Plumtre emphasized the fact that the Loan Council proposition does not definitely contain a scheme for economy through conversion of existing provincial bonus.

There are two schemes for a Loan Council, he said. First a central Loan Council consisting of all provincial treasurers, the minister of finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada as adviser. This council would be entirely advisory. Second a loan council consisting of the provincial treasurers of those provinces which desired to join the Minister of Finance and again the Governor of the Bank of Canada as adviser. Mr. Plumtre stated that the purpose of the latter type would be to aid the provinces in distress by extending a dominion guarantee to new loans.

The aim of the dominion government in fostering a loan council would be to strengthen Canada's credit through "restricting financing" and exercising a "closer control over the rate and type of public borrowing". Mr. Plumtre expressed the opinion that

LOWER CANADA YOUTH

Policy of French Canada One of Separation from Dominion?

PROBLEM GROWS ACUTE

Confederation did not Fill Hopes of Lower Canada
Says Paul Gouin

By Tom Irving

We often hear that British Columbia would like to form a Crown Colony all to itself on the Pacific Coast, that the Prairies would like to join the United States, or that the Maritimes are sickened with Confederation and would like to break away from the Dominion. But how often do we hear that the policy of modern French-Canadianism is the separation of the province of Quebec from the rest of Canada?

This problem is growing more acute, for it is being taught in the schools of our sister province, and the youth of Lower Canada are even more in favour of a new nation, "Laurentia", than their parents.

Recently the Opposition of the Quebec Legislature held a meeting in St. Hyacinthe wherein Mr. Paul Gouin, one of its leaders, brought the situation more clearly into public light than it has been at almost any time. In speaking of the British North America Act, he said:

"This pact should really assure the general prosperity of all the provinces of the Dominion, permit a Canadian state of mind to the two racial groups which compose them, and impose respect for the minorities."

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Clarke Hood

The Sports world lost a very enthusiastic patron when the Grim Reaper took the life of the Empire's beloved sovereign. In all phases of athletic endeavour the King displayed an ardent interest, which was not dimmed by his advancing years.

His yearning for the sea, born with his service in the navy, did not abate when he was forced on becoming Prince of Wales to leave the Royal Fleet and devote his time to the affairs of state. His hobby was yachting and for many years his yacht the "Britannia" won the annual race around the Isle of Wight with His Majesty himself at the helm, defying persistent efforts of England's yachters to defeat him. When his previous serious illness forced him to retire he had established an enviable record which will not be equalled for a long time.

Hunting was another of the King's favourite pastimes. The thrills and hazards of the chase appealed to him as it does to so many red-blooded Englishmen. Ironically enough it was while enjoying a pony ride over the downs of Norfolk that he received the chill that was to cause his death.

While these were the limits to his active participation yet his interest in other lines of Sport was none the less apparent. It was the proud boast of Tom Daly, ex-manager of the Toronto Baseball Club, that he was the only Canadian to knock a home-run before the King of England. It happened when Tom was a member of a team of major league ball players which toured England several years ago.

The tennis tournament held annually at Wimbledon was usually favoured by a visit from His Majesty. Epsom on the day of the English turf classic, the Grand National, was a favourite rendezvous for the King and members of his family. Among the huge crowds that attended important cricket and soccer matches the First Man of the Empire could usually be found.

The Beloved Monarch will long be remembered by all those who reverence Sports for the sheer love of participation. In all his varied activities he consistently upheld the Sportsman's motto of "Play the Game".

Forestry Trims Wycliffe
In Hard Fought Game

Wycliffites Held Opponents to a One-point Lead in First Half

FORESTRY TEAM POWERFUL

The powerful Forestry aggregation handed the basketballers from Wycliffe a 31-18 trimming yesterday afternoon. The Lumbermen showed decided superiority in every department. The Wycliffe lads tried hard but after holding their opponents to a one-point lead in the first half, 12-11, were unable to cope with the flashy attack of the green and black five during the second session. The main spokes in the Forestry wheel which steam-rolled the Wycliffites were Hicks, Dargavel and Harrison. Hicks showed himself to be the best man on the floor as he ran in four baskets in each half to lead the scorers. Dargavel accumulated nine and Harrison four to add to the Forestry total. For the hard-fighting Wycliffe squad, Fairweather and Cardy scintillated with the former being the outstanding player on his team.

Wycliffe: Fairweather, Cardy, Rush, Simmonds, Chever, Coleman, Willkinson, Cathcart, Paterson.

Forestry: Harrison, Hick, Chalk, Mah, Grinnel, Ward, Dargavel, Ballantyne.

DR. PORTER WILL GIVE SERIES OF LECTURES
TO FIRST YEAR MEN

The Athletic Directorate has arranged for Dr. Porter to deliver a series of three lectures to first year men. The subjects on which he is to talk are Artificial Respiration, Personal Hygiene, and First Aid. Because of the large number of men in first year, it has been found necessary to divide them into three groups, and the lectures will be given to each group. Although it is compulsory only for first year Physical Training students, men of other years are welcome to attend if they wish, and if there is room.

Sr. School Triumph
In Water Polo Game

Jr. Meds Triumph Over Jr.
School in Close Defensive Game in Hart House

VICTORIA WINS BY DEFAULT

Interfaculty waterpolo got under way in Hart House pool yesterday afternoon with more enthusiasm and ability being displayed than has been seen in this sport for some years. Jr. Meds won from Jr. S.P.S. by a 2-0 score and then Sr. School evened the count by scoring a decisive 4-1 win over the Sr. Medicals. Victoria won the third scheduled game by default when St. Mike's were unable to produce enough men to make a team.

The strong defensive work of Brown and Penfold, who held their opposing forwards well in check, was mainly responsible for Jr. Meds' victory. The teams were very evenly matched with the Medicals playing a more careful defensive game. Outstanding on the forward line was the work of Adams, who scored both of the Meds' goals.

Sr. S.P.S. had little trouble disposing of their Medical rivals. Their centre, Bruce, reached the ball first on every face-off, and their combination was too much for the Meds, who threw away several scoring chances. Bruce, Schmitt, Jakanko and Welch did the scoring for Sr. School. Dick tallied once for Sr. Meds.

Jr. Meds: Stratton, McGill, Adams, Caven, Brown, Penfold, Taylor, Stubbard, Wallace, Harris.

Jr. S.P.S.: Chambers, Veal, Hogg, Dunlop, Laari, Greer, Partridge, Coy, Smith.

Sr. Meds: Singer, Wallace, Witter, Dick, Turnbull, Middleborough, Sheppard, Steinbart, Korman.

Sr. S.P.S.: Jakanko, Bruce, Young, Schmitt, Welch, Charters, Thompson, Lily.

Varsity Pucksters To Meet Sailors

Dinty Moore's Absence Gives Varsity Chance to Win Game

MacPHERSON NOT PLAYING

Tonight at Varsity Arena the Big Blue team meets the hard and fast Port Colborne Sailors, in what promises to be one of the best games of the current season. The Sailors, running in third place, will be doing their best to add to their points, while Varsity has a wonderful opportunity to win their first game. The Port team has lost the services of their star goalkeeper, Dinty Moore, who has joined up with the Olympics. Moore has been one of the main reasons for the present success of the Ports, and they will have a heavy psychological handicap to overcome. If Ace Bailey's boys can turn on the heat for a power-play, there is no reason why they should not turn in a win, and end their present losing streak.

Jimmy MacPherson is still on the absent list, but the rest of the team is intact—Jim still has a bad limp. McClelland will lead the Blues and ought to be able to down the visitors.

Come out for the game—the team is still fighting, and certainly deserves your support. The odds are against them, so how about cutting the odds down? See you at the game. Ticket number 22 of the students' book gets you in.

private sorrow. He was called to London almost immediately to assume, with traditional ceremony, the mantle of kingship.

The late George V, by the Grace of God, Emperor of India, of Great Britain and Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Sea, King, Defender of the Faith, was born George Frederick Ernest Albert on June 3rd, 1866.

Empire's Sailor King

In his early days in Sandringham, England, he heard many stories of the sea from the lips of the Reverend Lake Onslow, and these bred in him a deep desire to become a sailor. He entered as a naval cadet at Dartmouth in 1877, at the age of 11, and spent the next two years on the training-ship Britannia. He was then transferred to H.M.S. Bacchante for a three-years' trip around the world.

In 1883, he joined H.M.S. Canada, passing his first-class seamanship test on that ship, and was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant in 1885. For the next three years, he served in various capacities on the ships Thunderer, Dreadnought, and Alexandria.

Won Hearts of His Subjects

Affairs of state called him away from his beloved navy in 1898 and he and his wife, Princess Victoria Mary of Teck, set about preparing themselves for the day when they would mount the thrones of the Empire, by quietly endearing themselves to the teeming millions within that Empire. The years 1901-04 were spent in almost continuous travel through the British Dominions, including a coast-to-coast trip across Canada.

The King and Queen, then the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall, visited Toronto in 1901, on their return trip from Vancouver. Enthusiastic crowds greeted them, drowning with their cheers, the voices of the choir waiting to greet the Royal visitors on the steps of the City Hall.

George, then Prince of Wales, became King on the sudden death of his father, King Edward VII, on June 6th, 1910. The coronation ceremonies took place on June 22nd, of the following year, amidst much rejoicing. The King was 45 at the time, becoming the fifth king to ascend the throne that late in life; none of the others reigned more than a few uneventful years.

Eventful Exhausting Reign

The years of the reign of George V were far from uneventful. The time from 1911-14 was marked by growing uneasiness in Europe, and increased suspicion of Germany on the part of England. Then war broke out in 1914.

King George worked indefatigably throughout the four long years of the war. Inspecting camps, visiting the front-line trenches, decorating soldiers, working for peace—he was one of the hardest-working men in the Empire. Through those dark days when Britain was strained to the breaking point, when thousands upon thousands of the flower of the manhood of the country were laying down their lives, the example of the King, and of the Royal Family, did much to keep up failing courage of British subjects all over the world.

SOCIOLOGY SOCIETY ATTENTION

Nor were the years after the war much easier upon His Majesty. Upset economic conditions, unrest in Europe, threats of war, political upheavals all over the world, all took their toll of the head of the British people. Future generations, seeing the events of these years in their true perspective, will place King George amongst the most successful of rulers and the wisest leaders of men.

BACHELOR KING EXPECTS TO TAKE TITLE EDWARD VIII (Continued from Page 1)

King, attended by life guards and a number of officials, will make a formal entry into the City of London at Temple Bar. In due course will come the coronation at Westminster Abbey, as a recognition and confirmation of the Royal descent and consequent right of accession.

Although indications point to the probability that the new King will rule as Edward VIII, he is entitled to adopt any name, even if it is not included among the seven with which he was christened—Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David.

With his accession, his brother, the Duke of York, becomes heir-presumptive. There is no heir-apparent since that position can be occupied only by the King's son or grandson.

The new King is better known in Canada than any previous monarch. He is a landowner in the west and a frequent visitor to this Dominion. An honorary degree was conferred upon him by this University.

Sixteen years ago the Prince of Wales first came to this country as a shy young man and took it by storm. Since then he has made three further visits to Canada, two of them informally to visit his ranch in Alberta, and officially in 1927, when he was accompanied by Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin and his brother, Prince George.

A bachelor of 41 years, Edward has earned the title of "salesman of the Empire". It is said by economists that he did more than any other Briton to bring the Empire back from the brink of the depression. He toured throughout the world, preaching the gospel of "Buy British", and laid firm foundations for British trade in foreign lands.

Edward assumes the throne as the first bachelor to do so since George III who, however, married a few years later. He will be forty-two years of age on next June 23rd.

He was born at White Lodge, a Royal estate near London, on June 23rd, 1894, and was christened by the Archbishop of Canterbury on July 14th of the same year. Queen Victoria, his grandmother, held him upon her lap.

Developing into a high-spirited youth, the Prince lived a carefree life until the beginning of the World War. The sight of slaughter on the Western front, where he insisted he be sent, calmed his spirit and he became a steady force for good in his empire from that time. He travelled extensively on the business of Empire from 1920 on, and gradually assumed many of the duties of his late father when illness forced that monarch to free himself from many of his activities.

"Confederation has not been a complete failure; it has not produced effects as regrettable as certain statesmen thought, but it is quite evident that it has not realized all the hopes and corresponded to the social, economic, and industrial needs of the present time.

"Besides, it no longer corresponds to the ambitions of French-Canadian youth.

"You will permit me to quote you a passage from the article written in July 1922 in L'Action Francaise by Father Villeneuve, today cardinal and primate of the Church in Canada:

"That a Catholic and French state can, in the course of the century just beginning, be formed in the valley of the St. Lawrence, is no longer the sentiment of a few, a pure Utopia, but an ideal worthy of ambition and a hope with a solid foundation.

"And may the supernatural task of the French race in America attain from its leader its full fruition: may political independence reveal our nationality in the august role for which divine Providence is longingly preparing it; may she also become the torch of an ideal and generous civilization in the great whole that is forming the American future; may she be, in a word, in the midst of the forming Babylon, the Israel of modern times, the American France, the nation of light and of apostles; it is a divine favour that we can easily demand and for which it is wise and pious to render ourselves worthy by reflection and the courage that makes great peoples."

SCIENTIFIC TREND MARKS SOCIOLOGY

Yet "Scientific Sociology is Almost Bankrupt", Claims Urwick

PHILOSOPHY ESSENTIAL

The initial discourse of University College's new series of lectures was given last night by Professor Urwick, Head of the Department of Sociology, his subject being: "The Trend of the Social Sciences." Professor Urwick contended that "Although we are more intimately concerned with the ethics of society than any other branch of human thought, Social Science might be considered comparatively new, since it only made its appearance as a science on this continent some forty years ago."

"Social Science," Professor Urwick continued, "has become estranged from philosophy and the tendency has been to bring social thought into line with scientific thought. Would-be scientific sociologists are concerned only with objective facts and objective results, since the secret of scientific observation."

The University College Junior-Senior dance, which was to take place this coming Friday at the Savarin, has been indefinitely postponed, Jack Brunke, chairman of the dance committee, announced last night.

In line with the decision of the University Caput that all university social functions be cancelled until after the funeral of the late King George V, as it was decided to cancel the dance temporarily.

Tickets were to go on sale today and the great number of enquiries indicated an unusual interest in the juniors' farewell to the graduating class. However, it is expected the party will be held at a later date.

Archaeology Unearths New Sculpture Types

Illustrated Lecture Portrays Graphically Grecian Art

EMPHASIS ON FORM

In explorations of the sea coast of Greece and of the surrounding islands conducted by recent archaeologists, many distinct types of sculpture have been found which can be identified with definite periods of ancient Greece. In his lecture at the Museum, Professor Thompson illustrated the main characteristics of these types, starting with the archaic period and ending with the period of the first century A.D.

The archaic period is characterized by the "archaic" smile as well as the attempts to mould the body in imitation of the Greek gods, which represented perfection to the sculptors of this period. More attention was at first paid to the scheme and pattern of the structure, but as time went on the anatomical details were considered as being more important.

By the continued efforts of the archaeologists we shall soon be able to gain a real insight into the lives of these ancient Greeks, and with this will come more knowledge of their sculpture.

NO LOYALTY OATH FOR TEACHERS HERE

United States System of Formal Oaths Not Adopted, Says Dr. Goldring

PURE POLITICS BARREO

In the United States the controversy about the "loyalty oaths" has again cropped up. In twenty-two states of the Union teachers must subscribe to this oath and in ten of them not only public school teachers but those instructing in private schools are affected. Ontario has no such law, said Dr. C. C. Goldring, Chief Inspector of Public Schools, meaning that no formal oath is required.

The question is, should all principals and teachers in the schools, and all others connected with them, be forced to take an oath to "support the Constitution of the United States . . . teach, by precept and example, respect for the flag, reverence for law and order and undivided allegiance to the government of one country, the United States of America." Should they be required to swear to refrain from subscribing to any theory of government or economics "which is inconsistent with the fundamental principle of patriotism and high ideals of Americanism?"

MARTIN LOEB, DIRECTOR

"Inspector-General", a Satire on the Ridiculousness of Petty Officials

A full announcement was made yesterday of the plans of the recently organized University of Toronto Drama Committee. This committee has been formed at the express wish of a large part of the student body. It consists of student and staff representation from all colleges and faculties. The purpose of the committee is to co-ordinate the existing dramatic groups and to provide an opportunity for those who are members of colleges or faculties in which there are no such groups.

The committee met on Monday and decided to produce an hilarious Russian comedy, "The Inspector-General", by Nicolai Gogol. This play is a satire on the ridiculousness of petty officials. It has been done with great success by Broadway theatres and many experimental groups in America and abroad.

Martin Loeb was chosen as the director. This was in line with the general policy of having the production primarily done by the undergraduates. Mr. Loeb was assistant director in the U.C. Players' Guild production last year of Ibsen's "The Wild Duck" and a prominent member of the Players' Guild. He has been a dramatic critic on The Varsity for two years and will resign his present position as News Editor at the end of this week to take over the new post.

"The Inspector-General" will be presented in Hart House Theatre on the ninth and tenth of March. It will be staged by C. A. Gates, formerly in charge of dramatic work at Queen's University. Casting will be on Thursday between 4 and 6 p.m. in the rehearsal room of Hart House Theatre. Everyone with any desire to act is invited to come out to try for parts.

Hither and Yon

(Editor's note: This condensation of an article by William Allen White, noted editor of the Empire, Kon., Gazette, is reprinted here, if for no other reason, because White wrote it. It is a discussion, however, of what seems a timely topic.)

So, young man, you feel that you are going to cut loose. Well, I knew your father when he and I at your age looked at a world full of injustices. In that day the world was rather more stuffy with injustice than it is today. Your father and I stuck it out. Possibly we were wrong.

But two or three young fellows whom we knew and loved struck off across the country to the rainbow that you are seeking. The world is better than it was 50 years ago, but I doubt if they helped it any.

You are not mistaken about these gross, cruel and devastating injustices which fill your eyes with wrath. More people see them than you think.

And so with glacier-like movement the injustices are ground down. The generations pass, justice is a little more nearly achieved in the passing century.

But change that comes hastily too often is not change, but turmoil. I

Protomine Insulate Cure For Diabetes

Discovery Will Revolutionize Treatment, Say Toronto Experts

SMOOTHER THAN INSULIN

It appears that a revolution in the treatment of diabetes must follow the development of protomine insulate, states the current number of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

At the Connaught Laboratories, it was learned that the new substance, which is likely to change the lives of many who suffer from diabetes, is a compound of the usual insulin hydrochloride and a certain protomine which is derived from the sperm of the trout.

While the discovery is still in its experimental stage, sufficient results are available to show that it possesses great potentialities. The general effect of its injection is smoother and more protracted than that of ordinary insulin, and owing to better utilization of the preparation it is possible to substitute it for insulin in smaller doses. No ill effects from its use have been observed and it is stated that, as there is no local reaction upon its injection, the process is painless.

However, in certain acute cases insulin must still be used as it is more rapid in its effect. In the same connection it is stated that where ordinary insulin is giving satisfactory results there is no advantage in using the protomine form except that the effect is prolonged about 100 per cent.

Emphasizing the fact that the compound is still in its early experimental stage, the co-discoverers say that as yet it has certain disadvantages, some of which will undoubtedly be obviated.

Pharmacy Offer Poor Defense to Medicos' Long Shots Jr. Game Sloppy

Jr. Vic defeated Jr. U.C. and Sr. Meds defeated Pharmacy in an inter-faculty basketball doubleheader played yesterday afternoon in the upper Hart House gym.

The team from across the park handed the U.C. boys a trimming in the opener by the score of 24-15. The U.C. team had a decided advantage in the matter of size and their passing attack was much faster than that of the Vic team but they were unable to take advantage of their opportunities around the net.

While the combination of the Vic squad was rather sloppy their accuracy in shooting was responsible for their victory. Eight members of the Victoria squad shot at least one basket, Warren

Registrar Announces Classes and Labs to Continue as Usual

SUSPENDED, DAY OF BURIAL

President's Cable Expresses Sympathy—Pledges New Loyalty

Although classes continued as usual, yesterday, following the sudden death of the king, all social events were postponed indefinitely and the entire atmosphere of the campus reflected the great loss felt by everyone.

A. B. Fennell, registrar of the University of Toronto, in a statement announced that at a special meeting of the Caput it was decided that all classes and laboratories would go on as usual. On the day of the funeral, classes and laboratories will be suspended, and a special Memorial Service will be held in Convocation Hall. The nature of the service could not be made known, due to the indefinite funeral date, but Mr. Fennell stated that there would be a liberal supply of seats for University of Toronto students.

A telegram was sent by President Cody to the Governor-General of Canada to be forwarded to the Queen and to the Royal Family. It expressed the deep sympathy of the University on the bereavement and pledged loyalty to the new King, Edward VIII. Following is the text of the President's message.

"The University of Toronto requests your Excellency to transmit to Her Majesty Queen Mary and to the members of the Royal Family its profound sympathy with them in the loss suffered

FORWARD DEMAND FOR FUTURE FEES

Registrar Foresees Necessity of Pre-Payment to Avoid Useless Expense

SEVERAL CAROS CANCELLED

"Although no definite action has been taken as yet, it is very probable that in the near future students at the University will have to pay a portion of their fees in advance," Mr. A. B. Fennell, Registrar of the University, stated when interviewed yesterday.

"In the past, and to some extent even in the present," Mr. Fennell added, "some people have registered at the University without knowing where they were going to get the money to pay their fees. Others registered and then dropped out after a few days, but didn't bother to notify the registrar's office until asked for their fees three or four months later. The fact that the names of these people appeared on the registration list naturally caused the University to provide lecture groups which were really unnecessary, and it is to prevent this unnecessary expenditure that the system of paying fees in advance may be inaugurated."

Commenting on the non-payment of fees this year Mr. Fennell stated that the number of students behind in their payments was about the same as in previous years and that letters had been sent to the various colleges listing the names of students in the Faculty of Arts whose registration cards were

Science and Civilization

"Bread that Mother used to make" proclaims a local bakery offering a pathetic example of the lip service rendered by a commercialized age to the ideals of a simpler form of life. One can scarcely help being amused at the consumer lured by the subtle appeal to his tenderest memories as he attempts to find the particular defects or virtues which endeared the bread that "Mother" used to make to his memory only to find them hopelessly absent from the commercialized product. The commercial product can never hope to recapture the individual attraction, and in its efforts to do so it only loses its own frank professional finish.

This "bread that mother used to make" serves but as an example of the limitless imitations of genuine human products that are being forced upon us. Not only the necessities of life find themselves in this category, but our very hobbies and amusements are being mass produced.

It is obvious to any person who has been caught in the flow of pedestrian traffic around Varsity Stadium when Varsity plays Queen's that the number of football fans has increased considerably since the days when games of this nature occurred when two adjacent villages turned out for a free-for-all with a ball as an excuse. But to discover the relative aesthetic values of the spectators' pleasure in watching two highly trained teams perform or watching sinewy untrained lads rough it up would be a difficult task.

The twentieth century man surrounds himself and his children with a bewilderment of expensive toys. Should the ambitious youngsters manufacture some rude toys of his own he is quickly informed that mechanically manufactured toys are much better, and has them replaced. Should the ambitious youngster grow up and find pleasure in some elementary form of sport, he is quickly informed by some pedantic expert that his ideas are all wrong and he should play it in a certain manner and have it governed by a complicated series of rules invented by the experts. Then up goes the standard of the game until the dud who happens to like playing must either become an expert or submit to the jibes of the specialized few. His other alternative is to withdraw.

The idea of playing merely for the fun of playing was envisaged when men thought in terms of working and recreation. It seems to be one of life's many ironies that men have become heirs to leisure that they do not know how to use. Their play, like their work, has become mechanized and specialized.

The day of the small craftsman and independent trader did not necessitate such vigorous recreation. Men, we understand, were interested in their work, and as a result could play contentedly. Men who can take their work seriously can play playfully. But the possibilities of playful play are limited when men are herded into factories like sheep at the shrieking of a siren and rush out in the same manner when the siren shrieks some eight or ten hours later.

As long as men must work in conditions meant for machines they will continue to specialize in recreation until it is no longer play and as a consequence good only for specialists. As long as this condition exists the long sought but ever receding ideal of simplicity as represented in attraction for bread like mother used to make will continue to exist only in the minds of the naive.

Unified Drama at Last

Having been advocated for years in these columns, a University Dramatic Committee has been formed under the sponsorship of the Students' Administrative Council. The purpose of this committee is to give all of the undergraduates who are interested in the theatre an opportunity of doing something creative and to co-ordinate the work of the existing college and faculty groups. On the committee are staff and student representatives from all the colleges and faculties.

The committee has chosen a satirical Russian comedy, The Inspector-General by Nicolai Gogol. In this play there is a large cast which will afford any student who wishes, an opportunity of having a part. Casting will take place on Thursday afternoon in Hart House Theatre between four and six. All undergraduates who are interested should show up to try for a part. Previous experience, though useful, is not necessary.

When A University Falls

Like a warning from the tomb of Mirabeau Lamar was the recent action by the American Association of University Professors which drew a black line through the name of the University of Pittsburgh.

Lamar is quoted on the cover of practically every educational bulletin and report in Texas as having said, "A cultivated mind is the guardian genius of democracy, and while guided and controlled by virtue, the noblest attribute of man. It is the only dictator that freemen acknowledge, and the only security which freemen desire."

Following a year of investigation, according to News-Week, the A. A. U. P. charged that "an atmosphere of fear, uncertainty and intimidation surrounds" the University of Pittsburgh, where "suppression of academic expression on social and economic issues" exists along with "suppression of speech about the administration of ordinary university affairs."

For this the Pittsburgh institution has contracted a moral stigma capable of depriving it of a first-rate faculty. The association will not accept a new member from Pittsburgh, and its members are forbidden from teaching there without losing membership in the association.

The American Association of University Professors is moral lord of the teaching domain. By black-balling Pittsburgh, it has dealt a blow which might well be a lesson to other institutions.

Although magnificent buildings have their part in making a university great, there is always the possibility that the obligations assumed with the finance of physical improvements will endanger the "soul" of the institution, which, after all, is a large part of whatever prestige it may carry in educational circles. It is logical that the attachment to the University of Pittsburgh of Andrew Mellon and others as philanthropists and trustees was responsible for much of the "unsatisfactory conditions of tenure" which existed at the university.

Chancellor Bowman of Pittsburgh wanted the tallest university in the world. Six million dollars were raised for the building through the kindness of citizens and trustees, among whom were Mellon, Howard Heinz, canned foods king; E. T. Weir, steel magnate; and Andrew Robertson, chairman of the directors of Westinghouse Electric. A magnificent building is in the process of construction. But what chance has a liberal economics professor to do his subject justice under the set-up which exists behind the building?

Editor of The Varsity.

Dear Sir:

The past few months have brought increasingly to our attention the role of students in political activity in different parts of the world. The outstanding example of the present time is the courageous stand of the Chinese students against the invasion of Japanese Imperialism. From all countries come reports of student conferences on peace; student demonstrations against rearmament; military training. While the Canadian students are not untouched by this movement, the general body remains uninterested.

Superficially this attitude on the part of Canadian students might be attributed to their lack of what we might term political heritage. Students in other parts of the world have for centuries taken a leading part in public affairs. Tradition in this country, indeed on the larger part of the North American continent, has placed the student in the position of an adolescent (Continued on Page 4)

VARSITY CAGE SQUADS ARE HOSTS TO BROADVIEW "Y"

SENIOR BASKETBALL TILT SHOULD SHOW REAL ACTION

Y-Men Have Greatly Improved Will Give Stevens' Squad a Stiff Fight

GOLD BACK IN ACTION

Junior Game with Broadview Y Will Provide Curtain-Raiser

This year's U.S. invasion being a thing of the past, Warren Stevens' Varsity cagers now turn their complete attention to the Canadian end of their schedule. Tonight the Blue cagers will play hosts to Ab Rennie's league-leading Broadview Y basketers in a scheduled game of the T.B.L.

After an exceedingly slow start the Y aggregation suddenly came to life and came from the bottom of the standing to assume undisputed leadership of the group. At the beginning of the current season Rennie's squad failed to get going and it was feared that last year's Dominion intermediate champions would fall as a senior organization. However, Rennie successfully added a mixture of young veterans to his champions and the mixture has finally come to life and has beaten all opposition. The Y basketers play an aggressive brand of ball which is very pleasing to watch. In their last meeting which was over a week ago the East Enders handed the Blues their first defeat of the season. In tonight's return engagement the Varsity squad will be out to get revenge.

Once again Coach Stevens will have a complete squad from which to choose his starting quintet. Phil Gold, the captain of the squad, who was unable to accompany the team on its recent trip, will once again be back in action.

HARRIS, CONWAY WIN OPENING TRACK EVENTS

Meds-Man Takes 50 Yard Dash Half-Mile Race Snared by Trinity Runner

The 50 yard and the half mile events in the interfaculty competitions took place yesterday when the indoor track meet got under way in Hart House.

Of the eleven entrants in the 50 yard dash, Harris from Meds captured first position, breasting the tape in 5.7 seconds. A tie-off race for second position was run between Ashenhurst and Caldwell of Meds, resulting in a win for the latter. Cooper and O'Connor made very worthy attempts but fell short of tying the scores of the men in position.

Ab Conway from Trinity led the half-milers to an easy win, breaking the existing record for this event and lowering it from 2.45 to 2.37. He took and maintained the lead from the beginning, and crossed the line 20 yards ahead of his nearest competitor. Forrest and Kibbleshwhite fought a close race for second place which was finally taken by Forrest of Victoria College. Conway is well known to Varsity track enthusiasts and has been mentioned as a serious Olympic prospect.

Both events produced very creditable efforts from the representatives of all colleges, as shown by the recorded times made by the winners. Meds obtained the largest number of points on their efforts, with Trinity in second place with scores of 8 and 5.

SAINTS BEAT SR. VIC IN BASEBALL FIXTURE

In the longest and best played baseball game of the present interfaculty series, St. Mike's defeated Sr. Vic 9-0 in the big gym yesterday afternoon.

At the 5 o'clock deadline 6 complete innings had been played, a rare achievement in interfaculty softball. The fact that St. Mike's earned a 9-0 shutout takes no credit away from the calibre of softball displayed by both teams, because the score was only 1-0 for the winners going into the 4th inning. However, Vic's defense and pitching suffered a breakdown in this inning and St. Mike's made the most of it to score 7 runs.

Pete Cremasco for the winners pitched a wonderful game, holding Senior Vic to 2 hits and striking out 11 men. Sr. Vic: Ferguson, Wolfe, Colmer, Beattie, Allemano, Fisher, Putnam, Saunders and Morrison.

St. Mike's: Finan, Blum, Marks, Connelly, Scandiflo, Nally, Forristal, Clancy, Cremasco and Dupre.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crocker

Out of respect to the memory of the late Sovereign all sixteen O.H.A. games listed for last night were postponed. The Varsity-Port Colborne tilt, scheduled for last night, will be played at some future date. The sporting fraternity thus paid a truly impressive tribute to the memory of the late King George.

The scheduled basketball doubleheader to be played at Hart House tonight promises to provide plenty of entertainment for the fans. It is no secret that the Blues did not exactly relish that recent 30-19 defeat they suffered at the hands of Coach Rennie's squad and are out to get full revenge. It is also no secret that the Y cagers aim to keep their recently-acquired position at the top of the league race. As these two squads are undoubtedly the class of the league it is quite apparent that basketball fans will see a standout exhibition of basketball tonight.

The Broadview Y squad is the surprise team of the season. Off to a very miserable start it was feared that the debut of Rennie's squad in senior company was a trifle premature. However, the mixture of youngsters and near-veterans which Rennie skillfully blended into a cage squad suddenly took a new lease on life and quickly spurred to the top of the league. Whether the Y team will maintain their lofty position now that the Blues have the time to concentrate on their Toronto games will be decided tonight. Should the Y crew win this evening the race in the league will be practically over. However, should Varsity emerge victorious tonight the struggle for the leadership should give the fans plenty of good entertainment this winter.

Although the Blues didn't win a single game on either of their below-the-border jaunts they gave a creditable performance on each of their appearances. Mac McCutcheon, who was in charge of the squad on the last trip, reported that the game in Rochester was a dandy. The Rochester sport pages gave the game big headlines praising the Blues for a good performance. A feature of the game was the fact that the Blue and White squad of Toronto had a starting squad of five Rochester lads in Connelly, Marks, Bedford and the two Sullivans, Neil and Tommy. The five Blues are ex-Aquinas Institute of Rochester stars and were given a good deal of attention in their hometown performance.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. K.

At the Hockey Club meeting yesterday, it was decided that nothing definite could possibly be arranged until the hours for the different hockey practices were known. St. Hilda's turned out in full force for a practice last night, but their practice hour is not yet settled. With Bill Sutton coaching some very promising material from the freshmen, plus last year's stand-bys, the Saints are expecting a pretty strong team this year.

The basketballers are becoming much more confident than they were last week. At last night's practice there were quite a number who turned out. Scrimmaging was practised intensively, and it was felt that the girls were shaping up very well. Extra practices are going to be started at the L. M. gym for the exclusive coaching of the forwards.

Action Libérale And Paul Gouin

"I have no intention of raising racial or religious issues," was the remark of Mr. Paul Gouin, the youthful leader of the National Liberals of Quebec, when The Varsity approached him regarding his speech a week ago Sunday at St. Hyacinthe. "Not a newspaper reported me correctly," he went on, "only Le Devoir gave a true account of what I said, and that was because I let them have a copy beforehand. The English papers especially misconstrued my remarks."

"But you did say what you were reported as saying about the chances of Canada breaking up, didn't you?" he was asked.

"Yes, I said it, but it was only to show the attitude of a certain faction in this province. If you read the correct account of my speech, you will see that I put forth the other side very clearly. At present I am taking no stand, and particularly not to reporters. A year ago a Toronto paper interviewed me, and perhaps because I have not complete command of the English language it said I said what I did not mean. Since then I refuse to grant interviews." He tried to veer from the subject and asked: "But what sort of paper is The Varsity?"

The Varsity explained what it was. Mr. Gouin was quite surprised when he heard it was a daily. "Could I write an article for it? Since the University of Toronto is the source of the leaders of Ontario for tomorrow, if I find time for it, I might put our case forth."

"We French-Canadians," he went on, "feel that the British North America Act needs revising, but as we feel too that we have not been very fairly treated, we should like to see ourselves protected in any revision of the constitution. For instance, we have less than a third of the civil service positions at Ottawa."

"I may be French by race, but I think that I am a better Britisher than many English-speaking Canadians. No one can accuse me of pro-French leanings; I may have a soft spot in my heart for the mere-patrie, but my other sympathies all go to Britain."

He asked if The Varsity were interested in the Canadian racial problem, and upon receiving the affirmative, Mr. Gouin said to read a discussion of it from the French angle in L'Action franchise of about fifteen years ago. "This year L'Action nationale is going to publish another broader series of articles, too," he said; "it will not only be from the French-Canadian angle, but from the whole Canadian viewpoint. I do not want to stand on one or the other side."

"But how many separatists see that it would be the death of Montreal if she were parted from her hinterland of the rest of Canada?" he was asked.

"That is what I mean," said Mr. Gouin, "but in the meantime I do not care to enlarge upon the subject. At any rate, the politics of this province are in a state of chaos, and I expect something to break very soon that will change the whole scene. If you get in flattened him three times in 45 seconds. This St. Mike's boy can hit like the proverbial pile-driver and it's only a matter of how long Stein can hold him off.

Tom Powell is slated to fight Norm Hurdman, of the Maple Leaf Club at 140 lbs. Powell is a former inter-collegiate champion—he lost the title last year by a remarkably narrow margin—and has been called one of the best welterweights in Canada. He has better than an even chance of taking Hurdman.

Mel Glionna, that crafty veteran of the ring, meets another collegiate opponent in Freddie Smith, Varsity's sprightly featherweight, who will doubtless be trying to avenge the defeat of Johnnie Milson a week ago. Glionna has indeed an enviable record but Smith is very tricky and very fast. In particular, he throws a neat left hook that Glionna will have a hard time managing. This bout should be interesting.

FIGHTING DOWNTOWN

Three of Varsity's better boxers will be guest-artists at the St. James Club's show at the Maple Leaf Gardens tomorrow night. Big Charley Pocius, Tom Powell and Freddie Smith will wear the Blue-and-White silks against downtown pugilists of local note.

Charley Pocius, Varsity's heavyweight hope, meets Lennie Stein of the Y.M.H.A. in the feature bout of the evening. This looks like another win for Pocius unless the Jewish boy has improved a great deal since the two met two months ago. Stein only saved himself from a realistic knockout by hard time managing. This bout should be interesting.

SCIENTIFIC TRENO MARKS SOCIOLOGY

tion is total indifference. But scientific sociology is almost bankrupt and its concepts must be changed. The social process rests on sentiment, and the peculiar conditions of its subject matter is showing increasing need of allying itself with philosophy. Scientific sociologists may help the social science as much as the scientist observing the bees assists the bee-keepers. We, in our activities, can be treated scientifically. It is in thought that each individual, each family, and each group is unique. Here lies the dividing line between science and Social Science.

"It is unfortunate that we have to speak in words. Each science needs a language with terms of definite and scientific meaning. Without definitions social thought cannot be made clear and hence there are many conceptions.

"The United States leads in Social Science because there the cult of sociology has been taken up with enthusiasm, and also because it falls under the influence of our neighbour. All the present social thought of though the United States may not be ahead of Canada, their subjects and methods of study are likely to enter our own country tomorrow.

"Professors and students of Social Science are tending to limit themselves to more modest scopes. This new direction augurs well for the future knowledge of Social Science."

NO LOYALTY OATH FOR LOCAL TEACHER

required to swear their loyalty to their country and its institutions, there is among the by-laws of the Board of Education this statement: "Refrain from discussion in the schools of questions purely political or ecclesiastical and from expressing anywhere opinions adverse to British institutions or sentiments disloyal to the Crown". This in effect is very similar to the American loyalty oath. The difference lies in the fact that teachers do not have to swear to it formally. It is considered one of the duties of teachers to adhere to this by-law "just as it is their duty to be at school at nine o'clock in the morning."

If a teacher should be found not carrying out these principles there would be no prosecution, Dr. Goldring went on. "If a person bought an article, promised to pay for it in thirty days but did not, he would not be fulfilling his obligations and the people from whom he bought the article would take it back. Just so, if the teacher did not fulfil his obligations—we would take the job back. But we would probably give warning first."

being high scorer with nine points. Beckett and Gerstein accounted for thirteen of U.C.'s points, with Constan getting the other two.

The senior game was a fast affair from start to finish with the Medical team upsetting a snappy Pharmacy squad by the score of 23-18. The drug-gists had an extremely fast passing attack and had no difficulty at all in breaking up the plays of the Meds team in the first half of the game. Pharmacy led at half time by the score of 8-6 and should have had a much bigger margin on the play.

In the second half Meds long shots on the basket began to click and the Pharmacy zone defense proved so ineffective against this type of attack that Meds were able to score 17 points to 10 for Pharmacy, although as in the first half Pharmacy again missed a great many chances. Packham was the high scorer for Pharmacy with 9 points and Gilbert also played a very strong game at guard. For Meds Brenbaum and Zarsky were the sharpshooters with 6 and 7 points respectively. The game ended with Lazarus and Zarsky staging a little scrap all of their own.

Novel Machine

Kingston—Determination of a student's percentage in class tests by means of a weighing machine is the system employed by Professor Noel B. Cuff, the inventor of the machine. Dr. Cuff is a teacher of psychology in the Eastern Kentucky State Teachers' College, and he calls his apparatus a testometer.

Questions on Professor Cuff's examination papers are answerable by the true-false method, but instead of placing an X in the space allotted a student punches a hole through the card. The machine is so made that when a hole is punched in the correct space, a weight of one-quarter ounce falls upon a scales, so that the total number of ounces multiplied by four will give the accurate percentage on the paper.

Professor Cuff has applied for a patent on his machine, which has already brought inquiries from teachers throughout the country.

Columbus, Ohio.—A reporter on the Ohio State University campus made a personal investigation concerning the relative politeness of co-eds and men of the campus. He stood inside a frequently used door and opened it for everyone who passed through. The results were rather surprising. Only two out of every 15 co-eds said "Thank you", while one out of every 15 men forgot to do so. This reporter also reports that the professors thanked him with a mere "how do you do?"

Dallas, Texas.—A sprightly lad, inflamed with football cheer or something, staged a Tarzan act from a third floor window of a downtown hotel here recently clad only in his skibbies. Cheering lustily, the impromptu acrobat swung precariously from a rope tied to a bedpost and, as he beat on his chest with one hand, he informed the startled passers-by: "I'm Tarzan—I'm Tarzan."

who should spend his time within the confines of the classroom, or in social and athletic diversions. But the American student apparently has no place in political life.

Underlying this tradition there seem to be two causes. In the first place, Canada is a new country still. Until the depression our economic life was expanding. University was not such an important place in public eyes. Better the young man should go out and "make good" in business. In this situation the university student was inferior socially to the aspiring young business man: his opinion was held for less; and so his desire to make contributions in public life was less. This stage is passing. The second cause of student "apathy" is to be found in the comparative isolation of Canada. This is especially significant in view of the great danger of war at the present time. While students in other countries are in the forefront of the peace movement, activity in Canada is limited to a small minority. Nevertheless, our isolation is chiefly mental. It is not a matter for question that Canada would be vitally concerned if there were to be a war in either Europe or Asia. In such a situation lack of interest in political trends in the international field becomes a serious problem.

The next year or so should show significant developments in the awakening of the Canadian students. If we may judge from the rapid expansion of student organization in the United States, we may well expect a similar growth in this country. The question which comes to the fore is that of time. The time in which to act is drawing shorter. It is indubitable that a very large majority of the students are in favour of peace at the present time. How intelligent that attitude is, a greater degree of activity, on the part of Canadian students, should be a powerful factor leading to a more definite peace policy on the part of the Canadian government.

FRATERNITY DANCE FOR WORTHY CAUSE

Object to Raise Loan Fund to Assist Deserving Students

For the first time in its history, the Kappa Chapter of Iota Alpha Pi Fraternity is holding a dance in aid of its Student Loan Fund. The dance is to be held in the King Edward Hotel on Saturday, February the 15th, with Stan St. John's orchestra in attendance.

Although in the past few years, the Toronto Chapter has held dances in aid of various community charitable organizations, this year the Chapter feels that it should turn to the campus, because as a University organization, its first duty is to the students.

The Student Loan Fund of Iota Alpha Pi, is administered by the National Chapter of the fraternity, which has in past years helped several hundreds of students in universities throughout the United States. Its innovation in Toronto means that several students here will benefit by it, and as the offer is open to men and women in any faculty on the campus, the dance in aid of it warrants the whole-hearted support of the student body.

Here's a good chance for the boys to give their lady friends a Valentine's gift and derive as much pleasure as she out of it, to say nothing of the opportunity for the girls to brush up on their Leap Year technique.

BLUE BASKETEERS BOW TO BROADVIEW

NEWS OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

London: With pomp and ceremony reminiscent of the pageants of the middle ages Edward VIII was yesterday acclaimed King-Emperor. At the same time as the proclamation here, guns were fired throughout the British Empire and flags, at half-mast since the death of George V, were raised to full-mast for six hours in honour of the new King. After the proclamation the King returned to Sandringham where his dead father George V rests in the parish church. Today the coffin will be moved from the parish church of Sandringham to Westminster Hall, London, where the body will lie in state until Tuesday.

Geneva: France and six lesser powers joined Britain in a mutual aid pact to stand together in case Italy attacks any one of them due to League of Nations sanctions. Italy lodged a protest with the League against the agreement.

DEADLINE NOW SET FOR TORONTONENSIS

Photographs and Biographies
Must be Handed in by End of Week

NO TIME EXTENSION

No photographs for the biography section of Torontonensis, University Year Book, will be accepted after the end of this week, it was announced yesterday.

Messages from deans, principals, fraternities and class executives are to be in by the end of January, and it is absolutely necessary that the biography section be completed before other sections are prepared.

Members of the graduating class who have their photographs handed in, but no biography, will have their names and home towns put opposite them. Those students who have entered a biography card but no photograph will be omitted from the book, the editor stated. "And that is no joke, either," he added. "In other years there have been little bits of material which were contributed until long after they were due, which held up production for the whole book."

Allegiance Oath Called Americanism

Professors Believe it would be Unnecessary and Unpopular

IS MORAL QUESTION

A news item was published in yesterday's Varsity concerning the practice prevalent in some twenty-two states in the U.S.A. of compelling school teachers to swear an oath of allegiance to the constitution of the United States and to various topics pertaining thereto. The general consensus of opinion among professors in the University seems to indicate that such a thing in Canada would not only be unnecessary but also unpopular.

Mr. F. V. Winnet of the Department of Oriental, University College, said that such a move appeared to him to be an over-emphasis of patriotism and possibly part of the isolation policy which has been adopted by the United States. He went on to say that possibly the "loyalty oath" policy was directed against communism. It would cause, stated Mr. Winnet, a natural reaction against the attempt to coerce teachers who value freedom of thought and speech.

Professor H. R. MacCallum, Department of Philosophy, mentioned that in connection with the subject he had heard it suggested that male teachers of the U.S.A. should be required to (Continued on Page 4)

WOMEN IN CLASSICS TOPIC OF LECTURE

Speaker Outlines Attitude to Women

ANGELS OR DEMONS?

Although the ordinary woman in Greece did not enter into public life, no amount of cloistering or male superiority could dampen their spirit, said Miss Jessie Fleming, 376, in a paper on "Women in the Classics", at the Classical Association meeting last night. Although to Aristotle they served only a biological purpose and Propertius hoped for a womanless Utopia, their word was law in domestic affairs.

The difference in the viewpoint of the Greeks and Romans on this subject is illustrated, Miss Fleming thought, by the carrying off of Helen for her beauty and of the Sabine women for a utilitarian purpose. To the Romans women were either models of virtue or demons of depravity.

In discussing the ethics and morality of the Greeks, John Grant tried to reach a mean between Butler's ecstatic picture of freedom and Zimmer's theory of a complex puritanical system of morality.

CONVOCAION HALL

The President announces that the Memorial Service for His Majesty, the late King, will be held in Convocation Hall on Tuesday the twenty-eighth. The actual time was unknown last night but it will be the same as the similar service in England. That is, if three o'clock is chosen in London it will be three o'clock here, no notice being taken of the time zones.

The service will be purely University in tone and is to be so planned as to let the staff and students pay honour to the King's memory.

The President will be in charge and will deliver a eulogy on the King's life. In addition there will be a religious service, modelled as closely as possible after that in England, conducted by the heads of the different theological colleges on the campus. It will probably consist of prayers, a psalm, a lesson, and possible a hymn. Sir Ernest MacMillan will be in charge of the musical arrangements.

Apart from Convocation Hall during the time of the service all University buildings will remain shut for the day and evening. This will include the Library, Administration Offices, and evening classes and lectures.

U.C. PLAYERS' GUILD PRESENT EXPERIMENT IN DRAMATIC ART

Final plans were made yesterday for this year's first evening production of the U.C. Players' Guild. There will be two plays to be presented in the Players' Guild Theatre in the Women's Union. Mr. Victor Lange will direct T. S. Eliot's "Sweeney Agonistes", which is described as "fragments of an Aristophanic melodrama". This play is an attempt to make use of the jazz rhythm for modern poetic comedy. It is not only an interesting experiment in theatrical art but also as literature. Iris Gibson and Joan Renaud are playing the leading female parts and Mr. Lange himself is taking the part of "Sweeney".

WARDEN FAVOURS BRITISH SYSTEM FOR OUR PRISONS

Classifying of Prisoners

DRASTIC CHANGES NEEDED

Borstal Method Great Help in Reclaiming First Offenders

The prison system of Canada needs drastic changes in the direction of classification of prisoners, modernization of equipment and methods of appointment and greater attention to reclamation of prisoners. Such was the substance of an address delivered by Mr. J. B. Bickersteth, Warden of Hart House, to a meeting of the S.C.M. held in the Music Room of Hart House yesterday at noon.

Mr. Bickersteth pointed out that in spite of tremendous difficulties in administration the officers of our Canadian prisons were carrying on their duties conscientiously and to the best of their ability. He emphasized the fact, however, that Canada lagged far behind Great Britain in the direction of prison reform, and especially in regard to the treatment of youthful prisoners.

Mr. Bickersteth, who has visited many prisons and reform schools in Great Britain, explained the system of classification in use there. Prisoners are graded in three groups and are housed in separate buildings: Prisoners of the first class, those not possessing records or confined for political reasons (Continued on Page 4)

Use of Co-operatives Revealed by Hannan

Movement Began in Manchester and Has Spread Widely

NOT FOR CANADA

"Each for all and all for each," is, according to Mr. Herb Hannan, leader of the United Farmers of Ontario, the essential basis of co-operation.

In his talk at Wymilwood yesterday to a group formed for the purpose of studying co-operatives, he defined the latter as "a philosophy which may lay foundations for a new social order."

Manchester is at the present time the centre of this great movement, which had its humble beginning in a small town twenty-five miles outside of Manchester and has now spread throughout England, Denmark, Finland and Sweden.

Co-operatives are conducted on the basis of community ownership of business enterprises enabling thus a reduction in prices and also a stopping of individual abuse of capital.

VICTORIA MAGAZINE UPHELD AT DEBATE

"Pseudo-Intellectuals" Are

Their Policy

VOTE IS 32 TO 21

The "pseudo-intellectuals", as the upholders of the new "Acta Victoriana" were dubbed by the opposition, emphatically defended their policies last night, at the Victoria Parliamentary debate, to produce "a more highbrow and cosmopolitan" publication and encourage criticism of college life.

Intellectual advancement is the definite aim of our magazine and our success is apparent, as enthusiasm has been shown from people even outside the University walls, pointed out Art Hamilton, first speaker for the negative, citing particularly a commendation of the "Acta Victoriana" in a recent issue of "The Saturday Night".

"Our magazine is not a true one in any sense of the word," was the refutation of Art Pacey, who deplored the writings of these "pseudo-intellectuals" (even snobs), who are devoted to their own thoughts and actions, and who are very clever and very conscious of the fact. "The intellectual and artistic life of the college must be at a low ebb, indeed, the speaker declared, going on to illustrate how the articles (Continued on Page 4)

Exhibiting more aggressiveness than Varsity's blue and white clad basketballers Scoop Rennick's Broadview Y squad handed the Blues their second successive defeat last night in the big gym at Hart House. The final count was only 24-19 but the game was a thrilling one to watch despite the low score. On four occasions the lead changed hands and at several other times the score was tied. The game last night was the second successive contest in Toronto in which the Blues have been held to the exceedingly low count of nineteen points.

The officiating in last night's game was as inconsistent as has ever been seen at Hart House. Rough play went unnoticed as soon as play got under way and was a prominent feature all through the tilt.

CHANGES FORESEEN

At a late hour last night the originator and operator of the University's famed Date Bureau resigned from his position and appointed a new head, he informed this paper.

He denied emphatically the current rumour that he has recently become on more than casual terms with one of his applicants for dates. "My resignation," he said, "is caused wholly by the pressure of academic work. I feel that I am no longer able to devote enough time to the Bureau to make it the successful organization it has been in the past."

The new operator, he continued, has been chosen with great care. "He will make a capable manager for the bureau, and has many new ideas for its working in this new term."

U.C. PARLIAMENT SWEARS ALLEGIANCE TO NEW MONARCH

Tomorrow the University College Parliamentary Club will hold its weekly meeting and after the fashion of the British House of Commons, the private members will take an oath of allegiance to the new King, Edward VIII.

The Privy Council of the parliament met yesterday and officially took the oath, given by Hart Buck, the Clerk of the House.

Today the parliament will convene to debate the subject, "Resolved that this house is not disgusted with party government." The prime minister will be Eric McCann and the leader of the opposition Jack Mirsky.

Far Made Near

The smallness of the modern world was never so strikingly demonstrated as it has been by the incredible swiftness with which the news of the King's death circled the globe. Twenty minutes after the King had breathed his last, the word came to the thousands of anxious listeners in Canada. Twenty-six years ago when King Edward died England itself could not have been informed so quickly. Two hundred years ago the more remote districts of England were forced to remain in ignorance of a Sovereign's passing for days or even weeks. For months colonial subjects were unaware that they owed allegiance to another king.

But science with cable, telephone and radio has overcome all nature's barriers and it is safe to assume that by noon on Tuesday not more than a few hundred Canadian people had not heard the sad news. Even in the northland by the miracle of radio traders and trappers heard of their Sovereign's death. Ships on the sea, and planes in the air received instantaneous information.

Next Tuesday every inhabitant of the globe may if he so desires follow every word of the impressive ceremony as George the Fifth goes to his last resting place. No one will be able to estimate the attendance at that funeral—the greatest funeral a monarch ever had. With one voice the guns of the Empire will make their salute to the memory of a beloved king.

Nor is it only the spoken word which nowadays travels so quickly. Last evening, some thirty hours after being taken, the first picture of the new king appeared in the Canadian press. Telephoned to London, radiated to New York, flown to Toronto, it traversed thousands of miles with the speed of light. A somewhat imperfect picture it is true, but what a glimpse it affords us of the amazing possibilities still to be explored by coming generations.

Anglo-American Treaty

It has often been said that a union between the two great English-speaking peoples of the world, the Americans and the English, would have a great effect upon world affairs and upon the future history of the world.

Particularly in Canada is an alliance between the United States and England discussed in the light of present affairs. Debates upon the subject are common, editorials and treatises advocating it are everyday occurrences. Canadians feel that, bearing, as they do, some relation to the Motherland, and bordering, as they do, upon the Americas, they are particularly concerned with the problem and would benefit proportionately from its solution.

What Canadians do not seem to realize is the fact that, while they themselves advocate this treaty, their own country, the Dominion of Canada, is herself in no way bound to the Mother country by any such ties. There is, in fact, no agreement entered into between England and Canada which would correspond in any way to the treaty urged upon the United States and England. Were England to be forced into a war in Europe, or upon any other continental on the globe, only the dictates of expediency or possibly of conscience, would serve to bring the Dominion in to the assistance of England.

Yet still, Canadians urge that the United States and England embark upon a treaty that they themselves refuse to sign.

Will We Specialize?

We have reached an era in the history of the world when specialization and the division of labour are considered the all-important factors of the social make-up. Nor can there be any doubt entertained that it has been due to these factors that we have attained our civilization as it is constituted at the present day. Therefore it is not surprising to find the great minds, the editorial writers, politicians and even John Public himself, pressing for an extension of the principle; to find that the idea of specialization and the division of labour has at last reached that stronghold of individualism, the University.

In considering such matters and their connection with our youthful selves, however, it would be well to remember that one of the first principles of the existing social order is that a man should specialize, not merely for the sake of specialization, but in that branch of human industry for which he is most fitted. The division of labour is entirely based upon the fact that one man, working his full time on one job, is better than three or four men applying a third or a quarter of their time, as the case may be, to the same job. But, advancing from this, we may see that the man who is to apply himself to the one job, will so much the more be able to function to the limit of his capacity if that job is the one for which he is the best suited.

This doctrine of selection is especially applicable to the University student and the University graduate. We are sent to University that we may study a number of pursuits, pursuits that we have ourselves selected because they seem to suit us. But of these we may later be required to select or construct that particular branch of endeavour for which we find the greatest ability and the greatest attraction, the one being pursuant upon the other.

Therefore the obvious advice for all University students is that they specialize not too fully in their earlier years, yet watch continually to see that their studies follow such a line as may enable them to include all those subjects upon which they are most interested and in which they attain their greatest ability.

The great trouble, at the moment, is that the majority of students fail to grasp this principle, fail to attain that fine balance between diversification and specialization that will, while at the moment allowing them variety and choice, eventually end in the complete division of labour for which we seem to be striving.

Hauptmann Again

A man shall be considered innocent until he is proved guilty. So reads one of the tenets of American law, a principle of which American courts may be justly proud.

Yet, had it not been for the interference of Governor Hoffman of New Jersey, a life would have been snuffed out—a life adjudged to be worthless by 12 members of a jury and an irresistible wave of American public opinion.

Bruno Richard Hauptmann probably would have gone to the electric chair refusing to admit his guilt. Two days before the execution was scheduled, he refused to sell an exclusive confession to a New York newspaper for money that would have kept his wife and son for the remaining years of their lives.

The people of the United States may never learn the identity of the murderer of the Lindbergh baby. Yet, whatever lies behind the act of clemency, its inevitable results are praiseworthy.

As long as one thread of mystery or doubt remains around the case of the convicted man, he must, by the principles of American justice, be given every opportunity to prove his innocence. It is better that a guilty man should live than that one innocent of a crime should pay unjustly.—Oklahoma Daily.

By the recent mails we received a little folder entitled "What is the Vic Music Club Doing This Year?" and while this modest document fulfils its purpose fairly well, it confines itself to the formal details.

It says nothing, for instance, of the Open Meeting each October at which the Music Club plays host to all Victoria and most of the university, where the youth of the land are rushed as enthusiastically as at any sorority tea, being plied with music and refreshments until they are brought into the fold. The Yorker has faithfully attended the Open Meeting for the past three years, has each time experienced the same surging fever of enthusiasm that marks the earliest symptoms of the disease which gets such a strong grip on nine-tenths of the college, but has always had it sweated out of his system within the next few days by excessive pounding of a typewriter, as this paper makes its own Fall come-back. A lucky thing for the Club it has been, too, if a sad one for the paper.

Nor does it relate, due to sheer modesty on the part of the pamphlet's author, the furious activities of the Club's Publicity Agent, whose duties include the preparing and placing of both advertising and news copy, but whose first love is writing notices for The Varsity Bulletin Board. Bulletin-boarding, under this year's P.A. of the V.M.C., has been developed to a point where it may well claim place among the arts. His notices have all the deft charm and vagarie of a lyric by Mr. Gilbert himself, and he has been known to retrace his steps half way across Queen's Park to the news office in (Continued on Page 4)

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Hart House Theatre

"The Power of Darkness" is a play that is powerful and moving not only in theme but also in construction. Little can be said in criticism of Tolstoy's drama save that it is long. Its length adds to the terribly moving effect.

The life of the Russian peasant was given under the Czars and in the "Power of Darkness" Tolstoy paints the picture with vivid realism. The result is a drama typical of the realist school and it has been a stand-by for every independent theatre since the beginning of the movement.

Mrs. Pyper has chosen "The Power of Darkness" as part of an all round program. We hope that her audiences coaxed by the lighter fare of the fall season will not be caught off guard by the starkness of this, the fourth presentation of the Hart House season.

The difficulty in producing a play of this type is in securing acting and direction that will offset the grim reality of the play itself. Nazimova in her production of "Ghosts" saved her audience from the brutality of Ibsen by virtue of her own performance. Unfortunately Mrs. Pyper has not the same talent at her command.

The Hart House production is graced with some good work. Miss Judith Evelyn in the role of the old woman Matrina exhibits that versatility which has made her a most valuable acquisition to Miss Pyper's company.

Murray Bonnycastle as Nikita is to be commended for his excellent characterization of a Russian peasant who was carried away by his youthful indifference to life and morality only to be plunged into utter despair and finally repentance. Miss Mathews is Anisya handled a difficult part in a very fine manner, never missing an opportunity to depict the jealous flouted wife torn between the instinctive marital love for her husband and the (Continued on Page 4)

Editor of The Varsity.

Dear Sir:

A recent letter in the editorial column of The Varsity on the aims of the Student Peace Movement prompts these remarks on how that organization may become a more vital factor in the thought of students. That some change is needed is indicated by the present lack of serious concern among students on the subject of peace. Even the delegates to the recent Peace Congress seemed in the majority comparatively indifferent as they were never punctual in attending meetings.

It seems to me that any ideal, if it is to become effective, must be rooted in a philosophical outlook. This is indicated in such a strong missionary movement as communism, the ideals of which are firmly grounded in a theory of the nature of life. Why this should be necessary is difficult to say—perhaps it adds a rationale to what is otherwise mere feeling, and so releases the necessary emotional drive to enlist the whole personality.

That war is unreasonable is granted by most people. But if that judgment is to issue in action to abolish war and to establish peace on a permanent basis it must be supplemented by a vision of something more inclusive than peace itself. Communism provides that vision for many. Others, however, cannot reconcile the communist appeal to force (Continued on Page 4)

VARSITY AND ST. MIKE'S CLASH AT HART HOUSE TO-NIGHT

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By M. D. S.

The basketball practices are coming on well and show promise of a very good team. More guards are needed though, so anyone who can play guard and can spare the time is urged to come out to the next practices. There will be a special practice for the forwards today at 5 p.m. in the Lilian Massey gym.

Unfortunately the same cannot be said for the intercollegiate hockey practices. After arrangements being made especially for those who wish to play both interfaculty and intercollegiate hockey, it seems rather extraordinary that there should be such a lack of material at the intercollegiate practices. This applies especially to Victoria College. Practices are held every Wednesday from 1-2 in the Varsity Arena which should be a convenient time for anyone. If there is not more interest shown in the next practice it is probable that there will be no intercollegiate hockey team this year due to lack of material.

The practice today showed good material but the main backbone of last year's team was conspicuous by its absence. It is to be hoped that more spirit will be shown in the turnout next Wednesday which will be as we have said before in the Varsity Arena at the usual time from 1-2, just in case there was some confusion as to the time and place.

VARSITY BEAVERS LOSE IN OVERTIME

Blue Team Shows Fight but Weakens in Last Moments of Play

FINAL SCORE 6-2

The Varsity Beavers went down fighting before the Royal York squad last night. The session ended with the Beavers on the short end of a 6-2 score. The Blue team showed plenty of stamina, forcing the Yorkers to the limit. Creighton, a Varsity junior, exceeded the keenest expectations by displaying plenty of perseverance. Though his play failed to tally he led Beavers in many potential scoring attacks on Major, the hotel net-minder.

At the end of the third period the scoreboard showed a 2-2 score. In the overtime session the bell-hops went on a rampage, scoring four times on the ill-fated Blue team.

Exhausted at the end of a rush on Shipman, Murphy lost his balance and skidded head first into the boards, going out like a light with a damaged fuse. Interviewed at the end of the game he was still groggy, showing to what extent our boys forced the play.

Shipman in the overtime period saved more goals than he had scored against him. For five minutes the collegians' citadel was impregnable, though bombarded but then Marshall and Croft broke away on a Varsity power play Croft beat Shipman, putting the Beavers in the cellar. From then on the Royal York aggregation drifted in to score at will, Varsity having nothing to lose.

JUNIOR CAGERS FALL BEFORE BROADVUE

Despite the fact that they showed a marked reversal of form Varsity Jrs. bowed to the undefeated Broadview Jrs. 30-15 in the Hart House gym last night. Varsity rushed into a temporary 3-0 lead which the Y men soon superseded by dint of hard, close playing. Gradually the Blue and White men drew closer to their opponents and one-half minute before half time they had tied the score 8-8.

In the second half Broadview out-played McCutcheon's squad and toward the end of the game the ultimate winner was obvious.

Gardner with seven points and Mercen with five points were the high scorers for Broadview.

Marks, who played spectacularly on the defense and offense, led the Varsity marksmen with five points. Roberts was a close second with four points. Broadview Jrs.: Gardner, Carphin, Mercen, Black, Jupp, Clumpus, McDowell, McAlise, Gains.

Varsity Jrs.: Brown, Mark, Roberts, Anderson, Olch, Feasby, Dawson, Halverson, Keller and Molson.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Jim Tiller

The basketball games at Hart House last night attracted only some 200 paid admissions to see the senior Blues lose out to Broadview Y in a hard-fought game featured by close-checking and, yes, by body-checking. Referee Irwin overlooked minor violations of the rules and the result was one of the toughest, tightest games witnessed for a long time. Both teams checked each other right into the floor from the first tip-off and, getting away with what many referees would have called fouls, kept the score down to 11-9 for Varsity at half-time. In fact, nine minutes had elapsed before Broadview sank the first field basket. The play continued fast, hard and close in the second period until the last five minutes when the Varsity team went up in the air. Their attack lacked its former effectiveness and their many long shots were unsuccessful. At the same time they weakened on the defense and allowed Bill Bodrug, Broadview's ace player, to toss in an under-the-basket shot unmoled.

Although Varsity lost the game, they developed much more basketball ability—in flashes. At times they swept up the floor and zipped the ball around as neatly as the great team of a year ago. Connelly and Marks are just as good as ever and played sensationally, performing several breath-taking feats of ball-wizardry. Phil Gold played a strong defensive game but was unlucky in his shooting. MacGregor, a new man, played a fine game on defense but was too backward on the attack, passing the ball on several occasions when he might better have taken it in himself. Broadview owe their victory to the work of Bill Bodrug, formerly of Varsity, who scored nine points to make himself high scorer of the evening.

Broadview now hold undisputed possession of first place, and Varsity must take West End Y on their own floor next Saturday to stay in the running. The intermediates and juniors accompany the seniors in their invasion of West End, making it a triple-header.

MacCutcheon's basketballers, the intermediates, take on the St. Mike's aggregation at 7.30 p.m. in Hart House tonight. The Seconds are out to catch up with the league-leading West Enders and should gain a win over the Irish. At 9 p.m. the Varsity Grads meet West End. Admission, only ten cents.

The headline bout between Charley Pocius of Varsity and Lenny Stein of the Y.M.H.A. at the amateur boxing at the Maple Leaf Gardens tonight is attracting considerable interest in boxing circles around the city. Pocius stopped Stein in 45 seconds when they first met two months ago, but since then Stein has put himself through a rigorous training, including secret workouts for the past two weeks, and is expected to put up a much better fight than he did last fall. This means that he may be able to keep Pocius away from his chin for a round or two. When Pocius finally breaks through, it'll be "lights out" for the Jewish boy. Pocius is said to pack the hardest wallop of any amateur in Canada.

Freddie Smith and Tom Powell will also be seen in action at the Gardens tonight. Smith meets that seasoned veteran of the ring, Mel Glionna, who not long ago outpointed another Varsity lad, Johnnie Millson. Glionna is credited with being just about the best feather-weight in Canada, but Smith is fast and clever and it's anybody's fight. Tom Powell, Varsity welterweight, fights Dave Yack at 147 pounds. This is a chance for the former intercollegiate champion to prove he is just as good as ever.

PAINLESS DENTISTRY NOW MADE POSSIBLE

New Chemical Temporarily Destroys Tooth's Capacity for Pain

The formula of a chemical discovery which makes the dentist's drill painless was revealed yesterday by Dr. Leroy L. Hartman, professor of dental and oral surgery at Columbia University, before a gathering of 3000 dentists in New York.

"The substance, which is known as 'Densitizer', was originally made public last fall and was then proclaimed as 'one of the most outstanding contributions to the practice of dentistry'."

Dr. Hartman, the discoverer, spent 18 years of work in research and finally developed the chemical which when applied to the dentin will destroy a tooth's capacity for pain for twenty minutes to an hour.

Before the original announcement of the discovery last fall it was tested on nearly 500 volunteer cases at the clinics of the Columbia dental school and in all cases produced no after effects. Laboratory experiments also disclosed that the pulp of the tooth remains normal and healthy after its use.

HART HOUSE LIBRARY HAS NEW FURNISHINGS

Some new leather chairs and two new portraits now grace the Hart House library and add greatly to the comfort and beauty of the room.

Mr. Cowan of the comptroller's office indicated that leather chairs were the most satisfactory to withstand the rather rough usage they received.

"When we first put furniture in Hart House, cotton covering was used but it proved rather expensive and faded, nor did it keep clean," he said. "So next we tried wool but the moths proved bothersome. We could not afford to accommodate the members and the moths at the same time so last year leather was introduced as the standard covering for furniture in the House. It is definitely the only thing that will stand the mauling of the members and we shall continue to use it."

It was learned that the new pictures hanging on either side of the fireplace were donations from the Massey Foundation.

BLUE BASKETEERS LOSE TO BROADVUE, 24-19

The count was even at seventeen points. Bodrug netted a beautiful one-handed shot a minute later but Connelly tied it up again with a long shot. This ended the scoring for Varsity and Broadview went ahead to sink three fouls and one field goal before the final whistle sounded.

The low score of the game was due to bad luck around the hoops. Time after time the ball bounced right out of the basket. Both squads sank only six field goals each but the Y cagers netted twelve out of twenty-one free throws while the Blues were again weak on foul shooting, sinking only seven out of eighteen throws.

Bill Bodrug, ex-Varsity star, again led his mates to victory over his last year's team, compiling a total of nine points to lead all sharpshooters. Moores, Samme and Braden were also outstanding for the victorious Y squad. Hughie Marks and Joe Connelly were again the high scorers for the Blues with the former turning in a smart performance both defensively and offensively. Captain Phil Gold was a late starter and failed to get going, dislocating his thumb soon after he entered the contest.

Broadview took the lead at the start of the tilt on two free throws by Bodrug but the Blues replied with two foul shots. Play switched quickly from basket to basket and was soon tied at six points. The Blues then assumed an eleven to seven lead but the Y cagers cut this down to eleven to nine at the intermission.

In the second half the East Enders battled ferociously and checked very successfully to hold the Varsity team safe. The refereeing was exceptionally inconsistent in this period and gave rise to many arguments. Play was fairly even until after eleven minutes had passed but after that the Blues never did more than make swift forays into the Broadview end of the floor and shoot hurriedly.

Broadview Y: Martin, Bodrug 9, Moores 4, Samme 4, Breathet, Wagman 3, Rand, Braden 4 and Stronach.

Varsity: Connelly 7, T. Sullivan 2, Marks 5, Bedford, MacGregor 1, N. Sullivan 2, Dempster and Gold 2.

DENTS AND ENGINEERS FINISH GAME IN TIE

A hard fought baseball game yesterday afternoon between Dents and Sr. School ended in a tie, 8-8. The S.P.S. squad were leading 8-2 at the end of regulation time but as only three innings had been played the game was continued for another innings. Dents really went to work in their half and smashed the ball to bring in six runs and School tried desperately to score that extra run but the only man to get on base died there as Walkey fled out to end the game.

School: Marks, Chernosky, Quance, Willmot, Sweet, McMillin, Walkey and Gooch.

Dents: Saddler, Speer, Peterson, H. Mason, Chadovoff, L. Mason, McCall, McAskie, Hearney and Singer.

sumers of its products and each member receives at the end of the year a dividend on the amount of business which he has given the co-operative.

Every possible business function is represented in co-operative enterprises. They are managed by a board of directors elected by members of the co-operative by the system of "one man one vote", regardless of the amount of capital which he has invested.

If we think of co-operation as an economical force, said Mr. Hannan, we get all the advantages of capitalism and socialism without the so-called evils of capitalism or the disadvantages of state socialism. The first years of the depression did much to discourage the movement, since the co-operatives can not create markets, but since 1932, this discouragement has gradually worn off, and many new members are being signed up. Such a system of distribution of retail goods would be almost impossible in Canada, where the chain stores have too strong a foothold in the minds of the buying public, but this is not the case in Great Britain where there are no chain stores, and where the only opposition comes from the private dealer who cannot compete to any great extent.

While doing research work in the laboratory of the medical building of the University of Toronto recently, Gordon Butler, aged 25, was burned about the face by a flare of paraffin oil. He was taken to the emergency ward of the General Hospital where it was reported the burns were not serious.

MINISTER MAY SPEAK AT HART HOUSE DEBATE

 al health, will be present as guest speaker. This is the first time this year that a cabinet minister of the government has attended a debate at Hart House. Definite word that he will be present at the debate will be given to-day a member of the debates committee stated.

Speakers on the paper for this debate will include Wilfred Smith of University College, Bernie Shaffer of University College, Charles Hoag of the Faculty of Applied Science, and Paul Bridle of University College.

There will be but one more debate after this one and a large attendance is anticipated to hear the Liberal cabinet minister defend the tradition and contributions of the French race to the Canadian society at large.

The subject has stirred up considerable controversy on the campus and one of the most heated and lively debates this year will be in the offing. Saul Rae will be Speaker of the House, and it is believed Arch Harris, of St. Michael's College, will be clerk.

 wear red, white and blue collars, and the female teachers red, white and blue cuffs. He believes that the Americans are being carried away by their gregarious instinct. "It is a moral not a legal question," Mr. MacCallum said, "and it is quite possible to take the oath and conform to it outwardly, and at the same time be in opposition to its desiderata."

Both Professor G. P. Glazebrook and Professor E. W. McNicoll of the Department of History had no views on the matter and consequently made no statement. However, Mr. R. M. Saunders, of the same department, was opposed to any such measures, and believes that such legislation would "put a tool in the hands of entrenched interests that can be used against progressive changes."

Professor E. F. Burton, head of the Department of Physics, was both short and to the point with his opinion. He said, "It is an Americanism which has no place in Canada."

 the basis of the Greek democracy. It exercised a check on the desires of the individual as did law, patriarchal custom and public opinion. The Greeks lived for their country in a real sense and could be appealed to by instinct rather than morals. Their inherent feeling for the beautiful and hatred of ugliness was developed into the Aristotelian theory of the mean. With the sophists came the appeal to individual conscience and the breakdown of existing ideas. They were not very rational in their ideas of morality.

DATE BUREAU HEAD FORCED TO RESIGN

 The new operator, whose name, following the policy of the bureau in the past, will not be revealed, was reached at his home last night. "It is my firm belief," he said, "that the Bureau is not a thing of the past. It can, and under me it will, develop once more into one of the most active organizations on the campus."

He intimated that many activities hitherto untied by the Bureau will be attempted in the immediate future. Recalling the plan of late last term to hold "Date Parties," he said that they will be made a reality as soon as possible. "These parties," he said, "should become an important activity. Since they are limited only to members of the Bureau he suggested that all who might be interested should fill a Date Bureau form immediately in order to qualify. "It has been felt," he continued, "that some members of the Bureau have been neglected in the past, and this is one way in which we can do something concrete for those students."

Date Parties, as reported last term, will be held at tea rooms. They will be limited to members of the Bureau only, and will include fifteen or twenty students of both sexes. Each will come unattended and will have a chance to meet a suitable partner.

The new operator said that he had many more "startling innovations" to bring before the Bureau, but would not divulge them as yet.

PRISON CHANGES NEEDED SAYS BICKERSTETH

 are termed star prisoners and are sent to Maidstone or Wakefield. The remainder, called ordinary prisoners, are also subdivided. Only fifteen per cent of convicted prisoners are sentenced to more than three months' imprisonment, the great majority of these serving quite long terms. They are thus more amenable to reformatory measures than the great floating population of short term prisoners.

Comparing this careful classification to the indiscriminate herding found in Canadian prisons where boys are thrown in the same company with hardened offenders, Mr. Bickersteth expressed his hope that something would be done in the way of introducing the Borstal plan into Canada.

The Borstal plan, which originated in the founding of a school for delinquent boys in the village of Borstal, has since its inception found great favour amongst the authorities. A first offender is sent according to a scheme of special selection to one of the eight Borstal schools. These schools, which are organized on the British public school system have the House as centre of activities. The boys are given instruction in trades, with modern equipment and strict discipline. The House Master acts as general adviser and keeps careful check on the activities of his group.

Sixty-five per cent of boys committed to Borstal institutions are reclaimed. Careful provision is made for after care, but if a boy gets in trouble again he is given a second chance in a Borstal school.

Other advantages of the British system were stressed such as the appoint-represent only a very small group within the college.

Any attempt to present articles that would interest every student was condemned by Doris Dickson, speaking for the affirmative, as limiting the scope of the publication and making it very dull. "The only limit set by the staff is that articles be of a high standard," she continued. "We have a new order of things, a new attitude and do not have to spend four cloistered years at college, but can learn about the outside world."

"Too high a value is placed on originality," refuted Lorna Thompson, "and as a result art is sacrificed to sophistication. At present," she stated, "writers are presenting inane and weird forms of art in striving after the bizarre."

In spite of good opposition the "pseudo-intellectuals" came out victorious, upholding the motion, "Resolved that the House approves of changes in Acta Victoriana," by a vote of 32-21.

The late Sir John C. McLennan, who was a professor emeritus in the department of physics, has left the University a gift of $5,000 and his collection of scientific books and papers.

It will be remembered that Sir John died during last October while staying in France.

MOUNT ALLISON UNIVERSITY

Harold Freeman, who contributes today's column, was last year Assistant Editor of the Mount Allison Argosy, and is now Secretary of the Men's Press Club.

Mount Allison University, with a registration of slightly over 500, is situated in the college town of Sackville, New Brunswick, 30 miles from the city of Moncton, and 10 miles from the Nova Scotia border. The college buildings are grouped at the top of a hill overlooking the town and the Tantramar Marshes, with a tip of the Bay of Fundy in the distance; a beautiful site in the spring, summer and fall, albeit rather a cold one in the winter.

Mount Allison claims the distinction of being the first co-educational university in North America. Miss Hattie Stewart, who received her Arts degree in 1882, was the first woman graduate in Canada and the United States and the second in the British Empire. Miss Stewart died in Regina in 1931.

As far as buildings go, the prides of the campus are the Memorial Library and the Science Building. The library, erected in 1927 in memory of Mount Allison men killed overseas, is the most complete east of Montreal; in it is the Mary Mellish music room, with several thousand operatic records, and books on medical subjects.

The New Science Building, housing the Departments of Physics, Chemistry and Biology, was erected in 1931 at a cost of a quarter of a million dollars. The Carnegie Corporation, when they found that they could not entice Dr. H. E. Bigelow, Dean of the Department of Chemistry, away from Mount Allison, endowed the building to the extent of $147,000. The building is now recognized as the best-equipped and most up-to-date in the Maritimes.

The degrees conferred are those of Arts and Science. There is also a three year course in Engineering, at the completion of which successful students may enter the junior year of any faculty of engineering in the country. Practically all the students live in the university residences.

Debating and sports are the most prominent extra-curricular activities. In debating, Mount Allison has won 13 Maritime intercollegiate crowns in the last 14 years. In sport, they have never held less than two of the four major titles competed for in intercollegiate circles in the Maritimes. Probably their most outstanding triumph came in hockey in 1934 when they reached the Maritime senior finals, being finally eliminated in a two-game series by the Moncton Hawks, Dominion amateur champions that year. Rev. W. S. Godfrey coached the team at that time.

order to substitute a semicolon for a comma, so as to communicate exactly the meaning intended.

The folder we received offers little of the background of the Club's activities,—the strenuous but sociable thrice-weekly practices, the evening rehearsals at the Conservatory (semicolons refreshments semicolon dancing full stop) or the organization's proud record as a dating and marriage bureau, ranking second only to that of the Trinity library. It does speak, however, of this year's production, Iolanthe, which indeed is the purpose for which the pamphlet was prepared,—also the amazing advertisements which have been zig-zagging across the pages of this staid campus journal seeking to attract one and all, including SPSers and Medsmen.

Such, admittedly, is also the purpose prompting these few remarks. The Vic Music Clubbers are a great gang of enthusiasts who, we imagine, get the same kick out of treading the boards as we do from scribbling Cats. And if their activities provide us with a bit of timely copy we are willing to run the risk of directing a customer or two in their direction.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

deceitful designs of her mother-in-law. Others worthy of mention are Robert McRae as Akim the God-fearing humble peasant and Frances Peddie as Mittrill, the teetotaling ex-soldier who manages to glean a little humour from the gloomy circumstances in which he finds himself.

Unfortunately we miss Andrew Allen who does not appear in the cast but who selected the genuine gloomy Russian music for the entire act. We prefer to see Mr. Allen on the stage than to hear the depressing pieces which he has chosen.

It is this depressing air which pervades the whole production that tends to spoil the entertainment. If there was more brilliant acting that gloom would be dispelled and we could genuinely applaud the whole production. N.C.P.

In view of the coming public production for this year by the Play Workshop a resume of its work and character is opportune. Under the inspirational guidance of Herman Voaden whose symphonic play "Hiland" at the Drama Festival last year aroused much favourable comment, a varied group of students of the drama read and criticized original plays and adaptations, producing at least one of these a week.

From the beginning a careful planning of the approach of criticism to deal with the original substance is seen. The plan of action, its exposition are determined in a scenario and the subsequent expression in dramatic form is submitted to the group in a reading, followed by group criticism, an eager examination of style, motivation of plot, discussion of problem, and whatever arises from the particular play. Only after the demands of this criticism are satisfied and its suitability for the theatre agreed upon, is the play cast for laboratory production, which involves a serious study of all its technical aspects. The final decision following as to its merits as a stage production is a further testing of the criticism of the play reading.

In this combination of the creative and fulfillment processes, lies the uniqueness and great value of the Play Workshop.

with the achievement of peace. Nor is the communist philosophy sufficiently comprehensive.

Nevertheless some firm basis in a theory of life and existence is essential to the ideal of peace. In my opinion, this can only be found in the Christian philosophy, which does give a foundation for a constructive attitude to war and peace. Devotion to God, who is love, demands an attitude of goodwill towards all men. This position is valid not only for the individual but for societies and states in their mutual relations. Any other method than one characterized by goodwill inevitably results in the negation of the ideal of peace. From this may be developed a consistent, dynamic theory upon which a strong movement for peace can be built.

Its adoption by a group working for peace will inevitably reduce that group to a minority. But minority groups frequently wield an influence altogether out of proportion to their numbers. Its aim would be, not to gather into its organization a large membership, but to create student opinion in regard to peace and war, and this it could do far more effectively than a larger group which lacked the cohesive power and dynamic force of a fundamental philosophy.

PURPLE AND BLACK DRAPE UNIVERSITY IN ROYAL MOURNING

Campus Buildings Are Suitably Draped in Memory of Late Sovereign

ENTRANCES DRAPED

The icy snow-covered wind of yesterday clutched drapings of purple and black as it swept the campus. Signs of mourning for the death of the late King George V were prominently displayed at the main entrances of University College, Simcoe Hall, and the Royal Museum.

University College, reputed to be the first to get its mourning attire, is probably the most impressive. Black crepe has been draped over the main doorway, with a purple centre-piece, and purple ties on the sides. Two columns of black, standing out somewhat from the doorway, complete the design.

Mourning drapes at Simcoe Hall, the administrative centre of the University, are outstanding in their very simplicity. A plain black pillar of crepe stands on each side of the door, a mute reminder to all who enter of the passing of a beloved Sovereign.

The only other building hung with Royal mourning is the Royal Ontario Museum, on University Crescent. The four columns separating the doors of the main entrance have been draped in black crepe, with crowns of purple on top, and a plain purple band at the bottom.

Mention might also be made of the

"The Undergraduate" Has Diversity of Articles This Year

REVIEW MORLEY CALLAGHAN

The University College magazine, "The Undergraduate", will be released early in February according to a statement issued by the managing editor, H. L. Rowntree.

This year the annual issue will equal the high standard set in previous years, containing articles and stories calculated to appeal to all classes of students. Among the eighty pages of literature, art and drama will be a review of the works of Morley Callaghan, the noted Canadian novelist who recently addressed a meeting in the Hart House Library.

The magazine this year will have a new cover designed along more conservative lines. A notable improvement has been noticed in the business department. The advertising has been increased considerably over last year, and a contract made with the University College Alumni Association for eight hundred copies. This is an addition to the circulation of former years which was confined to undergraduates.

Academic Standards Not Lowered In Depression Years--Registrar

PRIZES OFFERED FOR PHOTOGRAPHS

The "Torontonensis" Giving Prizes for Best "Shots" of Campus Life

JANUARY 31, DEADLINE

All photographs for the Campus Life section of Torontonensis must be submitted to the S.A.C. office in Hart House, by January 31, it was announced yesterday by C. R. Ellis, Torontonensis editor.

Prizes are given for the best entries in this section, he stated. The first prize is $5.00, the second prize $3.00. The idea of the competition is to secure the best examples of the odds and ends of campus life which are not important, but interesting.

For example, photographs received already have showed scenes from the Victoria soph-frosh battles, residence scenes, and various unusual "shots" of the campus. It is hoped that students who have snap-shots of various campus events will enter them in the competition, and help to make this section of Torontonensis 1936 better than that of any previous year.

DR. E. R. WINCHESTER DISCUSSES COMMUNISM AND CHRISTIANITY

The relationship between Christianity and Communism was discussed briefly by Dr. E. R. Winchester, graduate of the Faculty of Medicine, at a group meeting of the Toronto Inter-collegiate Christian Union, in the Women's Union yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Winchester raised the question of the economic application of Christianity in the discussion of the Kingdom of God in the parables of Christ. "Is it a rule of civilization that all should receive equal pay, regardless of the effort spent?" she asked the group. (Continued on Page 4)

Additional Bursaries Provided from Recent Increase in Fees

No lowering of academic standards has been caused here by the depression. The Varsity learned today. Contrary to conditions in some American colleges, where entrance requirements have been made easier to attract more students, there has been no slackening at all here. According to A. B. Fennell, University Registrar, "Any change in the entrance requirements has been in the opposite direction."

The inquiry was prompted by a statement recently made by Frank Bowles, acting director of admissions in Columbia University, that some American colleges have been so hard hit by the depression that they have been forced to resort to a general lowering of educational standards.

Mr. Fennell, when questioned about scholarships, said, "There are a few on the calendar in which financial need is stressed, but the opinion is frequently expressed that scholarships should be awarded on academic merit only." Bursaries, however, are awarded. (Continued on Page 4)

Severe criticism was levelled at Japan's military policy in Shanghai, by Mr. Riddell's current events group in Wymilwood yesterday afternoon. It was suggested that a subtle policy based on British precedents would be more appropriate.

PARTY GOVERNMENT CONDEMNED BY U.C.

Party System Suppresses
Individualism, it is Maintained

Premier E. McCall's motion that "This House is not disgusted with party government", was rejected 16-9 at the U.C. Parliament yesterday.

Previous to the debate the proclamation of the accession of the new Sovereign was read and all members signed the oath of allegiance pledging fealty to the King, Edward VIII.

The premier emphasized the necessity of party government under a democratic system. He stated that the members of a political party mutually urged each other on in the interests of good government. "No acceptable alternative can be offered," stated the premier. Admitting the abuses in patronage by political parties he attributed them to human weakness rather than the system under which they arose.

J. Mirsky, leading the Opposition forces, contended the party system suppressed individual representatives from expressing personal opinions. Criticizing patronage spoils, he contended they constituted a basis for degenerated machine government by parties.

Bert Gerstein, opposing the motion, pointed out that in time of crises coalitions were always formed and used this as an example of inefficiency of party government.

The gallery will all be reserved for them."

This will be a University family service, he continued. There will be no academic procession and academics will not be worn. BOTH TEAMS FIT AND ABLE Tonight the senior hockey squad move to Maple Leaf Gardens to meet the Villains of Oakville. It will mark another attempt of the Bluejays to chalk up a win, and if they do, they will gain a headline in every paper. Judging by the last battle waged by these teams, tonight's game should contain plenty of action. Feelings ran pretty high last game, and for those who like their fighting and couldn't get down to the Gardens last night this should be about the next best thing. Even if tempers do not flare, there will be plenty of good hard-fought hockey.

The students will be at full strength tonight, as will Oakville. Much is expected of the Allen brothers, Peck and (Continued on Page 4)

Life and Liberty

(Submitted)

Humanity's faith in humanity should inhale great gusts of the breath of new life from Tuesday's announcement by New Jersey's Governor Harold Hoffman, that he will use every means in his power to preserve the life of the convict Hauptmann until the whole truth of his case shall become known.

Here, for all to see, is a man in a high place who would lay down his political life for the sake of justice and his principles. For Governor Hoffman realizes well that his reprieve of the convicted man has set on edge the teeth of the whole state of New Jersey. Their tabloid-ignited minds aflame with hate, citizens circulate petitions demanding that the reprieve be set aside and the hapless Hauptmann hustled away to the death chamber. State's Attorney Wilentz, who obtained the grotesque conviction, fumes impatiently, declaring that no new evidence has been found, consequently no new trial can be ordered, so pray why all this delay in doing away with a convicted murderer and wiping a tiresome case from the slate? But the governor continues, single-handed, with his fight, interviews, secret journeys, all manner of private investigations taking his time, until he shall be convinced that the constitutional right to life within the law shall not be taken from a man in his state without absolute proof of guilt.

In spite of the fierce resentment his action has aroused in the ranks of the "crucify-him" element from end to end of New Jersey and beyond, the governor merely represents the vast body of the world's fair-minded, in whom lodges an obstinate misgiving that absolute proof of guilt has never been fastened upon the Bronx carpenter. This misgiving has been reflected in the vigorous utilization of one legal expedient after another in granting the various stays of execution which have kept Hauptmann alive since his conviction last February.

The atmosphere of the trial is too well remembered for noisy adjectives to be necessary here. But it would have been ridiculous to expect a cool, considered weighing of evidence and handing down of decision in that farce of din, confusion and mob pressure. The proceedings have been condemned by the upper strata of the legal profession everywhere. The American Bar Association has heavily disapproved the surroundings in which the trial was carried on and the processes by which evidence was submitted and a conviction obtained. A well known Canadian jurist stated vehemently that the evidence on which Hauptmann was sentenced would have been thrown out of a British court "in five minutes".

Is Hauptmann guilty? Nobody knows but Hauptmann. But he is no man of iron, oily-tongued actor or poker-faced, hardened criminal. If he were any of these, his unshakable protests of innocence might be discounted. But he is just a man from the street, his criminal background confined to petty offenses, and it is hard to believe that a really guilty man of Hauptmann's stripe would not have broken down long ere this, for there have been several times when he must have been thoroughly convinced that the jig was up and the last hope gone.

Popular Songs Copyrighted--Why?

It appears that the music publishing companies have given word to the big networks that only when they say so may musicians play their tunes. This would seem to make the music publishers either fools or angry people, since if their tunes are not played on the big networks, they will never become popular and thus they will not sell enough copies of the songs to make up the price of the copyright fees.

It is a well known fact that it is only through the co-operation of the radio broadcasting companies that the music publishers are able to decree what songs shall be popular. Their new tunes are sent to the bigger orchestra leaders and to the studio programs for what is known in the business as "plugging". If the publishers wish to stop people from playing their new songs, it is very easy for them to do so, as they have demonstrated with this new law for 1936 which they have begun to enforce. They have been able to stop orchestras in the middle of their broadcasting programs, have taken them right off the air for fifteen minutes. But once they have the orchestras off the air they have taken their songs off the air with them, and now where will their sales be when the public does not know what tunes are popular. The only way of telling these days when a song is popular is to count the number of times it is played on the radio programs in a single evening.

So the reaction of the networks will inevitably be this, that the publishers will be told to keep their old songs, while the networks dig up some new ones. The average life of a popular song is seldom over two months anyway, so that it is quite easy for the radio people to create new enthusiasms for new tunes in just such a manner as they have been doing in the past, only in the future, taking care that the songs which they choose to popularize are covered by no copyright other than their own.

Narrow-minded

"U.S. Children in Peril—Internationalism Evil Rears Its Head in Schools. Peace Propaganda", shrieked recent headlines of a Hearst paper.

The article itself denounced the American Association of University Women for its international program which includes work with schools as well as radio programs, exhibits, institutes and forums for adults.

This women's organization even presumes to provide a list of 50 books building toward international attitudes in children. So Hearst and his editorial writers are alarmed. They jump to the conclusion that the peril of peace and internationalism is clutching at the very throats of youth.

This intolerance of other races certainly is not in keeping with the theories of brotherhood of man, and it is a reflection on the breadth of vision of a wealthy editor.—Oklahoma Daily.

Fortune Telling Now a Racket

A short time ago Toronto was subjected to an invasion of slot-machines of the gambling variety. The idea was to line up, by turning a lever, so many raspberries, strawberries, lemons or oranges as the case might be, and thereby to rake in so many nickels or pennies, according to the type of machine. The racket was cleaned up by an energetic police campaign and several charges placed against the authors of the craze.

Now we are being subjected to a further and more insidious racket of the same variety. This is the fortune-telling craze that has swept the city ever since last fall. Consisting of all the various forms of fortune-telling, from palmistry and astrology to horoscopes and hand-writing. In at least one of the big department stores in the downtown sector of the city there is a booth with its hand-writing expert; and in at least one of the bigger downtown picture houses there is a slot-machine that will purport to give you your true horoscope for the small sum of ten cents. Then practically every little tea shop in the Village and in the vicinity of the University has its tea-cup reader or its palmistry expert.

There is a section in the Canadian Criminal Code covering these abuses; there is strong public feeling against their continuance. But hitherto the police department has been either too occupied or not sufficiently interested to repeat their clean-up of these petty rackets. The result is that Toronto is steadily attracting more and more charlatans and chislers and that the public are being rooked of thousands of dollars weekly.

ODE TO COMFORT
Whil'st perusing history's annals
Found our forbears wore red flannels.
One-piece garments—used to wear 'em,
Don't see how Grand-pa could bear
'em.
Covered like an overall
Fitted like a papered wall,
—Progeny of Mr. Mitchy!
Were crimson flannels ever itchy!
Youth can never know.

Into them they'd hibernate
On a predetermined date,
Stayed within, till summer breezes
Told their insulated knees
It was time to exult,
And begin a careful hunt
Seeking gets quite unexpected
Which during winter had collected,
How—they wotted not.

Times have changed—the young sensations
Sally forth in new creations.
Now they're wearing bras and panties,
Bunny fluffs, brevets or scanties.
Lanmees, teddies, hop-ins, shorties,
The Industry's been making sorties.
How we'd shock the flannelled forties
With our modern underwear.

VARSITY SECONDS TOO GOOD FOR ST. MIKE'S CAGERS

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By M. D. S.

At a meeting of the Athletic Directorate yesterday plans were made for entertaining the intercollegiate basketball teams when they meet here for the playoffs in the near future. It was also decided that the intercollegiate hockey team would play in the T.H.L. Ladies' City League. The first game will be played in about two weeks if the team has had sufficient practice by then. Norrine McClelland is coaching the team and the games will probably be played in the Varsity Arena.

U.C. had a big turnout at their first hockey practice last night and it seems they will have a good team this year with Fran Atkinson and Betty Mark playing again. Unfortunately Chippy Grant, stellar player of last year's team, will not be playing this year. The next practice is on Saturday from 1-2.

There will be a basketball practice tonight as usual from 6-7:30. As Tuesday is a holiday the practice for that night will be cancelled and it will be decided tonight when the next practice will be held.

There is a meeting of the Badminton Club this afternoon to decide about the interfaculty tournament. It is hoped this will be played soon after the various faculties have played off their tournaments.

IT'S WIN 39-19 IN FAST STRUGGLE

Blues Hold Irish Well in Check, Advance in League Standing

HOGG SCORES 16 POINTS

The intermediate Varsity hoop-men whipped St. Michael's fighting Americans last night in the Hart House gym 39 to 19. The Blue and White victory placed the University team on the second rung of their group standing, one game behind the fast-flying West End combination.

Varsity earned their big margin on the score sheet by playing heady basketball right from the initial tip-off. The Blue marksmen were tolerably accurate and they watched their checks as closely as a squad of house detectives.

Hogg, Daugherty and Peters were Varsity's best men while Hastings played fast ball for the Irish.

St. Michael's: Reilly 2, Rowland 7, Hastings 7, Flynn, Hannan 3, Lambert, Sweeney.

Varsity: Hogg 16, Gillen 2, Peters 7, Daugherty 6, Cooper 5, Marling, Harlock 4, Barrov 2.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Frank Lambert

The Varsity cagers are in for a hectic week-end as the seniors, intermediates and juniors clash with the West End squads, and the Y court exponents will be meeting determined Blue men, as the results will have a definite bearing on the league standings in the respective series. A win for the intermediates will give the Blue quintet a first place tie with West End Y.

Warren Stevens' seniors with a few more breaks in their sharpshooting, will be right in the contention for group honours. A possible absentee will be Phil Gold, who has a dislocated finger, but the rest of the team are in fine shape and ready to repeat their early season victory over the Y eagers from West End.

The question perplexing hockey followers around the University is can the Varsity seniors gain a victory in their remaining five games and smash the jinx dogging their steps in the Senior O.H.A. campaign, and tonight with Oakville as their opponents at Maple Leaf Gardens the Blues will try to solve the problem.

Frankie Brown and his string of Varsity boxers ran into some heavy weather last night as two of his hopes in the 126 and heavy class had their boxing aspirations chilled somewhat as Mel Glionna punched out a five round victory over Freddie Smith, and Charles Pocius, in renewing his feud with Stein finished second best after four rounds of furious milling.

Nicholson, substituting for Dave Yack, met more than his match when Tom Powell, former intercollegiate champion, showed all the class that gained him fame in the halls of fistiana, polishing off befuddled Nicholson in the third round after one minute and five seconds had elapsed. The Forestry lad had the fight all his own way and should make a great showing in the intercollegiate tourney this year.

Weighted down by the sad news of his father's severe illness Charles Pocius, Varsity heavyweight, was a little at sea in the main bout, and in the furious milling carried the fight to Stein, who was also willing and punches were fired from all angles. Pocius' overhand right swings cooled the atmosphere around the Gardens, but Stein in the fourth round sank a punch in the mid-section of Pocius and the fight was practically over. The Varsity batter carried on gamely to the end of the round but was too short on condition to continue.

All in all the Blue boxers received good experience in the game of social rights as handed out in the squared circle last night and their efforts were enthusiastically received, or are we right?

THREE CAGE-TEAMS GOING TO WEST END

Seniors Must Win to Stay in Race with West End and Broadview

Varsity's three cage-teams, seniors, seconds and juniors, all visit West End tomorrow night for scheduled engagements with the corresponding West End teams. The senior and intermediate affairs should be rousing contests as the results will materially affect the league standing of all concerned. The unfortunate juniors, with three defeats and no victories behind them, are practically out of the picture.

The situation in the senior league is rather tangled. West End have twice defeated Broadview, who have twice defeated Varsity who defeated West End in their only encounter to date.

O.C.E. BASKETBALLERS DEFEAT ST. MICHAEL'S WITH AWODE STARRING

A sensational basket from centre by Awode in the last ten seconds of play climaxed a brilliant interfaculty basketball game in the upper gym yesterday afternoon, giving O.C.E. a 23-22 win over St. Mike's.

The Irish were leading 14-7 at half-time but the Teachers rallied splendidly led by Awode, who potted ten points. Vickar and Bernhardt played well for the Pedagogues. Noble and McGivern were best for St. Mike's.

ACADEMIC STANDARDS ARE NOT LOWERED

ed jointly on academic merit and need. Mr. Fennell further remarked "In the last few years bursaries have been established in the arts colleges and in some of the professional faculties for the assistance of deserving students. A sum was set aside out of the recent increase in fees to provide more bursaries."

In an interview with Mr. H. Bennett, the Registrar of Victoria College, it was learned that the academic standards of the University of Toronto had in no way been lowered, and that the entrance requirements were still at the same level as they had been. In the matter of scholarships, the registrars of the colleges said that there was no general rule as to how many of the students retained their scholarships throughout their college career. Some years, there are a great many who retain their first class honours, and thus their scholarships, and other times, it is just the reverse.

There is no such thing as the "recruiting" system about which there is so much talk, but W. J. McAndrew, Registrar of University College, said that there are naturally some cases where a needy student is assisted by outside help and that one could not "curb the enthusiasm of graduates" in the matter of persuading students to come to a particular college. Students may also receive bursaries, which are awarded, said J. N. Woodcock, Registrar of Trinity College, on the basis of both ability and need. These bursaries are awarded on an absolutely impartial standard and are completely confidential between the student and the college concerned.

Townsend. If the job of holding these stars in check is not too great then the Blue squad will chalk up a win. For the Blues Ripley and McLeod should be hard to stop, while much is to be expected from McQuigam and Charles. If Valquette is not too busy with Cy Allen, he might find the chance to bang in a goal or two. Shipman can be relied upon to hold the Villains fairly well in check if not left entirely to himself.

All in all it should be a smart game, with the Blues having a better than even chance of snapping the losing streak.

DISCUSSES COMMUNISM AND CHRISTIANITY

"Christ places emphasis on intention in endeavour rather than achievements." She pointed out the necessity for a rehabilitation of society according to the principles of Christianity before the advent of Communism. "Unless people with your background make the change, the people without it will, and the result will be a Communism not based on the principles of the Kingdom of God," she declared.

The importance of human endeavour in the Christian life was also discussed by the group. Dr. Winchester illustrated by the parable of the vineyard the idea that all ability separated from the Divine purpose is ineffectual. "Yet," she continued, "the Gospel would be human endeavour. Here, too, it is the paralyzing if we took away every purpose that matters."

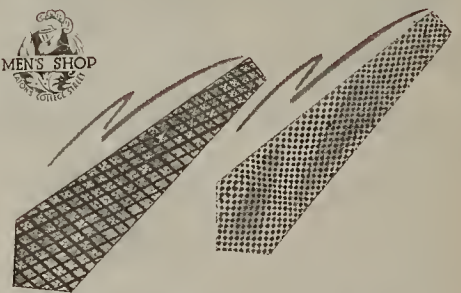

By means of the parable of the rich man's feast, Dr. Winchester demonstrated the universality of the Christian faith. The idea of an estimate based not upon birth, position, or wealth, but upon spiritual possessions, was a new one to the Jews, who regarded riches as the reward of merit. The Kingdom of God, open to anyone who wished to enter it, is in direct opposition to all the preconceived ideas of the Jewish race, she said, and it is this point which Christ emphasizes strongly in his parables.

force of the great interpretative artist. Not that it is necessary that anyone feel obliged to subscribe to the every flourish which a pianist of the old school throws off, nor indeed to thrill to gradiose thump and inartistic flat-bang of the Liszt Polonaise.

If extraordinary technical brilliance is less unique than in former days—the phenomenon of the great creative artist is sufficiently rare to make us less critical and more appreciative of Hofmann. It is interesting to observe that in a larger task he gives a commanding and serious performance. In the major classics he arises magnificently to the occasion. If we find him rather too flashy in the virtuoso pieces it is more than likely that we and not he, are out of style. And while the knowledge of this fact may not add to our pleasure more, it is true that today we admire a restrained style that reads more intellectual content than was originally intended.

Hofmann brings us what, for the most part, is best in a larger and grander style of playing and there may come a time when a reaction will set in and we will long for the more personal and poetic treatment of a Hofmann.

While the Beethoven Sonata may not have had the authority of a Schnabel's rendition, it was beautifully played and strongly conceived. Nothing characterizes the recital quite so much as to say that with few exceptions it was extremely beautiful playing.

ISHERWOOD STRESSES NEED OF FELLOWSHIP AT T.I.C.C.U. MEETING

In the T.I.C.C.U. Bible Study group at 5 p.m. yesterday Professor Isherwood continued his New Testament studies. Taking as the text for his discussion Ephesians 3, verses 1-13, he spoke of the value and importance of Christian fellowship, stressing the fact that no organization or cultural system could hope to endure if it were not founded in a spirit of genuine fellowship.

Professor Isherwood went on to say that economic organizations, commercial pacts and "ostentatious leagues and alliances" in general, failed because they had their roots not in fellowship, but in selfishness. He held that the League of Nations failed because it was "born of fear". "The words 'In Christ', he said, 'contain the only and sufficient hope for human culture.'"

Marxism combined with discussion of current events. At this first meeting concrete subjects were brought forth for consideration.

Among these subjects was the Italo-Ethiopian question and the opinion of the Catholic Church of this. Catholicism was discussed at length with various examples for illustration taken from Count Carr's experiences in Quebec.

"French nationalism is compatible with Canadian nationalism," said Mr. Carr, who seemed to disagree with the formation of the motion, arguing that this infers a distinction between French and English as Canadians, whereas the French, in reality, are the most patriotic of subjects.

NEW LAW COURSE LINKS MEDICAL WITH LEGAL CRIMINOLOGY

Fresh Aspect of Crime Study Inaugurated by Dr. K. C. Gray

Lack of Proficient Medical-Legal Instructor Hindered Taking of Step

DR. GRAY IS GRADUATE IN BOTH LAW, MEDICINE

Expect Course will be Useful in Tackling Modern Problem of Insanity-Defense

Dr. Kenneth C. Gray, counsel to the Minister of Health, and graduate doctor and lawyer, yesterday inaugurated the new course in criminology which is henceforth to be a permanent part of the University's legal curriculum. This will be a unique course in the study of law. "It is," as Dr. Kennedy, head of the legal department put it in an interview, "an attempt to link academic training with life."

The course, which is given to students in third and fourth year law, will emphasize the mental and psychiatric side of criminology, dealing with the subject from the medical as well as the legal point of view. It will link directly with courses already a part of the curriculum, especially those in administrative law and jurisprudence. Insanity has become notoriously prominent in (Continued on Page 4)

Varsity Debaters TO GO ON AIR SOON

Rae, Graham for U. of T.
Oppose Team from Western in First Radio Debate

Two brilliant students and speakers from the University of Toronto will debate Friday night over the radio in the annual inter-university radio debate innovated last year by the Canadian Radio Commission.

The Toronto team is composed of J. E. L. Graham, senior in Political Science and Rhodes scholar this year, and Saul Rae, senior student in sociology and winner of the Massey Fellowship this year. Last year Rae was a member of the University debating team which also included Arnold Smith and Sidney Hermant and which went through to the finals where they were defeated by a narrow margin.

Graham has had no experience as a radio debater but his clear enunciation will be an invaluable asset.

The debate will be heard over station CRCT from 9 to 9.30 p.m. Friday and the motion will be "Resolved, that (Continued on Page 4)

NEWS OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

London: A line of people more than one and one half miles long waited at midnight to pass before the bier of the late King George V. Royal delegations from abroad have been arriving here to attend the funeral on Tuesday. In the private chapel at Buckingham Palace members of the Royal family attended a service in the late King's memory.

Rome: It is felt here that there is increasing danger of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict spreading to Europe. Relations between Italy and Britain are described as "precarious".

DEBATE POSTPONED; OTHER PLANS MADE

Hart House Committee Unable to Obtain Cabinet Member as Speaker on Wednesday

HOPE TO HAVE GOUIN

Owing to the inability of Hon. C. G. Power, Federal Minister of Pensions and National Health, to attend the Hart House debate scheduled for this coming Wednesday, the Debates Committee decided in a meeting Saturday to postpone the debate until a later date.

Mr. Power was to be guest speaker when the motion "That Quebec nationalism is consistent with Canadian nationalism" was to be debated, but due to the death of King George V, all speaking engagements of cabinet ministers were cancelled until further notice.

The committee announced that the motion on Quebec nationalism will be deferred until February 26 when a visiting team from McGill University, will attend. It is believed that Mr. Power will also be able to attend the debate on February 26. Failing to obtain the cabinet minister, the committee will endeavour to have Paul Gouin, leader of the fiery Quebec party, Action Libérale Nationale, as guest.

This Wednesday's debate has been definitely cancelled but it was learned that the debates committee is endeavouring to obtain a prominent speaker for a debate which might be held on Thursday, February 6. Plans are still tentative as yet but an announcement will be made in a few days.

In a lengthy meeting called when it was learned that Mr. Power could not attend the debate Wednesday, the debates committee concluded it would be impossible to obtain another speaker on such short notice. It was deemed advisable to postpone the debate on Quebec nationalism until February 26 and to make an effort to organize a debate for February 6.

It was rumoured an effort would be made to obtain a cabinet minister of the Ontario government as guest speaker.

"VARSITY" HELPS POLICE RECOVER STOLEN AUTO

The latest campus mystery has been solved by The Varsity's police reporter. The fawn sedan that stood in the lane beside Hart House has been restored to its rightful owner.

After watching the car accumulate snow for four days The Varsity stepped in to discover that it belonged to David MacMurray of Ancaster and that it had been stolen between 1 and 1.30 a.m. on Monday, January 20. A police cruiser removed it to the central garage Friday afternoon.

Limit Education in Soviet To Those Favouring Regime

Mme. Tchernavin, Who Escaped from USSR, Describes Life and Perils There

WROTE BEST SELLER

By Helen E. McEwan

"Youth is supreme in Russia today," said Madame Tatiana Tchernavin, authority on Russia, in an interview with The Varsity. "Young people are told that they are infallible and so should ignore advice offered by parents and teachers. They are also taught at an early age to practice absolute freedom in their sexual relations. It is out of this deplorable condition that the new attitude towards marriage and divorce has arisen. Divorce once held the same status as it does today in other countries, but since the revolution, it has become a mere formality, with the ensuing degradation of the idea of marriage as a sacred institution."

Unless one is of the new regime in Russia today, one's education is limited to a compulsory course in the elementary school. As there are no private schools in Russia, all education is under government control, and only "new-regime" have the privilege of attending high schools and universities. The result is that many are without training in a profession and therefore are not fitted for work.

Escape from the Soviets, which was published in November, 1933, was for two months a best seller in the U.S.A., where twelve editions of it have been printed. The book has been translated into eleven languages and contains an account of the life and adventures of Madame Tchernavin from 1918 to 1932. In it she narrates the perilous escape of her family from Russia to Finland when they walked for 22 days through marshes and forests, north of the Arctic circle, with only berries and mushrooms for food.

Her second book, We Soviet Women, contains fifteen stories about different types of Soviet women and was written in answer to the many complaints that her first book told only of the experiences and thoughts of one woman. (Continued on Page 4)

DIGNITY, SIMPLICITY TO MARK MEMORIAL

Official Order of Service Now to be Accommodated

PRESIDENT COOY SPEAKS

Plans are now complete for the University of Toronto memorial service to be held tomorrow at 2.30 p.m. in Convocation Hall in memory of our late sovereign King George V.

The service will be marked by dignity and simplicity and will be as far as possible like that held in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, on the occasion of the funeral. There will be no academic procession. The University officials will sit on the main floor and the gallery has been reserved for students. There is accommodation for about 1000 undergraduates.

The official order of service was issued by W. J. Dunlop, head of the extension and publicity department, last night.

When all have taken their places in Convocation Hall, the whole congregation will sing the hymn, "O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come," Dr. Coody, who will conduct (Continued on Page 3)

TALENT TURN-OUT ENCOURAGES LOEB

Further Casting This Afternoon in Hart House Theatre from 4 to 6 O'clock

More than forty students turned out to the casting of the University Dramatic Committee's production of The Inspector-General last Thursday afternoon. Some of the parts have already been cast. This afternoon there will be further casting in Hart House Theatre between four and six o'clock.

Martin Loeb, the director, when interviewed over the week-end, said, "The enthusiasm which I was sure must be among the students, was definitely shown by the large turnout to the casting. Not only that, but a number of students have asked since Thursday if there were still parts to be had. These people are invited to come out this afternoon with the others, when we hope to finish the casting."

The director also announced that the Department of Architecture was already busy designing the sets. "The one main purpose of this production is to provide an opportunity for students in every faculty to obtain and enjoy stage experiences. The list of those who turned out on Thursday reads like a small directory. There are students from nearly every college and faculty, including the School of Nursing, Social Science, Faculty of Engineering, Medicine and all the Arts colleges," Mr. Loeb said.

By Clarke Hood

Warren Stevens' collection of basketball stars representing the senior hope of the University remained in the running for the Big Four city title by defeating the West End Y boys right in their own stamping ground on Saturday evening 33-27 as the final game of the triple bill. The Varsity quintet clearly outplayed their opponents and should have piled up a better score.

The Blue team got off to a bad start in a scoring way and West End piled up an early lead. However Varsity staged a brief flurry midway through the frame and pulled into a 13-12 lead. After this rush their attack subsided and at half time they trailed by an 18-16 count. Pomer, West End's prolific scorer, netted three baskets and sank two foul throws to lead the Y attack. He displayed a marked ability at throw- (Continued on Page 3)

Dental Students Overworked

Conditions generally associated with medieval centres of study appear to be existing in a mild manner in the Faculty of Dentistry. While several faculties believe themselves compelled to do more than an ordinary day's work every day, the distinction belongs in a large degree to the Dents.

The Dentists, it appears, begin their day's work at 8.30 a.m. six days a week. While this is not considered such an unusual demand in some sections of the country, it is quite early in the morning for students. The advantages of beginning this early in the day are very few when it is considered that the students are very often still on duty till after six o'clock at night. Five-thirty p.m. is the scheduled hour for the cessation of academic duties, but few of the students are able to leave at this hour.

The system is not lacking in dangerous possibilities. Two of the fourth year students in this year's class have already suffered disastrous physical results. One student is at present in the hospital suffering from consumption. The other is threatened with the same disease, and is unable to attend classes.

Nor is this an unusual situation. Last year two students were forced to drop out in their fourth year for the same reasons. Such a system obviously needs a remedy. Students can only stand so much work. Their academic duties keep them away from the Hart House facilities during the course of the entire day while their evenings make other demands on them, a situation which tends to eliminate the possibility of any recreation.

It appears that the present time would be ideal for some sort of revision of the system. The appointment of a new dean will imply some changes in the routine and we would suggest that serious thought be given this matter, in the hope that changes for the better may be effected.

Photography In Hart House

This review of the photographs now on exhibit in the Art Gallery of Hart House has been prepared for The Varsity by Mr. J. H. Mackey. Mr. Mackey is an outstanding amateur photographer himself and is the district executive of the Pictorial Photographers of America.

Someone has said that a true art medium exists as a thing in itself. Today photography is universally recognized as an art medium providing its powers and limitations are understood and adhered to.

The intrusion of any technique which is not purely photographic, any manipulation or alteration imposed on negative or print tends to destroy the integrity of the medium.

The exhibition of some eighty odd prints now on the walls of the Art Gallery of Hart House is a sincere effort in this respect, there being no manipulated processes in evidence.

With the wide range of negative material and papers now on the market it is quite possible to secure by straightforward photography, combined with vision and sound composition, prints that will live equally as long as those produced by other means, which is evidenced by their inclusion in the exhibits displayed in our important art galleries.

A discussion of some of the prints on display in the Art Gallery of Hart House may be of interest to those who have made them and to others who have visited the showing.

There is a fair representation in each of the five groups or classifications with the possible exception of "Design or Still Life", which group should have had a much larger entry.

Roy Kemp's Bal Masque is a brave attempt to record something of interest, yet the print does not do justice to the photographer nor to the subjects embraced, the values being false, thus destroying the modelling, his other print The Diver, being technically better yet not convincing as the diving figure appears to have been printed into a cloud picture. The diver is coming from nowhere and going nowhere; the inclusion or suggestion of a diving board at the right and some water at the bottom of the print would have put the composition across better; however, it is a striking print worthy of commendation.

In this section of Ontario we have so few opportunities to make real winter pictures, which to be successful require fresh clean snow, sunshine and a certain amount of courage on the part of the photographer, that a worth while snow study is the exception.

Edwin S. W. Belyea's winter pictures are technically beautiful examples of snow texture and lighting, his Snow No. 1 has in the right hand one third of the print a most satisfying composition, the remaining two thirds quite unnecessary. Snow No. 2 lacks composition but is equal technically to No. 1. Simplicity is often the keynote of good composition, but we are all apt at times to include too much in our prints.

Woodley's Archway at Night, Lloyd's Light from Without, and McVicar's Devious Path are splendid in and around Hart House, where there are hundreds of beautiful and dramatic pictures just begging to be recorded by those who have eyes to see.

A Tight Corner by J. R. Beale is simple, dramatic and tells a convincing story.

Lloyd's Row Brother Row, a good record snap shot yet a better print from the negative could be made.

Acrobatics by Sangster is interesting and technically good but from the standpoint of composition could be improved by trimming away the left hand two thirds of the print, leaving only the right hand third which contains an excellent story telling picture, that is, the acrobats and the single interested onlooker. In Sangster's Log Loading in Haliburton, one feels that the sky dominates the entire composition, and while the subject matter commands the attention the range of tones is too short for a dramatic subject of this type.

About the most satisfying print in the whole show is F. A. Reid's Sunday on the Hill, which is poetic and full of the spirit of the quiet countryside on a Sunday morning in June; one goes back again and again to look at and study this print.

In the class "Design and Still Life" one is disappointed to find so few entries, as in this field there are so many opportunities for the serious student to create something individual and out of the ordinary.

The Portrait and Figure Study group is interesting but not outstanding; Sangster's portrait of Mrs. W. R. shows a finished technique, and a print by Archer is commendable.

In conclusion it may be said that the whole show is a credit to those who supported it with their work, although in previous years there has been a greater number of outstanding prints on the walls.

Newspaper gals aren't all so tough. In shocked tones one of them has just told us of a recent walk through the wallpaper department at Eaton's, where she came upon a huge and startling sign. Said she didn't know whether it was merely intended as cold weather advice, or had something to do with the pursuit of happiness. Said the sign:

The other day three pipes entered Diana's and sat down at the end of the counter, projecting below three of Victoria's loftiest brows. Not receiving the immediate attention of the fountain clerk who was busy doing a little house cleaning, G.B., Mac and the Cherub proceeded to hail him by various ingenious titles. "Luigi!" summoned G.B. in haughty manner, artistic modulation. "Guidgliamo!" commanded the Cherub with a frown, ferocio italiano. Mac gave vent to a simple but petulant "Garcon!", in the accent that comes most natural to him. Gus the fountain jerker finished his wiping and polishing. (Continued on Page 4)

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Toronto Symphony

Despite the post-war reaction against the heroic Beethoven's Eroica Symphony (No. 3) still compels the admiration of even the most ardent modernists. Critics of the older school have read into it various significances; whether Beethoven meant it to be a eulogy of Napoleon I, or a mighty argument for man, is immaterial; what matters is that it is a supreme expression of a musical genius and a powerful ego. As performed by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra on Saturday afternoon at Massey Hall, it retained much of its vitality and force.

Though the orchestra was slow in "warming up" in the first movement with its terrific surging of energy, the second was beautifully executed. The tragic element was not given any over-emphasis; the final re-entry of the first subject, handled with dignity and simplicity, provided the most stirring moment of the afternoon. The scherzo lacked clarity and decision, but the finale which unifies and sublimates the whole symphony, carried with it complete conviction, in spite of a slight rawness in the heavier instruments. If it lacked finish and brilliance, the performance yet achieved unusual heights of expression. It is to be hoped that the orchestra will be equally successful. (Continued on Page 4)

Let's Go Places

Loew's—

Any review we could give of Loew's this week would necessarily be biased. In the introduction of Splendour we noticed that the costumes were by Omar Kiam. We sat back to enjoy a Queen City version of the Bacchian draperies. When the picture was unfolded and we realized that Hollywood had not made a mistake in spelling, we could only sit there for two hours with something or other gnawing at our vitals.

Splendour is a Fifth Ave. version of the old Eskimo custom of you lend me your wife for a couple of weeks and I will give you a nice tallow candle. This seemingly impossible theme is almost made real by the splendid acting of Helen Westley. She carries the destiny of the picture as much as she is responsible for the destiny of her family in the story. The scenes in which she does not appear are on the whole weak and the story approaches the fantastic. Billie Burke and David Niven also lend strength to the picture with their characterization. The leads, Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea, were apparently cast with the idea that they would look good in the bathing scene. The featurettes are quite good. A travelogue of Pitcairn Island is the

By E. S. W.

At the meeting of the Badminton Executive last Friday afternoon, it was planned that the interfaculty tournament should take place on March 6, which is five weeks from this Friday. If possible, the tournament will be played on the courts of the York Badminton Club, but no arrangements have been made as yet.

Last year's system of play will be used again. Each team will consist of five girls, or one singles player, and two doubles teams. Vic are fortunate in that four of their last year's team are back. The Scarlet and Gold college tournament is being run off competently and the first round has been played off completely.

Because the University will be closed tomorrow, Tuesday's basketball practice will be held tonight, from six to seven-thirty. The second practice will be on Thursday, also from six to seven-thirty, and there will be a shooting-practice for the forwards on Wednesday from five to six in the Lillian Massey gym.

SENIOR PUCKMEN LOSE TO VILLANS IN FAST CONTEST

But Score of 6-4 Shows Mettle of Bailey's Boys in Face of Wearing Disappointment

MCCLELLAND PLAYS WELL

Bailey's Blues are still in search of victory following their 6-4 defeat at the hands of the Oakville club at the Maple Leaf Gardens Friday night. Play ranged fairly even but the Villans had better luck around the nets and provided Teno with a stronger defence than the best Varsity could offer.

The lakeshore brigade scored the only two goals of the initial period and kept that advantage throughout the game. Marzo on a solo effort beat Shipman from close in for the first goal and Townsley made it 2-0 when he took a pass from P. Allen to bring on the red light.

The second stanza saw the winners again outscore the Blues, with the former getting an additional two goals to one for the students. On several occasions Harvey Teno in the Oakville nets was called upon to make sensational saves from close in but he was equal to the task and his team enjoyed a 4-1 lead at the end of the session.

With every man going at top speed in the final frame the Varsity pucksters tried to even things up but the Villans put up a strong defense after Sissons tallied for Varsity in the first minute of play and kept them off the score sheet until the closing minutes and only then after they had added two more goals. Lenihan and Ripley were the goalgetters for Varsity in this period with Valiquette and McClelland getting the assists.

Normie McClelland led the point gatherers with three assists while Townsley scored two points on passes from the Allen brothers and Peer collected the same number on solo rushes.

Varsity: Shipman; Charles, Driscoll; McIlquham, McClelland, Ripley; subs, Jeffrey, Valiquette, Lenihan, Sissons. Oakville: Teno; Sutcliffe, Moore; Townsley, P. Allen, Peer; subs, S. Allen, Marzo, Boston, Campbell.

exciting with both goalkeepers being called on to make sensational saves. The students broke the tie when Brown passed to Boddington who was camped on the goalie's doorstep and he promptly flipped the rubber disc into the cage.

Findlay's started a series of offensive rushes with the opening of the last stanza and tied the count 3-3 when Nevins beat Shipman in a scramble in front of the Varsity citadel. Lenihan and Valiquette combined to put the Beavers back in front but their lead was short-lived for with Lenihan in the cooler Findlay's turned on the pressure and scored two goals to put them one up. Minutes later they put the game on ice when Drummond talked on a solo rush. The Blues pressed desperately in the closing minutes but were unable to score. The referee stopped proceedings with one minute to go for an unknown reason and almost precipitated a riot among the Blues' supporters.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Frank Lamberti

Live and Learn. Any idea that athletics are flourishing exclusively in the Western Hemisphere has been dispelled in recent years by the progress made in sports by the little men in the East, with Japan coming to the fore with star performers in aquatic events. This fact was driven home further as China has also gone in for athletics in a grand manner.

Last fall on October 10 the Shanghai stadium was opened, a sports amphitheatre comparable with the best in America. It has a seating capacity of 70,000 and accommodation for 2000 athletes complete with locker rooms, dining rooms and sleeping quarters. A swimming pool 50 metres by 20 metres is also installed with a seating capacity of 5,000. A gymnasium 131 feet by 76 feet completes the sports bowl. A veritable sports Mecca.

This afternoon two outstanding contenders for the Eckard trophy, symbolic of interfaculty waterpolo supremacy, will clash as Victoria, defending champions, clash with Trinity, their closest rivals and the struggle should be bitterly contested as both squads have aquatic stars and Trinity are well reinforced.

This year's senior interfaculty swimming meet appears to be a crowd pleaser from every angle. The victorious baker's dozen who swept through to two record breaking victories on their recent American tour are all entered in Wednesday night's splash but the finshakers are entered in their respective faculties and with the additional competition of the various swimmers the races should be keenly contested. The speedy McCatty brothers will be on opposing teams since Cressy will don the red and black of Trinity while Winice will be out to earn points for O.C.E. The entries have been piling up so fast that the club executives have been forced to run a series of heats in the voluntary diving, 50 and 100 yard free style and the backstroke race on Wednesday afternoon at 3 p.m. If you enjoy swimming and don't like to get wet there are plenty of seats in the gallery.

Stevens' senior basketballers have finally hit their stride and Saturday night saw them take the strong West End squad on their own floor in a thrilling contest. The Y team evidently believe in combining youth and maturity on their teams for Vince Stark and his father, Joe Stark, a former American professional, both appeared on the West End line-up. Lanky "Lofty" Willis showed a little of his old form at centre in the first half but confined his second period activities to keeping the Varsity board of strategy informed on how the seconds were ticking off. The former centre man seems right at home at his old position and should be a permanent improvement on the Varsity line-up. Remember the tip-off is often worth valuable points.

Hither and Yon

When the plaid-shirted Foresters at the University of Minnesota hold a field day they don't fool about it. Last week they started their annual sports, beginning by cutting a morning's classes, then spending the afternoon skidding logs down a hill and piling them on the campus. A tree trunk was planted in the middle of the athletic field and used as a target for axe-throwing, and bonfires were set hither and yon on the university grounds. The afternoon ended with a game of touch-rugby played on snowshoes.

In the evening a dance was held in the "Bloody Bucket Saloon", which ordinarily plays the unexciting role of agriculturists' gym. Every man who was killed in the saloon contributed some of his blood to the bucket.

Professor James A. Roy, of the English department at Queen's has been invited to deliver a course of lectures in German universities. It is thought to be the first time a Canadian professor has been so honoured, and it is believed to be the result of a recent book, "Pole and Czech in Silesia", which aroused considerable attention in international circles when it was published.

Professor Roy will discuss Canadian problems, and is expected afterwards to give several talks for the British Broadcasting Company in England.

The professor studied in Germany and was, in 1919, a member of the Inter-Allied Commission of Control in Silesia.

Sir Wilfred and Lady Grenfell, famous for their work in Labrador, are spending the winter in the United States on account of the ill-health of Lady Grenfell, and are staying on the Bryn Mawr campus. The Grenfells have conducted what amounts to almost a marriage bureau in the north, as a hundred persons who have gone there with them, have found spouses while there. Lady Grenfell is a Bryn Mawr graduate, and is said to be not averse to finding husbands for many more Bryn Mawrites.

"Most people who turn to crime do so not because they are essentially bad, but for the adventurous thrill which it offers," says Professor Joseph P. Smith of the University of Utah.

He maintains that since there are no new worlds to conquer in the literal sense, the only way to get a thrill which is socially acceptable is in the field of learning.

WEST END CAGERS TAKE TWO GAMES

Prove too Strong for Varsity Juniors and Intermediates in Triple Feature

SCORES 26-20, 28-15

The first two games of the Varsity-West End Y basketball triple-header at the Y on Saturday evening resulted in two wins for Y battlers. In the junior game West End staged a determined second period rally to overcome an early Varsity lead and grab the melon 26-20. The intermediate game caught the Blue team on their off night and they bowed to the Y quintet by the decisive margin of 28-15.

The first game saw the complete blow-up of the Varsity juniors in the second half after a very impressive beginning. The students led at half time by the comfortable margin of 14-6, and appeared well on the way to their first victory of the season. However, after the rest interval their attack lost most of its effectiveness and West End rolled up twenty points while all Varsity could muster was six. Adams was outstanding for the victors, scoring 11 points. Dawson for Varsity came one point short of this total to lead the Blue scorers. Roberts with four, and Molson and Mark with three each were other Varsity point getters.

The second game was fairly even with regards to territorial play but the Blue team were very weak around the basket, while the Y cagers had their attack clicking especially when Fox got his lunch hooks on the overgrown onion. This husky guard netted no less than nine points and was easily the best man on the floor. In the first half both teams played indifferent basketball, resulting in the low score of 9-3 for the ultimate victors. Dougherty scored the lone basket for the Blues. Play opened up in the second half but the students still got the worst of the scoring and could only get 15 points for a grand total. Dougherty, who led the Varsity attack, snuk two more baskets in this frame, while Peters also snuk two. Cooper, although scoring no baskets, played a very aggressive game at the left-guard position.

SENIOR CAGERS TRIM "Y"

ing them in from all angles and gave Phil Gold a busy night trying to keep him in check. However, despite this handicap the defense star found time to sink a basket in the first frame. Dempster was a standout on the student attack, netting the ball twice, as well as making many spectacular dashes up the floor. Lofty Willis, making his '36 debut, started for the Blue team at centre, and although a little lacking in "finis" played well and scored one basket during his brief sojourn on the floor.

Varsity staged a determined rally at the start of the second half and after a struggle pulled into a one-point lead. Dempster with five points and Connelly with three were prominent in the rally. Valentine of the Y team helped the Blue cause by tipping a wide foul shot into his own net. Credit for this basket went to Marks, who was trying to do that very thing but lost the jump to Valentine. Baskets by Neil Sullivan and Gold along with a single by Marks gave Varsity a ten point lead with but six minutes left to play. The Y quintet staged a desperate rally in an attempt to rattle down the lead. During the furious milling Butler and Neil Sullivan came to blows and both had to leave the game. The sting of the West End rally was lost when Pomer, the spearhead of their attack, was lost from the game due to four fouls, and they failed to catch the Blue team.

Hugh Marks played most of the game at centre for the Blues and garnered eight points, six of them on free throws. He ranked next to Dempster in the goal scoring honours. However Hugh spent most of his time handing the passes to his mates. Connelly, although erratic in his shooting, played brilliantly. Phil Gold, playing with a broken thumb, didn't appear to be handicapped particularly, and netted six points.

A radical departure is being made from past custom, inasmuch as the courts are being composed to synchronize with the music this year. In the past the music has been chosen to fit in with the program. Comedy, acrobatics and symphony are equally divided on the program. The diversity of the entertainment is well illustrated by the fact that two of the numbers in the orchestra's score are Liebestraum and Top Hat.

Every effort is being made to ensure the perfection of the mechanical details. A new electric amplification system is being installed to overcome difficulties in acoustics. The interior of the arena will be gaily decorated while Ross Workman is responsible for the novel designing of the ice surface.

modern juridical practice, especially as a plea for the defence. In this connection, the course, according to Dr. Kennedy, is expected to be very useful.

No parallel to the new course in criminology has ever been given at the University before. One important reason has been the difficulty of securing an instructor proficient in both law and medicine. In Dr. Gray, who now becomes a permanent member of the legal faculty, the department has secured a man who is peculiarly fitted for his task, since he is a graduate medical doctor, and a graduate lawyer. Dr. Gray will not give up his work at Queen's Park, but will become a permanent part-time lecturer to the junior and senior students in law.

in the Ninth Symphony. One also wishes that they would give us more of their tolerable Beethoven and less of their bad Wagner.

The Third Piano Concerto of Rachmaninoff is exactly the kind of work one would expect from Rachmaninoff. It affords opportunities for display of technique; it is introspective, melancholy and fiery by turns; and it is completely Russian in character. Almost the whole burden of it rests upon the pianist, the orchestra only appearing in full strength at the end of the last movement, nevertheless Nancy Reed, the soloist, had a hard time holding her own against the orchestra, which tended to drown her out even when accompanying her in the string sections alone. Miss Reed was at her best in the reflective mood; her technique is ill-suited to the long, exhaustive cadenzas. The exquisite clarity and delicacy of her performance at its best gave the impression that she would be excellent in Chopin or Debussy, but that at present she would do well to leave concerto work alone.

The second of Alberto Guerrero's pre-Beethoven recitals was devoted to sonatas by C. P. E. Bach, Haydn and Mozart. The succession of composers illustrated clearly the development of the sonata as a form and the evolution of keyboard instruments.

Two Bach sonatas, in A major and F major, were full of charm and freshness. It is easy to see why Carl Phillip Emmanuel Bach was far more renowned in his day than his father, the illustrious Johann Sebastian.

The E flat Haydn was rather too typical of this composer's ordinary output to be very thrilling. Haydn's prodigious outpouring of music was not conducive to even quality and his consistently great works are few. It is the creation of new means of expression and, in particular, the use of the piano-forte as something more than a percussion instrument that gives Haydn his place among the four or five great figures of German music.

His Sonata in E minor, which Mr. Guerrero played next is an example of delightful melody closely woven into a formal structure. More intellectual than much of Haydn's work, it is a sonata of rare excellence.

Mr. Guerrero's last number was the A minor Sonata of Mozart. Little more can be said than that it seems to sum up the achievements of piano composition before Beethoven. Guerrero is, without qualification, a complete master of this important division of music. His expression is unimpeachable. He avoids the romantic overloading that While we're up in the north-east territories we are reminded to pass on an odd little yarn that recently came our way (strangely late, but still timely) about the Christmas Dinner at Annesley. As per custom the girls invited certain of the faculty and their wives to join the festivities, which are done in fine style and full dress, and among the more celebrated head table guests was the Dean of Canadian Letters. We doubt if there was a printed menu, but perhaps there was for something requiring close attention caused the dignified gentleman to reach for his pince-nez. With a flourish he propped it in position, released his hold on it, only to have the spectacles go slithering off his nose and into the gravy.

Didn't bother him in the slightest, however. He merely drew them out of the gravy, dangling greasily by their black ribbon, then dunked them in his glass of water. Probably they needed a wash anyway.

1500 PAY TRIBUTE TO LATE KING AT CONVOCATION HALL

NEWS OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

Windsor: King George V was buried beside his father in the vaults beneath the chapel of historic Windsor Castle yesterday. The simple service was conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Five foreign kings, the President of France and a host of lesser notables joined with the members of the British royal family in a last tribute to his late majesty while 100,000 loyal subjects lined the route along which the funeral cortege was to pass.

Toronto: As a climax to the investigation of Toronto's Police Department Inspector Robert Anderson was arrested and charged with perjury and Inspector Hans Majury was suspended from the force.

New Orleans: Louisiana State politics were thrown into a furor yesterday when Governor Oscar Allen, the successor to Huey Long, died suddenly.

Joliet, Ill.: Richard Loeb, participant in the Loeb-Leopold thrill murder of Bobby Franks some years ago, was today found stabbed to death as a result of a prison fracas.

London: Ambulance brigades were kept busy due to casualties among the large crowds lining the route of King George's funeral procession. Seven thousand cases required treatment.

CURRELLEY PRAISES ANCIENT EGYPTIANS

More Versatile and Resourceful Than the Western Peoples

ONTARIO INDIANS BACKWARD

The versatility of the ancient Egyptians was compared with the lack of resourcefulness in western civilization of all time, by Dr. J. T. Currelley at the Museum on Monday evening. Describing our present civilization as stereotype, Dr. Currelley stated that too many men after a long period of unemployment content themselves with selling jubilee programs and hot eros buns.

"It is interesting to observe," he continued, "how ancient North American culture, petered out as it continued northward. The Spaniards who came to Mexico destroyed a civilization which far exceeded that of their own. The stone work of these Indians, although less accurate, he considered to be vastly more impressive than that of the Egyptians. Yet the Indians who settled in Ontario with the same amount of knowledge to their credit as the people of Egypt, at the time of their settlement evolved nothing.

When the Egyptians came to inhabit the Nile, they were already farmers whose tools were the pick, the hoe, and a crude type of saw with which they hacked out pathetic bits of boards. "About the pyramids," Dr. Currelley said, "there is nothing supernatural. They bring no prophecies and cast no spells. Built for the religious needs of the people, they are the product of a careful civilization, hard work and much ingenuity.

Sloppy Clearing Proves Fatal to Varsity Hopes in Last Period

By W. A. Crochower

The losing streak of the Varsity hockey squad in the O.H.A. race continued unbroken last Monday night as the Port Colborne Sailors barely eked out a 2-1 victory at Varsity Arena. For over forty minutes it looked as though Coach Bailey's charges were going to break the jinx that has been hounding them for two years, but two bad lapses by the Blues in clearing cost them a chance for victory. The lapses came in the final period when a win for the Blues seemed assured and the final score left the fans bitterly disappointed.

Just before the second period got under way tremendously impressive tribute was paid by all present to the memory of the late King George V. Both squads lined up on the ice and the Arena was flooded with a dazzling purple light. "The Last Post" was (Continued on Page 4)

The old platitude, "Dead Men Tell No Tales", is absolutely unfounded, according to Mr. Alex. Miller. Mr. Miller, in an address in Hart House on Monday afternoon, pointed out that the dead of past centuries have left us traces of their culture and that all we need is the understanding to interpret their story.

The first art developed when a man stayed home from conquest to experiment with a burnt stick on a gourd. More men came and they worked together until the first vase was made. Religion and ritual were the basis of their art.

BUCK PRACTISES DETECTIVE ROLE

U.C. Players' Guild Presents
Conan Doyle Story
Thursday

ELIOT PLAY MAIN FEATURE

"Elementary, my dear Watson, elementary," muttered Hart Buck, from behind a cloud of smoke from his curved pipe which hung low under his jaw. Hart was expounding his theory of the place of the detective story in the theatre and held that a play like "Sherlock Holmes", when properly presented, reaches the heights of real dramatic excitement and intensity.

Buck is playing the title role in the U.C. Players' Guild production of "Sherlock Holmes" to be held in the Women's Union on Thursday night. The main play of the evening will be Mr. Victor Lange's production of T. S. Eliot's "Sweeney Agonistes". The Guild production of Sherlock Holmes will follow.

Iris Gibson and Joan Renaud will have parts in the T. S. Eliot play which is described as a "fragment of Aristophanic melodrama". Mr. Lange himself will take the part of "Sweeney". Yesterday Hart Buck was found sitting deep in thought in a heavy armchair attired in a bathrobe and a pair of red leather slippers after the fashion of the noted Sherlock Holmes.

For several weeks he has practised the role and his curved pipe has been an added accessory ever since he was cast in the role.

"The play is written by Marg Howe and adapted from Conan Doyle's story 'The Mazarin Stone', one of the most exciting and thrilling of the short (Continued on Page 4)

Fakirs Find Fortune in Females Co-Eds Confess Crush on Cupreaders

Women are much more susceptible to the charms of fortune-tellers than men, was one of the facts discovered by The Varsity in its quest to find who kept fortune-tellers "in the money". Middle-aged women and professional men, especially doctors and bankers, are more interested in their future than their money, according to a local informant. From the same source it was learned that tea-cup reading was more or less frowned upon by these people, but astrology is the thing of the hour, and is really taken seriously.

As for students, they are more inclined to take all such practices as a joke. Male students on the whole would rather have their future in their own hands than in the hands of a fortune-teller. Co-eds, on the other hand, indulge, because, as one female exclaimed, "we are eternal optimists", and as another put it, "we would rather spend an afternoon in a tea-room with a fortune-teller than in a library without a future".

Phrenology, as far as could be ascertained, was not indulged in by students, but many thought that head-reading would be a good thing, especially for students.

As for numerology, two budding mathematicians admitted they had read books on the subject, but their enthusiasm had not gone further, their scientific training getting the better of their curiosity.

HALF-HOLIDAY SUGGESTED

High Hopes Held of Winning Co-operation of Faculty Members

In a survey of the Faculty of Dentistry, The Varsity yesterday learned that the students of that faculty are overwhelmingly in favour of a reduction in their working-week. While the Student Cabinet is expected to take a definite stand on the question of shorter hours, there has, so far, been no announcement to that effect.

"The Varsity is to be commended on the stand it is taking, it's really upholding student opinion in this matter," is the opinion of Tom Peterson, a third year student.

W. G. Bruce, president of the third year, greatly favouring a chance, said, "We need one afternoon a week for recreation, and what is more, we have no time for outside reading. When you work from 8.30 until 5.30 in the labs and then finish up your work at night, there's not much time left."

He stated at the same time that he personally thought the Faculty was doing (Continued on Page 4)

Personal Interviews Determine Actual Need of Each Applicant

Mr. E. A. Macdonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, in an interview with The Varsity, stressed the importance of loans to students. In order for a student to apply he must be in the last two years of his course. The money comes from some of the funds of the S.A.C. and there is absolutely no interest on the loans while the student is in college.

The applicants are individually interviewed in an effort to find out what students are really in need of money. Most of the students who come are working their way through college. At the present time nearly sixty students have been interviewed and each case is being specially studied this week. Mr. Macdonald hopes all of the students who need the money will be helped to (Continued on Page 4)

FACULTY TO SPEAK IN COMING DEBATE

Hart House Debate Will Discuss Professors in Politics

CONTROVERSIAL SUBJECT

A Hart House debate will definitely be held on Thursday, February 6, the debates committee decided in an emergency meeting yesterday.

All efforts to obtain a guest speaker from the Ontario cabinet failed and it has been arranged to make this a faculty debate at which several members of the staff will speak.

The motion will read "That this house regrets the intrusion of professors into politics," and Professor F. H. Underhill and Mr. A. F. W. Plumpton will definitely speak on the paper. Professor Underhill will oppose the motion and uphold the participation of professors. (Continued on Page 4)

VARSITY CHESS CLUB ENTER SECOND MATCH LEADERS BY TWO POINTS

By virtue of winning four games, drawing two, out of eight played on Monday evening, Varsity Chess Club will carry a two point lead into the second match of their series with the Toronto Chess Club on February 6. At top board, R. B. Hayes, University champion, played Donald Murray, 18 year old Winnipeg champion. This game, which ended in a draw, was unfortunately marred by a series of blunders at the very last. R. T. Burgess, a graduate, lost to K. Kerns in the last game completed. Prof. V. G. Smith had a narrow escape but managed to draw against W. A. J. Case. At board four, J. Hivillivitsky, a member of the Faculty, carried on an energetic king side attack against W. H. Despard, winning the most exciting game of the evening. C. F. Morrison notched another well earned point for the home forces, defeating M. L. Cole. At board six, A. D. McCumell, Varsity team captain, played a neat combination to force a win against S. D. Ballard. A. L. Rubinoff lost on an error to F. Blumberg. At last board A. P. G. Joy won from B. Smith in the first game completed. Varsity needs 3 1-2 points out of 8 in the second match in order to win the series.

FIRST TO KNOW EMPIRE

Late Monarch Called Symbol of Empire Unity and Sane Democracy

Nearly 1500 students and members of the staff of this university gathered at Convocation Hall yesterday to pay homage to the memory of the late sovereign in a memorial service.

There was little of the pomp which usually marks such ceremonies, as staff and students joined in mourning the university's noblest graduate, on whom the degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred in 1901. There were no draperies and no flowers, nothing symbolic of the occasion. But there was quiet dignity and reverence.

The address was delivered by the president, Dr. Cody. The passing of King George, he said, had left people with a sense of personal loss. By the marvellous invention of radio, he had been able to enter every home in all parts of the far-flung empire. His kind, simple, direct voice had been that of a friend.

"The words of his Christmas message still ring in our ears, when he addressed us not as subjects but as friends," the president continued.

Dr. Cody referred to his reign as one of service. "He has been among us as one who serves," he said. One basic thing about him was his training as a sailor. He had the sailor's mind all through his reign. And the president drew attention to the fact that during his formative years, when most young Englishmen were playing cricket, the young prince was visiting at the far ports of the world, and working as a midshipman. That experience, said Dr. Cody, brought him face to face with (Continued on Page 4)

RICHARD FINNIE SPEAKS ON FRENCH CANAOA

The industry and diligence of the Habitant were well illustrated by Mr. Richard Finnie, in his talk on "Wandering through French Canada" in Convocation Hall, Monday night. The lecture was illustrated by moving pictures showing weaving and rug-hooking, common occupations of the women in Quebec and other French centres.

A striking scene representing the birds which gather in flocks at Bonaventure, was one of Mr. Finnie's happiest recollections.

It was pointed out that "roughing it at the Log Chateau", which is a favourite expression of American visitors, means camping with all the luxuries of home, hot water and electricity included.

Ave Atque Vale!

With dignified simplicity the University of Toronto yesterday united with a sorrowing nation in offering a final tribute to the dead sovereign of the world's largest empire. When King George V was interred yesterday at Windsor the world mourned the loss of its most beloved monarch. He belonged to his people and was perhaps nearer to them than any sovereign has ever been before. But to the University of Toronto his death brought perhaps a keener sense of loss, because he was an honorary graduate of that University.

Today a new king reigns in the land. Edward VIII, in proclaiming his intention "to follow in my father's footsteps", caused a mourning nation to face the future with renewed courage and confidence. Such was the trust placed in the dead king by his subjects.

It is significant that the new king takes the reins of office weighed down with personal sorrow. The responsibility of such an office affords little hope for any respite from the burdens which must necessarily exclude many worldly pleasures. Statesmen and leaders may retire when wearied of the cares of state—but the king of England must carry on till death.

The new king is well equipped for his duties. But the problems which the world and the British Empire faces are today more acute than ever. Not until Edward VIII is dead will the world appreciate the true greatness of the present king of England.

Publicity vs. Secrecy

The story about the girls in a Bloor Street residence calling a police radio car when they heard someone attempting to force open a ground floor window, only to have the marauder revealed as one of their sister boarders locked out without a late leave, made its appearance in a morning newspaper some time ago much to the amusement of Toronto readers. Actually, it draws attention to an impossible situation which has been allowed to exist for the past three years or more, due to the good but mistaken intentions of college authorities and the disinterest of the local police.

The activities of sneak thieves and second story prowlers in the women's residences at this University have become so prevalent as to be a weekly and almost a nightly cause for alarm among out of town students. The evening before the last day of the fall term, a thief gained entrance to Annesley Hall while a special Christmas dinner was in progress downstairs, and systematically looted the girls' room upstairs of fifty-three dollars in cash. One night during the second week after college had resumed early this month, students passing between residences at the dinner hour spied a man crouching on the Annesley fire escape and summoned help. But the thief had made his getaway before a search could be started, this time taking with him twenty-six dollars of the students' personal funds. On an evening even more recently another call for police assistance was put in from the same residence, and the girls across the road in Wymilwood have petitioned the authorities for special police protection.

These facts have not before been publicly revealed, so far as is known, and certainly they have by no means been given publicity enough. Stories of residence robberies have occasionally appeared in The Varsity's news columns in the past, but it was always with the greatest difficulty that reporters were able to obtain their information due to the reticence of college officials. The city police, so went the inevitable explanation, had warned them against any publicity which might call to the attention of interested parties the ease and profit with which residences could be visited. No more ridiculous caution can be conceived. The policy of secrecy has thus for some time been followed, and it seems evident that every petty thief in Toronto by this time has the University filed in his card index as a happy hunting ground. The robber enters, does his job, departs; the police are summoned, have absolutely nothing to go on, and likewise depart. Then a little later the whole business is repeated. Meanwhile, in the absence of official announcement of the facts even to them, rumour carries to the girls in residence highly magnified versions of the thefts. An atmosphere of constant apprehension exists in nearly all the Victoria women's residences at the present time, particularly in the two already mentioned. For each actual thief encountered, a dozen more are imagined.

For a change let's turn the spotlight on a situation which, while in many ways a petty one, in its persistency is fast assuming real seriousness. Let it be known that the personal property of residence students is constantly in danger of being looted. Announce the fact that the peace of mind of these same students is being harassed in a manner which no householder would tolerate for a moment without registering indignant protests. If such conditions exist only at Victoria, let us discover why the residences of that college alone lend themselves readily to invasion. If they are more widespread, let us demand special police protection for all residences on the campus. Whatever measures of correction are required, let them be taken at once.

And then let us publicize far and wide that they who thieves may read—that the University area is an extremely unhealthy one for the practice of breaking and entering.

An Unfair Use Of Increased Fees

The custom of establishing bursaries in the University to aid the brilliant but needy student is one that nobody would condemn. Year by year, the idea grows stronger that a person of outstanding ability should be given an opportunity of utilizing that ability, regardless of his financial standing; conversely, it is urged that the student who is unfitted for the training should not be allowed to remain in the University. This last is recognized by the faculty, in not allowing a student to repeat a year more than once.

However, it is questionable if the cost of these bursaries should be borne by the undergraduates at large. It comes, in fact, as a distinct surprise to find that this has been done. We quote Mr. A. B. Fennell, Registrar of the University, to the effect that, "A sum was set aside out of the recent increase in fees to provide more bursaries."

Surely it is difficult to justify this course of action at such a time. The increase in fees has laid an almost insupportable burden on a large part of the student body, and many undergraduates have had to drop out, or else continue under the serious handicap of taking part-time jobs at low pay and with long hours.

It is indeed commendable to assist the needy student by means of bursaries, but it does not do to forget that a large percentage of University men and women undergraduates are in a precarious financial position. This action of the board of governors is tantamount to assessing one student the equivalent of a tax for the support of another. Such a procedure does not appear to be very fair to the students who bear the cost of the bursaries.

The Editor of The Varsity.

Dear Sir:

I wish to take issue with Mr. William Allen White whose article was reproduced in the "Hitler and Yon" column of Wednesday, January 22nd's Varsity.

Mr. White says in his article, in effect, "There is no use in working for what you know is best or in fighting evil and ignorance. The world will improve slowly and evenly no matter what individuals say or do. Just stick to business and don't give a damn about right and wrong. Everything will be all right eventually."

It is just this philosophy which has made the United States the most lawless and irresponsible country in the world today—unable to keep order at home or work for peace abroad. Most of her citizens do not care enough

The Warden's face was suddenly grim.

"Why did you fire that pistol?"

"I wish I knew."

The Warden of Sing Sing gazed thoughtfully at the newly admitted prisoner and nodded.

"It's what I expected."

He leaned back in his chair, musing, with eyes half closed.

"I wonder if you can find the answer in Sing Sing. I'd like to ask you that—twenty years from now."—Lewis Lawes—Cell 202 Sing Sing.

What is it that puts a man behind prison bars, and what happens to him after he has been put there?

Cell 202 Sing Sing by Lewis Lawes is a study in environment, and it is to the environment of the prisoner that the conscientious criminologist must go if he is to understand the real cause of criminality.

Four men carved their names and records on the stone wall of Cell 202 of Sing Sing prison. They entered the cell one after another, and the combined total of their sentences reached ninety years.

None of these men forgot their past. Moderately intelligent and educated men they were yet typical of their age and time. Each of them was driven to the final act of desperation by forces which were of their age but beyond their control to direct. One called himself a rebel, the others were cynic, skeptic and marionette.

What happened to them in Sing Sing? Many shifts of government they saw, many ups and downs of administration.

INTERFACULTY SWIMMING AND GYMNASTIC MEETS TO-NIGHT

GYMNASTIC MEET SLATED FOR TONIGHT

Tonight's Performance to Determine Choice for Inter-collegiate Team

TWENTY-FOUR ENTRIES

Tonight's interfaculty gymnastic meet in Hart House will have the largest entry of many years when a squad of twenty-four men will compete for the individual title and for the Wilson Cup. This latter award will go to the faculty team of three men who obtain the highest aggregate score.

Spirited competition is expected in all the exercises, which include high bar, side horse, parallel bars, and tumbling. The standard of work is reported to have reached a new peak this year under the instruction of Charles Zwygart, eminent gymnast and a recent addition to the physical training staff. An intercollegiate team will be chosen on the results of this meet to uphold the laurels gained last year. This team will then compete with McGill in Montreal next month for the college championship.

The meet tonight will be held in conjunction with the interfaculty swimming meet, while arrangements have been made for a dance following the evening's athletic entertainment.

THE SPORTSWOMAN

By E. S. W.

Will all hockey teams and their managers please notice the schedule which is appearing elsewhere in the paper? The first interfaculty games will be played this Thursday and Friday, and the Vic teams will be doing most of the playing. Molly Sclater has developed the Scarlet and Gold material into two good squads. Since Vic has two teams and the other colleges only one apiece, Vic has a pretty good chance of going through to the finals.

The St. Mike's girls have had only one practice so far. They have lost several of their last year's players, and Mary Gallagher, their best player, will probably take over centre position, instead of checking on the defence line, as she has in other years. Two freshies who promise to be good are Eileen Broadly and Mary Hutchinson. Hubert Turkey of S.P.S. is coaching the St. Michaelites, and the girls will make their first appearance Friday evening when they meet Vic Seniors.

The U.C. athletes are again being entertained at a social function. Molly Stevens, the swimming director, would like all girls in U.C. who are interested in swimming to get together at a tea in the Women's Union on Thursday afternoon at five-thirty. The college meet will be coming off shortly, and Molly would like to see a good turnout and plenty of enthusiasm.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By W. A. Crochower

After watching the Pt. Colborne-Varsity tilt up at the Arena on Monday night we have nothing but praise for Bailey's boys in Blue. Ross Workman also deserves a pat on the back for that most impressive tribute to the memory of the late King George V.

A few odds and ends—Ross certainly has the Arena decked out in grand style for the Granite Club carnival . . . inside of a minute Jeffrey missed a wide-open net . . . ditto Valiquette on a pretty solo . . . Charles thumbed off for tripping Upper. M-in-in this looks bad. Shipman pulling off some miraculous saves . . . McLelland to Ripley back to McL. just missed . . . sa-ay these Blues are skating tonight . . . Mayes was dumped by Jeffrey as the former tried to stop Jeff and how the crowd roared approval . . . gosh look at McLelland. He's burning up the ice! . . . Valiquette lifted the boot heel clean over the net with Cuthbert lying helplessly on his back. Tough, boy, go at it again . . . Horne getting the gate? Yeah! Come on Varsity-e-e . . . scramble after scramble and then Jeff scores! . . . Horne back again and Charles again sent off for dumping . . . Jeffrey, Driscoll, Valiquette and Lenahan guarding that lead carefully . . . Charles back on and the bell rings mercifully.

Second period . . . Workman's impressive tribute . . . Sailor White almost sank the Blue ship . . . gosh, but that was close! . . . Shipman now having a busy time but is playing like a veteran . . . Valiquette again came close on a pretty effort . . . Sailors becoming peeved? Upper stops to talk to Driscoll. Boo-oo . . . Charlie told him to go somewhere and Upper promptly went . . . Morrison thumbed off but Cuthbert is just too good . . . Ref. Hedges doing some fancy skating. Must be practicing for the Granites . . . Driscoll just got to Annett in time. Boy that was too close! . . . Horne swung his stick murderously but was away off the target . . . may be a fight here soon . . . fans warm up to a Rip-Rap-Ree as play becomes more robust . . . Hedges letting the game get out of hand . . . Forgie plastered Valiquette all over the boards but got no penalty . . . Hedges talks to Upper who was getting uppity with Sissons and both go off after a great deal of arguing . . . Ripley missed the easiest goal of the night on a pretty pass from Charles. How the fans Ah-h-hed!

Third (and disastrous) period . . . Oh, oh, Ports are going to turn on the pressure. Ganging continuously . . . McLelland still flying along the rails . . . Blues getting sloppy in clearing. Better tighten up out there . . . Reynolds tries a long one and White gets rid of Charles to beat Shipman cleanly. Ship had no chance on that rebound . . . there goes Runions in alone. Oh he just missed . . . Blue defence laying on the body now . . . crowd roars gleefully as MacQuham brings down both Sailor defencemen . . . Reynolds and White repeat on another rebound goal . . . good gosh! Come on you Blues! . . . Valiquette causes a pile up in front of Cuthbert . . . Varsity too tried to get going but are still trying . . . Charles dumped Forgie and for two minutes the rubber was sent at Shipman in dangerous fashion . . . Charles back again and Morrison going off. Come on Varsity . . . Blues too tired . . . two minutes to go and Ports again at full strength . . . 1 minute and McLelland gets under way but it stopped cold at centre . . . and the bell goes . . . what a tough one to lose!

Tonight the interfaculty swimming and gymnastic meets get under way and with dancing as the last item on the evening's program there should be many spectators on hand. These interfaculty meets are always good entertainment and in addition the students are able to get a line on the make-up of the intercollegiate swimming and gymnastic squads.

The swimming meet particularly, should be a very interesting one to watch as all the members of the victorious crew which took laurels at Buffalo and Rochester will be competing. Here we go off the deep end with the results. Trinity will take both of the relays. Victoria will be second in the free style relay and Trinity will have a second in the medley relay. Scott of U.C. will annex the 50-yard free style title with Earle, of Victoria, and Otter of S.P.S. right behind him. Earle is the choice for the 100 yard free with Scott and Otter chasing him in that order. To Cressy McCarty will go the backstroke title with Russ Dilworth making it close. The distance of the race is 150 yards and McCarty and Dilworth should give Trinity all the points in this field. Collins of Medicine will take a very close one from Jennings of Trinity in the 200 yard breast stroke. Win McCarty, O.C.E., will have it off in the 440 yard free with Bickle or Vipond half a length or so behind. Woods of S.P.S. looks like the diving champ but O.A.C. may show a dark horse here. Curly Stratton will be in the running for the diving crown. There they are boys—just check them tomorrow.

TRIPLE AQUATIC EVENT RESULTS IN TWO DRAWS

Trinity-Vic and Sr. Meds-U.C.
Games Tied—Junior Meds Defeat Dents

Monday afternoon in Hart House pool 3 good games of water polo were played, with two of them ending in a 2-2 tie.

The first tilt between Trinity and Victoria was the most exciting game seen this year. Vic led 2-0 at half time, but the Red and Black scored two in the last frame, the tying goal being made just as the whistle went to end the game, on a beautiful throw by Renwick.

The next game between Junior Meds and Dents, saw Meds come out on the long end of a 3-1 score after fourteen minutes of interesting play. Adams starred for Meds with 2 goals, while Brown got the other. Dents scored their only counter in the last period, with a nice score by Wildong.

In the last game U.C. and Senior Meds fought a hard two periods to a 2 all tie. This game was notable for its lack of effective combination, due, on the part of Meds, to a lack of substitutes. The tying goal for the doctors was scored with a bare 30 seconds to go, by Witus.

TRINITY NATATORS FAVoured TO WIN IN AQUATIC MEET

Victoria, S.P.S. and O.A.C.
Teams Expected to Force
Anglicans to the Limit

DANCING AFTERWARD

The best of the University of Toronto's swimming world will take off tonight in what will prove, according to all reports, to be the most thrilling interfaculty meet staged around these parts in many years.

Swimmers and divers have been training for many months in order to make their best showing on this occasion. Competition is going to be very keen as the fellows have been stepping off their respective distances in fast times whose differences can only be compared by fifths of seconds.

The Ontario Agricultural College are sending down their quota of swimmers; if their team is up to last year's standard (and it's rumoured that it will be even better) they will provide plenty of competition in every event—particularly the diving.

Trinity College are the favourites of the contest. The Anglicans are expected to run away with the backstroke, the diving and the breast-stroke. These ambitious takers-of-afternoon-tea have entered two teams in each relay and expect to clean up with each team.

There is quite a difference of opinion, however, as Victoria College, S.P.S. and O.A.C. are vigorously calling Trinity's bluff. Trinity, however, will miss Win McCarty, who this year constitutes the swimming team from O.C.E.

The closest finishes are expected in the 100 yard free style where Otter, Scott and Earle will battle it out—any one of these lads is on the verge of "breaking the minute". Quite possibly it will happen tonight. The other tight race will be the 200 yard breast, where Collins and Jennings will stage their usual duel.

The meet will be run off promptly and in quick order (some of the heats are being done this afternoon). Immediately after, at 8 o'clock, Lorne Finlayson will administer what is best in dance rhythm, and the throng of athletes and spectators will mingle in the Hart House gymnasium.

Wycliffe Ties with Forestry;
U.C. Pucksters Top
S.P.S. 2-0

Two more games in the interfaculty hockey schedule were played Monday afternoon up at the outdoor rink at the stadium. Forestry played a tie game with Wycliffe in the opener and U.C. defeated Jr. S.P.S. in the nightcap.

Wycliffe barely escaped defeat in the first game and were fortunate to get a score of 1-1. The game was poorly played with very little combination or passing attack shown by either team.

In the second game teams from U.C. and S.P.S. played a very fast game with the red and white team having a slight advantage over the School squad.

By virtue of their 2-0 victory, Caswell in goal for U.C. managed to keep his slate clean as far as goals scored against him is concerned.

Ringside Chatter

By J. L. T.

The B. W. & F. Club opens the season's campaign in Hart House next Saturday night when the Blue men of merit encounter grapplers and blade-fashers from the University of Buffalo and milt-tossers from O.A.C.

It's the first of a home-and-home affair for the wrestlers and fencers who will struggle in Buffalo a week from Saturday, but the Black and Brown coached boxers are not expected to return the visit of the Fighting Farmers. This will probably be the only assault in addition to the senior interfaculty to be held in Hart House this year as last year's exhibition matches with Syracuse, Cornell and Rochester will not be repeated, so if you want to see the boys in action, better not pass up this opportunity.

Four boxers are expected from Guelph to meet Johnnie Millson in the 118 lb. class, Freddie Smith, featherweight, Tom Powell, welter, and Jock Piggott, lightweight. The first three named above have all been intercollegiate champions at one time or another and with recent experience downtown should be able to overcome their agricultural opponents. Jock Piggott's bout, however, will attract the most atten-

DRAMATIC CLUB PRESENTS
GHEON'S "THE COMEOIAN"

This evening St. Joseph's College Dramatic Society will present "The Comedian", a new and impressive drama from the pen of Henri Gheon, with whose "Marriage of St. Francis" and "St. Bernard of Menton", Toronto audiences are already familiar. "The Comedian" deals with an episode in the reign of the Emperor Diocletian; the dialogue is well-sustained, the plot ingeniously worked out, and the St. Joseph's Dramatic Club executive are quite confident that the reputation of Henri Gheon will not suffer in their hands.

Another third year student, Gord Booth replied when asked about the editorial in Monday's paper, "It's absolutely true; we have fourteen finals in our third year here, and no time off from study. The Meds get one afternoon off each week and we want the same, or else Saturday morning."
Karl Mueller, in his fourth year, volunteered the opinion that a change in the system would be a "swell idea".
"Varsity's editorial may bring the situation to the notice of the proper people," said G. A. Cowan, a fourth year student. "The writer certainly has a good conception of the need."

things as they are.
He was the first king, he recalled, to know his Empire. Until the reign of King George no ruler had ever seen his Empire. To him it was a real kingdom.

He saw an enduring Empire not in an artificial, but a natural growth. He saw that true Imperialism was a spiritual sympathy rather than a material bond. He had sought to bring about a confederation of free peoples, to uphold the British tradition of constitutional government. While other kingdoms were tottering, he had strengthened the bonds of Empire.

The Crown, the president declared, represented continuity of national life which no dictator or president could hope to claim. It was the unifying element in the Empire and represented sane democracy and the headship of a family.

sounded as the lights gradually faded to leave the Arena almost in darkness. "Nearer my God to Thee" was then played, followed by "Reveille" as the lights gradually became brighter again. When the Arena was again lit up brilliantly "God Save the King" was played.

The first period started off at a very slow pace and ragged hockey was in order until Horne was thumped off. With the husky Sailor doing penance, Bailey sent five forwards out on the ice and it wasn't long before Phil Jeffery sent the puck through a mixture of sticks and bodies in front of Cuthbert to notch the Blues' lone counter. With a one-goal lead the Varsity squad played magnificently.

In the second period the Blues managed to hold their own although it was the miraculous work of Shipman which kept the Sailors off the score sheet. The Ports swept in in strong waves but the curly-haired Blue custodian turned them aside. The Sailors began to lose their heads during the period and a fight threatened at any moment. Referee Hedges let the game get out of control and it was only the coolness of the Varsity squad that prevented a general melee.

The terrific pace which the Blues had maintained for forty minutes now began to take its toll. Their clearing became slower and sloppier. Red Reynolds secured the puck near the blue line and rifled one at Shipman who closed his pads quickly. The rebound, however, went right to White and Shipman was helpless when the Sailor whizzed one by him. Four minutes later the same combination scored the winning goal for the Ports on a similar play.

The Blues put up a wonderful fight and the defeat was heartbreaking. The entire Varsity squad turned in a splendid performance and never gave up until the final bell. Shipman and McLelland were particularly good for Varsity. Reynolds, Arnott and Cuthbert were standouts for the victors.

Port Colborne: Goal, Cuthbert; defence, Horne and Morrison; centre, Rinnous; wings, Under and Arnott; subs, Mayes, Reynolds, Forgie, White. Varsity: Goal, Shipman; defence, Charles and Driscoll; centre, Jeffrey; wings, Lenahan and Valiquette; subs, Sissons, MacLoughan, McLelland and Ripley.

John Graham, president of the Guild, stated yesterday in answer to criticism, that cheap detective stories have no place in the theatre, that "a legendary figure such as Sherlock Holmes has become famed throughout the Empire and the world. Such a piece of literature should be preserved as an eclectic force binding the British peoples together. I thoroughly endorse the production of such a play at this University."

Twentieth century art is somewhat alarming, it seems to be a defiance of nature. It must be remembered that it is only beauty that counts and there is no room in man's brain for memories which are not beauty.

tation. A step forward followed by two steps back. One succumbed, died in the last day of his sentence, a broken man—he was the cynic. The rebel braved it and came through triumphant, the skeptic came forth a changed and redeemed character. Only one was unregenerate; the circumstances which had dogged him, had made him a marionette all his life were too strong for him. He died in the electric chair he himself had built, and provided joy for his enemy.

Now what is the moral of all this? Each of these men had rebelled against society, but society itself had pushed the good into them which made them rebel. Having crushed the rebellion society thrust them into outer darkness and went on its way. And so will society continue to do as long as it remains willfully blind to its responsibilities. FACULTY TO SPEAK fessors in the realm of politics. Mr. Plompre will speak against professors taking a part in the political life of the nation.

Two undergraduates will also speak on the paper with the professors. Mirvin Minsky, senior in law at University College, will speak with Mr. Plompre in upholding the motion. Wilfred Smith of University College will speak with Professor Underhill against the motion. Saul Rae will be speaker of the house and J. E. L. Graham the clerk.

Involving as it does the question of academic freedom, the debate promises to be the most controversial of the year. A large turnout of professors is anticipated and it is believed that many of them will speak from the floor. Undergraduates will be allowed to speak from the floor as in all other debates held in the House.

The debate following this one will be the election debate and the debates committee urged that students who are planning to run for election to the committee for next year are advised to speak at this debate a week from this coming Thursday.

CORRESPONDENCE

about peace, order and justice to support the few who are working for them. They say with Mr. White: "It will do the world no good to have your brains bashed out by a cop's gun butt", and with Cain, of Bible story, "Am I my brother's keeper?"
Mr. White would say that war (for example) is inevitable, fighting for peace is a dangerous and useless task and that peace will come eventually when it is time. He would see no sense in a Student Peace Movement. Yet in Britain a Student Peace Movement, working with allied movements in the country, forced the unscrupulous Sir Samuel Hoare from office and forced Britain to support the system of collective security.

Here is a case where a few students throughout the country united in the cause of peace and stimulated popular opinion against crooked diplomacy. Could not Canada be made a far greater force for peace than she is at present—by a few individuals?
Mr. White believes that no one can deflect the course of history. The abolitionists and Lincoln made their sacrifices in vain, Shakespeare's works would have been written anyway; Christ's influence on Christianity has been negligible. Mr. White does not believe that individuals are responsible to society. "Machines make progress." Mr. White's own country shows in a striking way the results of such beliefs. Were it not for a few of the reformers and idealists so despised by Mr. White, the great republic would be in utter chaos and under gangster rule.

We as Canadians and students have a task before us. It is our duty and privilege to work for peace and reform. In spite of Mr. White's fatalism it is true that we have the power to influence the whole current of history. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

I fear that if we follow Mr. White we shall lose our souls without gaining very much of the world.

CARR POINTS OUT CAUSES OF CRIME

Hints Communism Would Erase All Class Antagonisms

DO NOT WANT FORCE

That society is not static, and that mind is not superior to matter, are the two main points of the philosophy of Marx and Lenin, Sam Carr told the Marxist Group last night.

Since society is continually in motion, he said, it must not be studied in a static state. Prior to Marx, he continued, there was the great question of what makes the world go round, which many people tried to solve. The Marxists believe mind is not supreme over matter but that the environment reflects itself upon the mind of the person and so a person's mind is subject to change.

Motion is caused by friction in society. The working class are in constant friction with the bourgeoisie. If the friction between these two classes could be erased by communism there would be no essential antagonism, all the friction would become organism of nature.

If societies could organize so that slums and unemployment disappear, (Continued on Page 4)

U.C. PARLIAMENT

"That this House favours the continuance of Provincial Governments", will be the motion defended this afternoon by the Rt. Hon. Eric McCann, Prime Minister of the U.C. Parliamentary Club, as for his second week of office he faces the Opposition led by Jack Mirsky.

"The subject will no doubt interest many who would have attended the cancelled Hart House debate on Quebec nationalism," Mr. McCann stated. Mr. Mirsky opined that "there is too much government anyway in Canada."

A high official of the Parliamentary Club said: "Almost everything in Canada is too utterly provincial." He did not say whether he intended a capital P.

The Prime Minister, if the question is voted down, may be subjected to a vote of confidence.

Thievery In Girls' Residences Kept Secret By All Officials

Some Having Lost Property Favour More Police Protection

REPORTERS ARE REBUFFED

Residences Fear Publicity, Casts Reflections on Their Reputation

Seeking information regarding the lack of protection against petty thievery in the Victoria College women's residences, The Varsity was yesterday met by a solid wall of silence. Censorship by the officials of the residences appeared responsible for the reticence of the co-eds.

At Annesley Hall and Wymilwood reporters were met with open hostility. Officials and most co-eds refused to comment on the situation. Some residents, chiefly those whose property has been stolen, were in favour of additional police protection, but asked that their names be withheld.

Several expressed the opinion that The Varsity should not publicize the matter of thievery, while at the same time they wanted something done about it. They indicated that mention of their residence in newspapers had a tendency to "besmirch their fair name".

From the repeated rebuffs, it was apparent that officials believed it best to keep the matter of thieving a dark secret.

Thievery at Annesley seems to be an "inside job", according to reports. It is said that when there is a meeting of the Annesley Student Government Association, and all the girls are out of their rooms, purses are rifled and personal effects ransacked for valuables. The exact time of these meetings would be known by only a few persons.

SNYDER DECLARES POWER OF BURNS WAS INTELLECTUAL

Subject of First Alexander Lecture was Personality of Robt. Burns

UNITED TRUTH AND BEAUTY

Dean Franklin Snyder, dean of the Graduate School of Northwestern University and biographer of Robert Burns, who is giving the Alexander Lectures this year, delivered the first of the series in Hart House Theatre yesterday. Discussing "Burns' Personality", the speaker attempted as he put it "to subject Burns to the contemplative rays of a new interpretation, not merely to be content with a restatement of facts."

"Mr. Burns had an irresistible power of attraction", wrote one of his admirers at the time of his death. This charm has persisted through 140 years and we still feel the attraction of his vivid personality in his prose and verse. No list of the qualities of the poet's character however long could include the secret of the unknown quantity that made Burns Burns.

Disregarding the more spectacular elements in Burns' character Dean Snyder turned to a less obvious but extremely significant trait as the basis of his discussion, namely his intellectual power. This intellectual power he (Continued on Page 4)

Women in Russia Said to be Freer

Education Closely Linked to Utilitarian Objects—Dr. Strong

CAN STUDY ANYTHING

Women in Russia are now on an absolutely equal footing with men, according to Dr. Anna Louise Strong, speaking yesterday at a meeting of the Canadian League against War and Fascism. Dr. Strong spoke on "Women under the Soviet".

All positions and professions are open to Russian women, she said. They may choose their own work and perform it unhampered by any disadvantages attached to their sex. This equality, however, was not achieved without a long and arduous struggle; women, although legally equal with men, were not actually accepted as such, and it was only by means of education and determined effort that their equality became an accepted fact.

Dr. Strong discussed the system of education now in force. The normal course lasts for ten years, after which the student engages in some form of productive labour while deciding what (Continued on Page 4)

All About The Fashion Show

Toronto Merchant Tailors' Designers' Association and so on, advise the gay young blade to start the day off right by lounging awhile in a dressing gown of plaid about as diabolic in colour as his valet can stand. He himself must be colour-blind. Then he must change into riding tights for that brisk morning trot, he simply must. Gives one an appetite, don'tcha know, and a mania for buffet breakfasts, don't we know. Which all leads us to the "hunter's pink". Isn't it silly? We could have sworn that coat was red. And boys, here's another use for your top hat (if you have a top hat). Fred Astaire will have nothing on you. You will be able to sing "Top Hat, White Tie and Brass Buttons". That doesn't quite fit, but it's all in sport me hearties.

Then quite suddenly it happened. There it was. Were we in the wrong place? The sign above it read "Keeping himself fit". It should have read, "Keeping himself in the pink." It was ox-blood red, fella, but the ox was slightly anaemic. After all, there is a limit, and when it comes to crushed strawberry and champagne shades (and we've never drunk any that looked like that)—But fashion dictates.

Cocktail time gives you another opportunity to blossom forth and what could be more fitting than dubonnet. It's the latest thing girls, pardon the error, boys. Just too divine, don't you think so?

Shades of Sir Walter Raleigh and Dracula! The Opera Cape is among us again. Vurra vurra romantic. All they need now is some Opera. There was something missing though. In fact coloured evening clothes was very conspicuous by its absence, except for a touch of midnight blue, worn with suede shoes to match if you please.

After a day like that, you can go to sleep and have nightmares, beautifully coloured nightmares. We just bet those designers got their ideas from seeing pink elephants and decided it would be a good joke on the men. Have you got what it takes, boys?

Benefits Claimed For German Regime

Says Any Dictatorship Leads to Confusion and Strife

PRaises GERMAN YOUTH

"If Canadians knew more about philosophy, they would realize that the present trouble in the world is a struggle of philosophies, not of nations," says Professor T. R. Loudon, who will address the Engineering Society today on "Dictators of Europe".

Professor Loudon has travelled extensively in Europe over a period beginning before the war. "Any sort of dictatorship leads to confusion and strife," he says. He feels, however, that the German system has led to certain benefits; the Germans, and particularly the German youth, are working terribly hard for an ideal, and to get the young people enthusiastic is a great thing.
